The Kansas State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will meet in convention at the Free Methodist Church, Emporia, at 7 o'clock p. m., Dec. 19th, and continue in session until the 21st Secretary Stoddard and other active and able workers are expected to be present. The place is central and easy of access, and we urge the friends of reform from all parts of the State to be present. Important business will come before the Association. Come, brethren, 'to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty." JOS. ALTER, Sec'y.

Hon. Thurlow Weed.--Remniscences.

RELATION GIVEN TO THE WISCONSIN CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION. REPORTED BY VOTE OF THE BODY, FOR THE CYNOSURE BY SECRETARY STODDARD.

The press of this city announced last evening the death of Hon. Thurlow Weed. The announcement accompanied with a rather imperfect likeness of that great, and, I believe, Christian man, revived the memory of many interesting incidents and important facts which he related to me when at his house in September last. It has occurred to me that mention of a few among the many things related during three interviews, might escape the notice of those who will write biographical notices of Mr. Weed.

My first interview with him was at his house No. 12, 12th St. New York, July 24th, 1882. He received me cordially; and when I stated the object of my call he seemed to forget all else and entered at once into a detailed account of the abduction and murder of Captain William Morgan. I told him of the monument that was to be erected to Mr. Morgan at Batavia and asked him to be present and take part in the unveiling ceremonies on the 13th of September. He listened with interest and expressed his entire approval, and gave encouragement that if health would permit he would be present, and if unable to attend in person, he would, if possible, prepare and send to be read on the occasion, a statement of facts. Impaired eye-sight and ill health prevented his attendance, but he was able, by the aid of an amanuensis, to furnish one of the ablest, clearest and most conclusive solutions of the "Morgan mystery" given to the American public. It is a document that should be read by every citizen of our country. It has been issued by the National Christian Association, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, in pamphlet form accompanied with a cut of the Morgan monument and is sent to any address on receipt of five cents.

My next call was on September 23d, after the unveiling at Batavia, and on the day when that terrible storm was raging that swept the Atlantic seaboard. Mr. Weed's grand-daughter answered the door bell and, on learning my name, said "we have been expecting you;" and then led the way to the room where Mr. Weed was resting on an old-fashioned lounge. At the mention of my name, he arose and extending his hand, said, "I am glad to see you. I have been reading about your meeting at Batavia in the papers, and I want to know all about it." I gave him an account of the convention, and answered his questions, as well as I was able. He then proposed to affix his affidavit to that document read at the Convention, if I thought it would add weight to it with the people. I approved of the suggestion and at his request left the document for review, and his affidavit. To show the kindness of his heart, I will mention one little incident. When I was about to leave Mr. Weed accompanied me to the door and, hearing the rain which was falling profusely, he asked, "Have you a good umbrella?" I replied "No, but I do not mind the rain, I shall get along very well without one." He replied "you must take mine;" and, stretching out his hand to where three or four were standing in a case, he selected one with a silk cover and, drawing it out said, "Here take this; you can return it when convenient." I, of course accepted of his kind offer.

I called again on Monday the 25th, and found him cheerful and very ready to converse. He had carefully reviewed his paper to the Convention and wished me to leave it for additions, to which I assented. He then related in an easy, colloquial way many incidents of his life. His earliest recollections were in his father's "log cabin," when he used to climb up a ladder to his little bed in the "loft." He began his public life as a journalist and continued his connection with the press as editor and correspondent up to within a few days of his death. He entered the arena of politics from compulsion rather than choice.

When a journeyman printer in Rochester, N. Y., which at the time was only a village, there was great need for increased banking facilities. Two unsuccessful attempts, attended with heavy expense, had been made to obtain a charter. Mr. Weed was selected to make a third effort and, by careful management succeeded at a comparatively trifling expense. This success was his first introduction to the favorable notice of men of political influence; and, by making judicious use of the advantage gained, his influence increased until he attained a place in the counsels of statesmen, seldom, if ever, possessed by any other American citizen.

About this time (1826) occurred the abduction and murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. News reached Rochester from Batavia, only some thirty miles distant, of a meeting for inquiry and there was a general excitement among the citizens. Mr. Weed alluded to the report in a paper which he was then publishing, which so incensed the Masons that they withdrew their subscriptions in large numbers, and began hostile movements against him. Mr. Weed promptly resigned connection with the paper to save his partner from financial ruin, and looked elsewhere for employment. At Albany, Troy, and other points he found the "craft" had anticipated his applications, and managed to defeat his efforts. These things began to open his eyes, and to reveal to him the true character of the lodge. It was not until he had seen the lodges carry a muncipal election in Rochester over both the political parties, that he fully comprehended their power; and, even then, he strove with all his ability to keep the question of Anti-masonry out of State politics, and so preserve intact the Whig party to which he belonged.

The people, however, were aroused, and, despite the efforts of Seward, Granger, Weed and others, they took the question to the ballot-box and kept it there until they triumphed in the State politics of New York and several other States, and 228,000 votes were cast for Wirt and Ellmaker. Seward and Weed were firm friends, and Mr. Weed ardently desired Mr. Seward's election to the Presidency. In this desire almost the whole country concurred. Extensive preparations were made for Mr. Seward's nomination at the Chicago convention in 1860. Mr. Greeley was opposed to Seward's nomination, and secured the appointment of delegates in Vermont, who entertained the same views. In relating the history of that movement Mr. Weed remarked, "It is said Greeley packed the Vermont delegation through the lodges; but I never could believe that he would resort to such a measure. Yet it is said that every Vermont delegate was a Freemason, and the delegation went solid against Seward." Speaking of the Virginia delegates he said they were instructed for Seward, but in convention they disregarded their instructions. Afterwards two of those Virginia delegates explained to Mr. Weed the reason of their course in the convention by saying: "We were not aware, until we reached Chicago, that this was the Seward who had so much to do with the Anti-masonic excitement in western New York."

After Mr. Lincoln's election, he often summoned Mr. Weed for counsel at critical periods during the war and was largely influenced by his advice in making appointments. When our affairs with Great Britain were becoming complicated on account of the Mason-Slidell case and the Alabama difficulty, President Lincoln sent Mr. Weed on a mission of peace. With his daughter, he landed in Paris and there waited advices from Hon. Charles Francis Adams, then Minister at her Majesty's court. Receiving an invitation, he hastened to London and, after a conference with Mr. Adams, at length secured an interview with Lord John Russell, Prime Minister of England, at his country seat. The great rebellion, and especially the Alabama difficulty, was the theme of discussion. Lord Russell was unyielding in his demands that humiliating reparation should be made for the insult offered to the British flag. Earnest conference followed in which the whole case was canvassed and the wrong which our goverment had done was freely acknowledged. Lord Russell was stern, and the conversation closed with little prospect of an amicable settlement. Lady Russell had been a silent, but a deeply interested listener. She invited Mr. Weed to view the parks and grounds around their mansion and when about to dismiss him, said quietly, "Women are not supposed to know anything of politics, or to have any influence in affairs of state, but I thought it might be a comfort to you to know that you have one friend." Mr. Weed assured me that this was the first ray of hope that appeared in the case, and that it lifted a heavy load from his heart. He then gave a detailed account of how, through the influence of Lady Russell, aided by other ladies at court whom she enlisted with her, the document that had been prepared as the final demand of the British government on our own, was brought to the Queen's notice. After reading it the Queen exclaimed, "Oh I cannot think of a bloody war between our government and the United States!" She then took her pen, and with her own hand erased the most offensive features of the demand, and, then sent for Prince Albert to ask his advice. The Prince was too ill to leave his room. She then sent the revised paper to him. He made still further modifications which so changed the conditions imposed that our government could make the concession without compromising its own honor and self respect; England was kept from open alliance with the confederate States; and thus a double war, with Great Britain and the Rebellion, was averted at the most critical moment of our nation's existence, under God by the sagacious statesmanship of Mr. Weed, aided by Lady Russell and other ladies at court. Thousands of lives and millions of property were saved, and amicable relations maintained between the two dominant powers in the civilized world! Had Mr. Weed accomplished nothing more than this one victory, he would have deserved the deepest gratitude of every patriot and philanthropist on this globe, and merited a place among the most distinguished of the great men of earth.

After listening for hours to the recital of unwritten history in connection with the most important events in our civil history, I said, "Mr. Weed, how does it come that while you have been making other men Presidents, senators and governors, you have never been President yourself?" He replied, "I never wanted an office, and wouldn't have one. The the politicians knew; and they always confided in me, knowing that I would not betray or supplant them. The men who have the greatest influence in shaping national movements are not, as a rule, the men who come prominently before the people; but the men who study public affairs, and wisely but quietly control them." It will be acknowledged, I think, by all who knew Mr. Weed, that he practiced his own theory with great fidelity, and that this, with other great qualities, was the secret of his success.

My last visit to Mr. Weed was on the 28th of September. He had carefully revised his letter and made such additions as he wished; so that it is the thoroughly considered and carefully revised statement of his accurate recollections. He called in a notary and said, "I wish to make oath to this paper in the most direct and simple form." Mr. Doty then wrote the following form of oath:

Thurlow Weed, being duly sworn, says that the foregoing statements are true.

THURLOW WEED.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 28th day of September, 1882.

SPENCER C. DOTY, Notary Public,
17 Union Square, New York City.

to which Mr. Weed, while I looked on, affixed his signature, with his own trembling hand.

—A mural tablet has been erected in the 1st church of New Haven reading as follows:

BY THE GRACE OF GOD
LEONARD BACON.

A servant of Jesus Christ and of all men for his sake, here preached the gospel for fifty-seven years. Fearing God and having no fear beside, loving righteousness and hating iniquity, friend of liberty and law, helper of Christian missions, teacher of teachers, promoter of every good work. He blessed the city and the Nation by ceaseless labors and a holy life, and departed peacefully into rest December 24th, 1881, leaving the world better for having lived in it.

HOME CIRCLE.

A Worker's Prayer.

Dismiss me not Thy service, Lord,
But train me for Thy will;
For even I, in fields so broad,
Some duties may fulfill,
And I will ask for no reward
Except to serve Thee still.

How many serve, how many more
May to the service come;
To tend the vines, the grapes to store,
Thou dost appoint for some;
Thou hast Thy young men at the war,
Thy little ones at home.

All works are good, and each is best
As most it pleases Thee;
Each worker pleases when the rest
He serves in charity;
And neither man nor work unblest
Will thou permit to be.

Our Master all the work hath done
He asks of us to-day;
Sharing His service, every one
Share, too, His sonship may.
Lord, I would serve and be a son;
Dismiss me not I pray.

At the Prison Gate.

"Passing the State's prison in Wethersfield on foot, one morning, thirty years ago," said an old gentleman recently, one of the prison commissioners of the State of Connecticut. "I saw the gate open, a man come out, and the gate close again The man looked pale, and worn, and sad. He stood by the gate in the broad May sunshine in a perplexed and undecided way, and I noticed that the tears were streaming down his cheeks. He looked up and down the road, up at the sky, and then stood with bowed head.

"'Where, now, my friend?' I asked cheerfully.

"'I don't know, good sir,' replied the man, sadly.

"'I am walking to Hartford; take passage with me,' I said.

"'You won't care to be seen in such company,' he replied, looking at me incredulously. 'Perhaps you don't understand that I have just worked out a sentence in the State's prison here.'

"'I understand,' I said. 'We are all wayfarers; come along and we will talk the matter over, and decide as we go what can be done for you.'

"It was a lovely, warm day. We walked slowly and talked a good deal, or rather my companion talked, and I encouraged him to do so. He answered my questions frankly, clutching hungrily at my ready sympathy.

"I found that he had made shoes in the prison. 'I never had a trade before,' he said. 'I think if I had, I would not have fallen into errors. Had I had a legitimate way of getting a living, I would not have been tempted as I was. I have a good trade to begin on now, however. I have brought that away with me, as well as a bitter memory and a lasting disgrace.'

"'It is not the fact of your being in prison, but the crime that carried you there, wherein lies the sin,' I said.

"'But those who are not found out escape the disgrace,' he replied bitterly, with a deep sigh; and I hastened to say:

"'I think I know a man here in the city who will hire you. He is a large shoe manufacturer, and I am sure he will make a place for you as a favor to me, even if he does not really need a man.'

"The more I thought about it, the more confident I felt that my friend would take him into his manufactory.

"'If I was in your place,' I said, as we entered the city, "I would not lisp a word about having been in prison.'

"The poor fellow stopped short and looked at me. The hopeful look dropped out of his face, his eyes filled with tears, and he said, in a broken voice:

"'You have been very kind, but I had better bid you good-bye, sir. I cannot live and lie. I promised my God last night, in my cell that was so dark at first, but so light at last, when Jesus came to me there, that I would be true whatever befell me, and I will keep my word.'

"'Forgive me for tempting you at the outset,' I said; 'Come on.'

"I saw my friend, and told him the whole story. He had a little talk with my man, and made a bargain with him. That night, just at the hour for the shop to close, we three went into the work room.

"'Here is a poor fellow who was discharged this morning from the Connecticut State's prison,' said the proprietor. 'I am going to give him a start in life by taking him into the shop; he will begin work to-morrow.'

"There were indignant glances among the men, and one spoke up hastily:

"'I shall leave if he stays. I will not work with a jail-bird.'

"'Very well,' said the employer, 'any one who wishes to leave can bring in a bill of his time in the morning.'

"Only one man, the man who had constituted himself spokesman, left.

"Ten years later, that discharged convict was the owner of that manufactory, and the man who would not work with a 'jail-bird' was one of the journeymen. As I said, to begin with, that was thirty years ago. That man whom I met at the prison door is now a Senator in the Legislature of one of the largest New England States. He said to me this day:

"'I tremble when I think what the result might have been had an evil instead of a good friend met me outside the prison door.'"—Annie A. Preston in Advocate and Guardian.

Week Day Sermons.

BY MISS E. E. FLAGG.

We hear a great deal about the laws of etiquette. There are treatises on the subject easily procured and about as helpful as a complete letter writer with its forms of every kind of epistolary communication, from the schoolboy's first effort to fashionable billet-doux; from letters of love or friendship to the dryest business note. Run your eye down the column of questions and answers in any society paper, and see how some poor souls are exercised over "things to no profit,"—anxiously inquiring whether this or that style of introduction, this or that mode of serving a dish or helping a guest is in strict accordance with polite usage. And not a hundred years ago a great religious paper whose name is a household word opened its columns to discuss that particular breach of etiquette which consists in eating with the knife! Now whether or no the subject was one suited to the dignity of a great denominational organ may be fairly questioned, but there is no questioning the fact that so long as we live on the world the laws of good society,—those written and unwritten principles of good breeding that govern social intercourse—must have their due weight. Human nature so prone to extremes is apt to magnify them into overshadowing importance, or belittle them as things of no consequence. And as the former mistake is the more common of the two, this brief article is written with the hope that some young Christian brother or sister who feels sorely his or her ignorance on many nice points of social etiquette may be helped thereby.

Paul exhorts us "to be without carefulness." Why? Because our one supreme object of anxious thought and desire should be,—and again I quote St. Paul, for what grander expounder of Christian duty save the great teacher himself walked on earth?—"that I may win Christ and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith; that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death." When an ambition so grand, far reaching, all-embracing possesses the soul of man or woman, what room for anxious fear lest they offend some of the thousand and one rules laid down by social etiquette? What place for "carefulness" over the fashion of this world that passeth away?"

"But you have just said these things have their importance;" puts in this same Christian brother or sister. "Do uncouth ways or awkward manners honor Christ? Verily not, beloved. "Charity doth not behave herself unseemly."

"Then do you know where I could procure some book of plain simple rules to guide me in these matters?"

I was once sitting by the side of a dear old mother in Israel whose eyes are blind to the glories of this world while the eyes of her understanding have grown piercing as the eagles; and in the course of our conversation the subject came up.

"It used to give me a great deal of anxiety when I was young," she said, smiling; "so much that I sent and bought me a work on etiquette—a real nice one, but everything in it of importance to regard I found my own dear mother had taught me. And now I believe that the Lord will guide and instruct his children even in such a thing as this. The three Christian graces are all the teachers of etiquette they need. One who is a pupil in their school will be careful of everybody's feelings; will not obtrude his own personal affairs in general conversation; will always prefer others before himself, and act in short like a true gentleman."

"But these non-essentials—these minor points of etiquette, what is to be done with them?" I inquired.

"My dear, when these Christian graces—and the greatest of these is love, remember—set up their school in any heart, such things can be safely left to take care of themselves. Some are not worth minding, others are to be regarded because they have their roots in the great foundation principles that underlie all good breeding, but a Christian keenly alive to the honor of his Master will soon learn to distinguish between the gold and the dross. The three Christian graces do not teach without a text-book,—and that text-book you do not need to be told is the Bible."

I know she was right. I know that God's grand word of truth partakes of his own greatness. He who numbers the hairs of our head and notes the fall of the sparrow, while he guides the course of empires, and the far higher concerns of that spiritual realm of which we know nothing, has made it just what it is;—with counsel for the smallest perplexities of human life as well as balm for its most crushing sorrows;—a book whose one great purpose is to teach the way of salvation, not literature, or science, or jurisprudence, yet this same book has moulded literature till our noblest fiction and our grandest poetry are full of its inspiration. It has taught in dim allegory secrets that the eternal rocks are slowly giving up to the curious gaze of the scientist, and more and more is the pendulum of human law beginning to vibrate in accordance with those divine principles of justice laid down in its pages.

Dear Christian readers, "henceforth let no man trouble you." Study in the school of the Christian graces. Let love be your chief teacher, and the Bible your only book of etiquette.

Moral Decay in the Family is the invariable prelude to public corruption. It is a false distinction which we make between public integrity and private honor. The man whom you cannot admit into your family, whose morals are corrupt, can not be a pure statesman. Whoever studies history will be profoundly convinced that a nation stands or falls with the sanctity of its domestic ties. Rome mixed with Greece and learned her morals. The Goth was at her gates; but she fell not until she was corrupted and tainted at the heart. The domestic corruption preceded the political. When there was no longer purity on her hearth-stones, nor integrity in her Senate, then and not till then, her death-knell was rung.—Robertson.

—Do not wade far out into the dangerous sea of this world's comfort. Take the good that God provides for you, but say of it, "It passeth away, for indeed it is but a temporary need." Never suffer your goods to become your god.—Spurgeon.

LESSONS FOR THE DAY.

Song of Thanksgiving.

When all Thy mercies, O my God,
My rising soul surveys,
Transported with the view, I'm lost
In wonder, love, and praise.

O how shall words with equal warmth
The gratitude declare,
That glows within my ravish'd heart!
But thou canst read it there.

To all my weak complaints and cries
Thy mercy lent an ear.
Ere yet my feeble thoughts had learnt
To form themselves in prayer.

Unnumbered comforts on my soul
Thy tender care bestowed,
Before my infant heart conceived
From whence these comforts flowed.

Through hidden dangers, toils, and death,
It gently clear'd my way;
And through the pleasing snares of vice,
More to be feared than they.

Ten thousand, thousand precious gifts
My daily thanks employ;
Nor is the least a cheerful heart
That tastes those gifts with joy.

Through every period of my life
Thy goodness I'll pursue;
And after death, in distant worlds,
That glorious theme renew.

Through all eternity to Thee
A joyful song I'll raise;
But O! eternity's too short
To utter all Thy praise!

—Addison.

For What to Give Thanks.

REV. J. H. BROOKES.

I. For God's goodness. O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever. 1 Chron. xvi, 34; Ps. cvii, 1; cxviii, 1.

II. For his holiness. Sing unto the Lord, O ye saints of his, and give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness. Ps. xxx, 4; xcvii, 12; cxl, 13.

III. For revealing himself. Unto thee, O God, do we give thanks, unto thee do we give thanks; for that thy name is near, thy wonderous works declare. Ps. lxxv, 1; cxxxviii, 2; 1. Thess. ii, 13.

IV. For the gift of his Son. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift, 2 Cor. ix, 15. For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. John iii, 16; Rom. vi, 23.

V. For a present salvation. Giving thanks unto the father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light; who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son. Col. i, 12, 13; John vi, 47.

VI. For victory. The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. 1 Cor. xv, 56,57; Rom. vii, 25.

VII. For everything. In everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you. 1 Thess. v, 18. Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known to God. Phil. iv, 6; Eph. v, 20.—Selected.

A True Incident.

A farmer who had recently listened to an exposition from the text found in Isaiah, "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider," was giving food to his stock, when one of his oxen, evidently grateful for his care, fell to licking his bare arm. Instantly with this simple incident the Holy Spirit flashed conviction on the farmer's mind. He burst into tears, and exclaimed, "It is all true. How wonderful is God's Word! This poor dumb brute is really more grateful to me than I am to God, and yet I am in debt to him for everything. What a sinner I am!"

The lesson had found its way to his heart, and wrought there effectually to lead him to Christ.—Am. Messenger.

Mrs. Oldham's Thanksgiving Dream.

Thanksgiving was over. That is, the sermon had been preached, the dinner eaten, and the guests were gone. Mrs. Oldham had drawn the curtains and was musing alone in her handsome parlor which a few minutes before resounded with wit and song and glittered in the rich attire of the assembled guests.

"I will write to him this very night," she said. Drawing her writing desk toward the fire she commenced a letter, but had only written the date when she dropped her pen and reclined on a lounge near by. Resting upon this she seemed struggling to gather her thoughts on a subject in hand. A few minutes passed when the maid opened the door saying;

"Madame, a gentleman wishes to see you."

Scarcely comprehending the message, she replied absently:

"Show him into this room."

The door opened instantly, and a well dressed but seedy-looking man, with a sorrowful, careworn countenance entered, and, without invitation, drew a chair to the grate and seated himself there.

Mrs. Oldham arose quickly, and after the first tremor at seeing a stranger thus bold and familiar, felt all fear pass, and in its stead a real pity for a forlorn man.

"My friend," she said, "your face is familiar, but I cannot recall the place or time of my acquaintance with you. I—"

"I presume not," he said with a smile, "but that is no matter of importance. I have known people to forget their own kindred."

"Tell me this, my friend," she continued, "have we met before? Do you know me?"

"Yes, indeed. We were children together. I knew you very well. I am glad to see you surrounded with so much comfort."

"Children together! Well, then I can guess your name," Mrs. Oldham said, "for my childhood acquaintances were few. I am to have the pleasure of greeting an old time friend. You are none other than Paul Thornton."

"Quite wrong."

"Impossible! Then you are Will, his brother."

"Wrong again."

"Can it be that you are Jonathan Jarvis?"

"Far from it. Jonathan has been dead these many years, poor boy!"

There is only one left. You are Richard Turnip!" Confident of having guessed right this time, Mrs. Oldham arose and extended her hand to greet her visitor.

"Not yet," he said, with a sigh. "There is another childhood playmate whom you have not mentioned."

While he thus spoke the visitor drew still closer to the grate and stretched his thin, pale hands into the flame, and rubbed them together as if chilled through. Mrs. Oldham rang the bell and the maid appeared, to whom she gave a whispered order. The maid soon returned with a tray, loaded with fragments, gathered from the remains of the dinner, and an urn full of smoking coffee, the aroma of which soon filled the room.

"That is for you," Mrs. Oldham said. "You look cold and hungry."

Without a word he took the tray upon his knee, drank the coffee slowly and with evident relish, and then with great deliberation filled his pockets with the edibles.

"These things," said he, "I will take to my wife and babies."

Mrs. Oldham interposed no objection, but said inquiringly:

"Then you have a wife and babies?"

"Indeed I have! Such a wife; so sweet, so gentle, so generous, so patient, and such babies! Perfect copies of their mother."

Saying this, he drew near to where Mrs. Oldham sat and continued:

"That's why I am hear to-night—that wife and those babies. They did not send me, nor do they know I am here, but for their sake I am here. You know my wife?"

"Perhaps I do. But how can I tell, when I do not recall your name?"

"Oh, yes; sure enough; but I forgot. But then I know you know her. My wife sings, and so do you. Let us sing some of those old songs we sung years ago."

So saying he led the way into the parlor, lighted the gas, saying? "We have no gas in our house. Our home is in a log cabin." He opened the piano and said, "We have no piano now."

Mrs. Oldham took the place at the piano, and the visitor selected the music from the huge lot on the stand. She struck the chords and he commenced to sing. She tried to follow, but in vain, nor did she play. He sang on and on. He sang boyish glees, anthems, songs, hymns, chants and roundos. His voice was cracked, as though he had been long exposed to cold and hunger. When he had done, she motioned him into the room where the fire was.

"No," said he, "this is good enough for me. This is warmer than my house when we have a fire. The wind whistles through the chinks, and through the floor, and around the windows and the door, and nothing is warm but our hearts."

"Come, my friend, let us go to the fire," said Mrs. Oldham, beginning to fear she had a madman for her visitor. At the thought her heart sank within her, but she seemed powerless to call for help. Her husband had left on the late afternoon train on a business trip. Her daughter was away at school, and the maid had retired for the night

When they came again by the fire the visitor resumed his mild and grateful air.

"Ruth," said he, and added, seeing her look of surprise, "that is what I called you years ago; Ruth, I propose that you and your family change places with me and my family, but not without a sufficient consideration to atone for the difference in the value of our property and the desirableness of our location—socially and otherwise."

"Sir," said Mrs. Oldham, "you may be all you claim for yourself, an old-time friend and all that, but I cannot suffer you to longer intrude upon my time and premises," and arising she attempted to ring the bell, but was prevented by her visitor coming before her and saying

"I am sory to intrude upon your time, but as to the premises, when the trade is made, you will be the intruder, not I. In the meantime have no fears. I am not mad. I will do you no harm."

Remembering that all crazy people claim to be sane, and that the best way to deal with them is to humor their whims, she seated herself again and endeavored to listen and talk carelessly as before.

"Do you believe the Bible?" said he.

"I do, most sincerely."

"Then you endorse the sentiment that it is more blessed to give than receive?"

"I do, but—but—then, you see—"

"Yes, I see. You want to be charitable and let others have that blessing. Do you approve the doctrine. 'Owe no man anything but to love one another?'."

"With all my soul."

"Are you in debt?"

"Thank Providence, I am not. I make it a rule to pay as I go."

"Is this house yours? See this furniture, the piano, the organ, this jewelry, are they yours?"

"They are all mine. My husband gave them to me. He has been very successful of late, and—"

"Was he always wealthy?"

"No, when we were married he was quite poor."

"Where did he get his capital?"

"My brother let him have it."

"Was your brother wealthy?"

"Oh, no; not to speak of. He was well to do, and had unlimited credit, so he borrowed money and mortgaged his place to help us."

"Well, go on. I am much interested."

"The hard times came on, my husband failed—that is, he took the benefit of the bankrupt law, but he is on his feet again."

"Did he settle with your brother?"

"Why, certainly. My brother was settled with just like all the creditors. The bankrupt law did that, and then, you know he was a brother. We well knew he never would complain."

"Did your brother lose his property?"

"Oh, yes; he might have saved it like we did ours, but he wouldn't cheat any one out of a cent."

"Have you more than one brother?"

"Only one living. The others died long ago."

"Now, Ruth, I propose that you and I exchange property. I know what yours is, and I can soon tell you about mine. I own a log cabin in the woods, twelve miles from the railroad and thirty miles from the market. The winters are long and summers short there, and our neighbors are few and far away. Of course your place is better than mine, but see what I give you beside. I give you the privilege of experiencing a blessing above all you have ever possessed. You have been receiving all your days, now you can have the blessedness of giving; while your brother has been reaping the fruit of giving all his days and it is only fair he should divide with you. Beside this, you will have the comfort of knowing you owe no man anything, for I will pay all your debts out of your property here."

Mrs. Oldham smiled at the eccentricity of her visitor, but deigned no reply.

After waiting some time for a reply, he said:

"Do you consent?"

"Most certainly," she answered, seeking to further gratify the whim.

"Very well. That's all. I am here to take possession. Here is the agreement. Sign."

He produced a huge document and spread it out before her on the table where her writing materials lay. More out of curiosity than anything else she arose and glanced over the paper. Color fled from her face and she exclaimed:

"Mr. Oldham has already signed it!. Where did you see him?"

"I met him at the depot. Only a few words were necessary with him. I had unanswerable arguments."

"Then is all lost?"

"Not by any means. All is saved. The owner gets possession. The wrong is righted. Ruth, have you forgotten your own kindred?"

Mrs. Oldham was aroused by the familiar voice, and, lifting her eyes, she saw her brother before her, and the next instant opened her eyes, as it from a dream, to find herself nervously clutching the back of the lounge and trembling in every muscle. The fire had burned low, but it was not late. The clock in the steeple hard by was tolling the hour of nine. Mrs. Oldham arose, replenished the fire, and again seated herself at the writing desk to finish the letter commenced earlier in the evening. She wrote two words, steadily and slowly:

"Dear Brother:"

Over these she lingered, and again and again her eyes filled with tears as she recalled the many acts of kindness of her only brother, and recalled the fact that her pleasant surroundings were due to his self-denial, and that night she wept bitterly to know she had only repaid him by upbraidings, and anon by words, empty words of thanks. She dried her tears and wrote a line of common-place introduction when she was interrupted by a loud ring at the door. The maid answered and brought in a message. In haste the envelope was opened and Mrs. Oldham read:

"Your brother died after a short but painful illness, yesterday. His last words were 'Tell Ruth the wrong is righted. I enter my mansion above.'"

She did not faint. She did not cry aloud. She was speechless. She lives as before, but Thanksgiving day has ceased to be a joyful occasion in that house. It has come to be a day of fasting and prayer. Perhaps it is well the change has occurred. There are many homes where these things ought to be laid to heart.—Western Christian Advocate.

—Our lodge friends say they have only enough of secrecy to prevent imposition. Yet the Masonic Register admits that there are a thousand men ("Masonic excrements") who live by swindling the brotherhood by using its socalled secret signs. Evidently secrecy helps instead of hindering imposition.

REFORM NEWS.

The Iowa Convention.

SUBJOINED REPORT FROM THE SECRETARY.

COLLEGE SPRINGS, Nov. 21st, 1882.

The former report closed soon after the close of the annual meeting of the State Association, held at Winterset, Aug. 22d, was perhaps noted as containing the excellent quality of brevity. But it was not the intention of the Secretary that it should be considered an exponent of the excellent meeting to which it referred in this particular. Neither was it purposed that those who denied themselves the privilege (by staying at home) of enjoying the convention, and listening to the soul-inspiring words of such men as its president, Rev. C. D. Trumbull, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Rev. T. P. Robb, or the logical address of Rev. R. C. Wylie, or the wisdom and counsels of Dr. Mc Caughn, and many others there met together, should hear nothing more of the councils and measures agreed upon affecting the work of reform in our State. There was a disposition manifest in the deliberations of the convention to be intensely practical, as the tenor of some of the resolutions noted in this report will show. Now, friends of the reform in Iowa, your attention and consideration, please. What shall it profit to meet in annual convention and pass strong resolutions setting forth the urgent demands of its work in the State, and during the interval make no effort to practically carry out their spirit and demands? This has been too much the case with us in former years; and the feeling of the convention was no longer to formulate dead creeds, but to become living epistles of our faith. Shall the acts of the convention as set forth in the resolutions noted, be approved not by mere assent of the mind, but by practical endorsement of the friends of reform in the State. (See James 2: 14-16.)

The following is part of the report of the commitee on resolutions:

WHEREAS, Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and all orders of like character are in their spirit and tendency hostile to free government and to Christian religion; therefore, Resolved,

1. That all Christian churches should refuse to receive as members those who worship in the secret lodges, those lodges which are heathenizing our people, and so far as their influence extends, destroying the Christian religion.

2. That it is the duty of all good citizens to aid in keeping out of official stations men who are under secret obligation to stand by, aid and assist their fellow members in cases where they have violated the laws of the land; and, although as a Christian Association we may not take action on this subject directly, yet we will as citizens use all lawful means to shut out from the jury box, the judge's bench, and executive station all men who have assumed and still regard the obligation of these associations.

3. That the great need of the hour is that the people of our country should become thoroughly informed regarding the anti-Christian, un-republican, demoralizing character of secret societies, and that, to meet this want, there should be a wide and careful distribution of tracts, books, and papers bearing on this subject, and especially that all sympathizers with the cause should seek to increase the circulation of the Christian Cynosure as much as possible.

4. That those who understand the character of the lodge system should not patronize with money or pupils those schools, academies and colleges which favor secret associations or are silent respecting their evil deeds and dangerous tendencies.

5. That we commend to all friends of our cause the Christian Cynosure, the American Freeman, and all other religious or secular papers which publish the facts on the lodge question and advise that they discontinue such papers as do not furnish to the public information on this subject.

6. That we are rejoiced at the publication of the book entitled "In the Coils," and hope for it a wide circulation.

Again note carefully the following:

Feeling the importance and necessity of pushing forward our reform work during the interval of our annual gatherings; therefore

RESOLVED, That we adopt such measures as will put a lecturer in the field; also that the Association will, as far as possible, arrange for the support of such lecturer.

This resolution was referred to a special committee who reported as follows:

1. That the Association employ a lecturer for the work of the year.

2. That Rev. D. P. Rathbun be so employed.

3. That a committee of three of whom the treasurer shall be chairman, shall be appointed, whose duty it shall be to look after the remuneration of Bro. Rathbun for said work.

This report was adopted and the committee thus constituted: J. A. Laird, John Dorcas and R. E. Adams.

Now it is expected that the friends of the Association will approve this action: first, by arranging for the labors of the lecturer; second by helping the committee by donations, etc.

The lecturer is already in the field working and wanting work. Will you respond; or, after all the arrangements thus perfected, allow it to fail by your negligence? We expect your co-operation, and hence this report,—not to inform what was done in convention only, but to advise you of what we expect you to do.

Dear brethren, resolutions on paper will never put down the gigantic organized evil of Freemasonry. Shall there then not be a grand rally of the friends of the work, letting the light of God and truth upon the darkened places of our State? Your response is the measure of our success.

A. W. HALL,
Rec. Sec'y.

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

Nominations for 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
of Illinois.

For Vice-President.
JOHN A. CONANT.
of Connecticut.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—Dockery, the Freemason Grand Master of Missouri, has been hoisted into Congress by his "brethren."

—Winnebago, McLean, La Salle, Kankakee, Marion and Madison led the Prohibition vote in Illinois, casting in each over 400 ballots.

—Caine, the Mormon candidate for Congressional delegate from Utah, has been given the certificate of election. The Mormon vote was 23,036, the Gentile 4,884.

—The Republican ticket of New Hampshire headed by Hale for Governor and Haynes for Congress, Freemasons, was adorned by a five pointed star, surrounded by a halo of light. What will those good friends now think who have claimed that Masonry does not interfere in politics?

Political Reports.

M. V. Clute, Aurora, Ill.:—"I think there were not more than two American tickets cast in Aurora. There would have been quite a number had there been previous action in regard to the matter."

L. Griggs, Cherry Valley, Ill.:—We got some three or four American party votes in. I never saw so many kinds of tickets at one election. All split up—seven or eight different kinds."

J. Van Halteren, Holland, Mich.:—"In Holland City there were twenty-three American tickets voted. In Holland township six votes. In Grand Haven, also, six American tickets voted."

W. H. Layton reports three votes for his locality, Blackmore, Iowa. He writes: "Tickets must have been very scarce. We must try to have our tickets on time after this. This is a serious drawback to our reform movement. We should vote as we pray if we expect success."

Mary Pinkney, Forest City, Ill., reports two American party votes.

O. Breed, Avery, Jo Daveiss county, Ill., writes that five and perhaps more American votes were cast at his place,and he will try to have more put into the box next time.

Orin Sholes reports two American votes at Morrison. Ill.

Geo Brokaw, Washington, Iowa, reports sixteen of the American tickets voted in his township.

H. F. Buffham, Batavia, Mich.: "There were three American party votes in Batavia and eight in Bethel in this county, and how many in other towns I do not know. I thank God for the privilege of voting the American ticket after working for it at the election."

—A prominent minister of New York entered the place of registry and the following conversation took place: "Well, Doctor, you've come once more to enjoy the inestimable privilege?" "No," said the Doctor, quietly, "I do not regard the ballot as a privilege I would not vote if I could help it Nor do I claim it as a right. I have no more right to the ballot than to the Presidency. It is a duty imposed by my country, and I shall come to its discharge as I go to my pulpit, and shall pray to be guided in my voting as in my preaching." There was silence.

The Indiana American.

Elder I. W. Lowman of Auburn, Ind., who was chosen editor of the political paper for that State by the Carthage convention, wishes to make a beginning of the enterprise and proposes to issue a sample copy January 1st. To meet the expenses which he does not feel called upon to bear alone, he asks the friends in Indiana to send him contributions immediately for this purpose. If more than is needed is sent the balance will help for the second number. Send also subscriptions at 25cts a year each, with the understanding that if the paper is not continued the money shall be handed to Benj. Ulsh, State treasurer, for State work. Send for papers to canvass for clubs stating the number needed. Be in earnest, friends, and let Indiana be as well represented in this respect as her sister States. Adress I. W. Lowman, Auburn, Ind.

More Lodgery in Politics.

From La Salle county, Ill., we have received a copy of the following letter, which was being freely displayed in Anti-masonic precincts just before election. The letter is written by a prominent gentleman of Ottawa, who would not be likely to commit to paper a story that had no foundation in fact, and is addressed to Hon. Daniel Evans, Democratic candidate, we believe, for the State Legislature. It reads:

DEAR SIR:—There is a strong Masonic movement here in the interest of McDonald and the Knights Templar all over the county are expected to take it up and bring all of the Masons into line for him. I wish to put you on your guard against it so you will have ample time to defeat the movement. Use your best endeavors and I think it can be counteracted in a measure.

Yours truly.

The letter was accompanied by a slip from the Twin City News of Peru, Ill., of Dec. 31, 1881, containing a notice of a Knight Templar ball at which McDonald was a prominent performer. We have not learned whether this Knight Templar of light foot and mean spirit, who would debase an order, which the lodge is ever fond of praising for its nobility of character, was elected or not. If so, the good people of LaSalle county may remember that the man who used his Masonry to get him into office will not scruple to use the same dark and unlawful agency while administering his office.

Abraham Lincoln on Civil Service Reform.

Mr. Shuman, editor of the Evening Journal of Chicago has written a letter to the Nation reporting the views of Mr. Lincoln on civil service reform as given to a circle of political friends in the old Tremont House in 1857. Mr. Shuman writes:

"Mr. Lincoln was very emphatic in his expression of disgust with what is now known as the 'spoils system' in politics. I do not recollect his exact words, but his sentiments I well remember. A political party, he said, that cannot maintain itself by virtue of the righteousness and popularity of its principles, and, when in official power, by earning and retaining the respect and confidence of the people, ought to find no permanent place in American politics. Out of power, and seeking power, it is a vagabond, and when in power a usurper and a tyrant. The system of rewards and punishments in party politics, as instituted by Andrew Jackson, and perpetuated by succeeding national administrations he reprobated. A government, he thought, should be as prudent and discreet in its methods of business as a well-managed private manufacturing establishment, or a mercantile house, the managing heads of which seek trusty and efficient superintendents, agents and clerks, and having been fortunate enough to secure such, do not dismiss them without good cause; and when, by death or sale, a great business house changes proprietors and managers, the new administration is generally glad to retain, and deems it necessary to retain, all the experienced and faithful employes of the concern as long as they continue to fulfil their respective trusts. In private business, employers do not ask applicants for employment what their religion is, to which political party they belong, whom they voted for at the last election, or whom they are in favor of for the next President, Governor, or Sheriff; but seek to know whether or not the applicant is practically qualified for the work that he will be required to perform."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

—Bro. Tapley of Columbus, Miss., acknowledges the receipt of $5 from A. Laird and $2.50 from Mrs. A. Paley.

—According to Chamber's Journal, the ecclesiastical staff of Queen Victoria's household is a very large one. It consists of the Dean and Sub-Dean of the Chapel Royal, St James's; the Clerk of the Closet, three Deputy Clerks, a resident Chaplain, a Closet-keeper, forty-eight Chaplains in Ordinary, and ten priests in Ordinary, besides four chaplains, three preachers and three readers for the chapels at Whitehall Hall, Hampton, Windsor, and Kensington. There is also a choir of boys who wear gorgeously embroidered coats, four organists, two composers, a violinist, a Sergeant of the vestry, and a Master of the Boys.

—Last week we noted the remarkable case of the healing of Richard Huffman of Washington, Pa., by prayer to God. On Wednesday last a dispatch from the same place tells of other remarkable healing. Miss Emma Rogers, an estimable lady, 22 years of age, who resides on a farm a few miles from town, has been for two years afflicted in a like manner to Huffman, with a spinal affection. During the time stated she has been unable to be out of bed, or even to raise her head from the pillow. A year since she was taken to Philadelphia, where she was seen by prominent physicians of that city, but failed to obtain any relief. Richard Huffman had been acquainted with the family, and several weeks ago stated to Miss Rogers that he was certain that through the power of prayer God would yet restore them both to health and strength. Miss Rogers has been quite devout for some time, praying very much, and others have also prayed for her. Yesterday she got up from her bed, and when her father came home he found his daughter sitting in a chair perfectly recovered. The physician who was attending her is as much astonished in her case as was the doctor who had made a careful examination of Huffman and pronounced him incurable. This second case of faith-cure in the county within ten days has set the people to wondering if indeed miracles are not now being performed as in the time of Christ."

FAITH HEALING.—A sister living in Knight, Oregon, Mrs. Emma Wa kins, writes of a strange but blessed experience of the infinite mercy of God. Her little daughter, aged three years, was afflicted with spasms. "Judge of a mother's feelings," she writes, "when she sees her darling thus afflicted. But I had faith in God that he would cure her if I only asked: and he has done so. She has not had a spasm for three or four months, while before she was attacked once or oftener each week." She hopes this record may encourage others to trust fully in God for help and for salvation.

—We regret to learn that Mr. Moody has been compelled to interrupt his evangelistic work in England, because of a sudden break down in health, and he is now lying at Cambridge, suffering from nervous prostration. To those who know the enormous strain upon him when engaged in revival work, and the amount of mental and physical exertion with which he is accustomed to tax himself, the only wonder is that he has never before shown signs of injury to his system. The manner in which he has so far been sustained has seemed almost supernatural. That he may be raised to renewed vigor, and again sustained in a career of continued usefulness, should be the prayer of every Christian in America and throughout the world. —Witness.

—The Lord has given the Illinois Annual Conference something better to do than persecuting holiness people.

Some of our readers may remember that in Urbana, Ill., a minister took it upon himself to crush out the holiness work in his church. He gathered his artillery one Sabbath morning in the shape of a huge pile of books and authorities and in the most violent manner delivered his soul for the space of nearly an hour and a half, and ended by calling a meeting of the board of Trustees to consider the question of denying the holiness meeting the use of the church, and suggested other steps to kill out the hateful heresy.

He did not meet the Trustees. He stood before God immediately at the close of the discourse. In other words he descended from the pulpit and dropped dead.—Layman's Christian Advocate.

COLUMBUS, Miss., Nov. 15, 1882.

Bro. Smith, Maryville, Mo.:

I read with intense interest your article in the last Cynosure relative to the calling together of a convention "for the outpouring of the Holy Ghost and the salvation of sinners," and, as I suppose, the discussion of the subject how we may "remain firm in God's mode or order in saving a lost world as well as to follow our leader in his own blessed way of reclaiming a fallen and divided church." I am persuaded that your ideas of the way in which God's people should walk in order that they may all feel that they are one in Christ Jesus would be entirely new to many whole churches. There is great need of plain Scriptural knowledge upon this subject. We have some earnest Gospel preaching and more that may be said to be good, but comes as cold as the north wind, and in many churches we have presented visions and dreams and strange traditions instead of the true Word. O for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and that Jesus who is "the light of the world" would send into our midst those who are filled with this Spirit to teach the way of holiness, and to rouse the slumbering churches to a sense of their high calling and privilege! If the one hundred and twenty mentioned in your article can be found who wish to meet in that convention in Lowndes county, Mississippi, in the near approaching winter, will the committee make the appointment and meet with us here, and how many of like spirit will they bring with them? May the Lord direct all whose hearts are in this work in his own right way.

MRS. E. TAPLEY.

—Our friend John Thompson of Sabetha, Kansas, wrote of the visit of Bro. Feemster to that place. The main facts of the meeting held there have been printed, but beside these Bro. Thompson adds a warm commendation of the speaker as a worker well qualified for the field.

TEMPERANCE.

One of our old friends writes: "Do the colleges and literary institutions supported by the A. M. A. prohibit the use of tobacco, as well as of intoxicating liquors, among their students, as Oberlin does?" We are happy to inform him and all other friends that this is the rule in all of our schools, and that they would be delighted to observe the freedom of all our school-buildings from the pollution of tobacco. It is a fine element in the formation of character, as well as a matter of health and economy.—American Missionary.

One of the signs of progress in Philadelphia is the forbidding cigar-smoking on the cars of one of the prominent lines of street railway. Some of the smoke-inclined passengers moan over this as an infringement of their personal liberty. They even go so far as to say that their wives and mothers won't let them smoke at home, and their employers and customers won't allow it in their places of business; and now they are shut off from being a nuisance on the street-cars. That does have a look of hardship; but civilization is an expensive luxury. There is no securing it without some voluntary self-denial, and some enforced constraint of the individual for the public good. —S. S. Times.

At the annual conference of the Anti-Tobacco Society, held at Manchester, Eng., the following resolution was passed: "That as careful investigation has shown that teetotalars who smoke are five times more liable to fall away than those who do not, this meeting would earnestly appeal to Blue Ribbon, Band of Hope, and all other temperance organizations who pledge their followers to discountenance the causes and practices of intemperance, to offer them an additional safeguard of a pledge against tobacco.

An engineer employed on some of the public works at Szegedin, Hungary, bought four cigars one day not long ago, and began to smoke. He had finished one and laid another, half-smoked, upon his writing-table, when suddenly it exploded, throwing him from his chair and wounding his cheek, ears, lips, and left hand. Investigation showed that the cigar had contained a glass tbue filled with nitro-glycerine. The fact that tobacco is a monopoly, manufactured and sold only by dealers licensed by the Government, makes the mystery deeper. If the officer's cigar had been in his mouth when it exploded he would doubtless have been killed—a circumstance which does not add to the pleasure of smoking in Szegedin.

STARTING A YOUNG MAN.—It is related of a wealthy Philadelphian who has been dead these many years that a young man came to him one day and asked for help to start in business.

"Do you drink?" inquired the millionaire.

"Occasionally"

"Stop it! stop it for a year, and then come and see me."

The young man broke off the habit at once, and at the end of a year again presented himself.

"Do you smoke?" asked the great man.

"Yes, now and then."

"Stop it! stop it for a year, and then come and see me."

The young man went away and cut loose from the habit, and after worrying through another twelve months once more faced the philanthropist.

"Do you chew?"

"Yes."

"Stop it! stop it for a year, and then come and see me."

But the young man never called again. When some one asked him why he didn't make one more effort he replied:

"Didn't I know what he was driving at? He'd have told me that as I had stopped chewing, drinking, and smoking, I must have saved enough money to start myself."—Wall Street News.

DESTROYED THROUGH TOBACCO.—An agent of an insurance company says: "One half our losses come from the spark of the pipe and the cigar." One young man threw away his cigar in one of the cities, and with it he threw away three millions of dollars' worth of property of others blazed up from that spark. Harper's splendid printing establishment years ago was destroyed by a plumber, who, having lighted his pipe, threw the match away and it fell into a pot of camphene. The whole building was in flames. Five blocks went down. Two thousand employees thrown out of work, and more than a million of dollars' worth of property destroyed. But I am speaking of higher values to day. Better destroy a whole city of stores than destroy one man. O my young friends! if you will excuse the idiom, I will say, Stop before you begin. Here is a serfdom which has a shackle that it is almost impossible to break. Gigantic intellects that could overcome every other bad habit have been flung of this and kept down. —Talmage.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich , and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, dne guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the anthor for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry 15 cents each; per dozen $1 25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. Each of these able writers in clear, forcible language treats the subject in one or more of its varied phases. Rev. David McDill in six chapters treats of 1. "Their Antiquity; 2 Their Secrecy; 3. "Oaths and Promises;" 4. "Profaneness" 5. "Their Exclusiveness;" 6. "False Claims." Prest. Blanchard handles the topic: "Shall Christians join Secret Societies?" in a masterly way, showing clearly that they are all opposed to the genius of Christianity; and Dr. Beecher closes with his Report on Secret Societies, which was adopted by the Congregational Association of Illinois at Ottawa in 1866. In cloth, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.25. Paper cover, 15 cents; per dozen, $1.25

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Blanchard, Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., Rev. Woodruff Post, Rev. Henry Cogswell, Prof. C. A. Blanchard and Rev. W. E. Coquilette; also Report of the Political Mass Convention, with Platform and Candidates for the Presidential Campaign of 1876. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Anti-Mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 31 Cynosure tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies; and the dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized secrecy are shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public. Those who wish to circulate anti-Masonic Tracts ought to have the book to select from. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen. 75 cents.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

EZRA A. COOK,

No. 7 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

In the Coils; or the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historial sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of every-day life, and showing how individual, domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. Parents who wish, not only to keep their children out of these night-schools of Satan, but to give them arguments against them in the most attractive dress, will do well to purchase this book. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Stearns' Review of Two Masonic Addresses. In this scathing review the lying pretensions of the order are clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Letters on Masonry. Showing the antagonism between Freemasonry and the Christian religion. Paper cover, 30 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen, $7.50

Freemasonry and the M. E. Church. Let every lover of truth and justice read this report of the trial of Rev. J. T. Michael, showing how he was driven out of the M. E. Church for opposing Masonry and loving Methodism. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate, and afterward in pamphlet form. The Evangelical Repository, reviewing it, says: "This pamphlet consists of a series of articles originally published in the Church Advocate, Lancaster, Pa. Elder M. S. Newcomer opposes secret societies, and especially Freemasonry and Elder G. W. Wilson defends the system. We are free to say that Mr. Newcomer has thoroughly routed his opponent at every point. Mr. Wilson speaks by the book, as he is a Royal Arch Mason." 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder; by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The President on Saturday dismissed Capt. Henry Marshal of the District, the postmaster of Washington and his assistant, Spencer, Union Pacific R. R commissioner, and the foreman of the Record, for obstructing the administration of justice in the Star-route trials.

—The President has accepted the resignation of Judge Folger. Secretary of the Treasury, to take effect Dec. 15th, —The funeral of Thurlow Weed occurred at his late residence in New York Friday morning, with services later on at the church, where a brief address was delivered by the Rev. Dr. John Hall. There was a large attendance of persons of note from various parts of the State. The remains were taken by boat to Albany for interment.

—In the heavy wind-storm which prevailed Thursday afternoon and Friday morning on Lakes Huron and Michigan—a storm nearly equalling in fury the memorable gale of Oct. 16, 1880, when the Alpena was lost with all on board—there were many wrecks of vessels, but so far as now known but one life was lost.

—A fierce railroad war during the last week between the Milwaukee, St. Paul and the Rock Island roads has reduced fares to competing points in Iowa from Chicago to 50 cents and in Minnesota to $1.

—A new Police superintendent in Chicago is beginning to break up the gambling dens and arrest lewd women by the score found on the street at night.

—Snow fell to the depth of several inches in Georgia and Northern Michigan early last week. On Saturday night the first fall of the season occurred in Chicago.

—The Pennsylvania Railroad Company taking advantage of the recent drop in the values of iron and steel, has just given orders for the construction of sixty-five locomotives and 6,000 cars.

—A terrible affair took place at Providence, R I., wherein three women met their death and nineteen other persons were fearfully injured by jumping from the windows of the fourth story of a burning building.

—The Committee on Alcoholic-Liquor Traffic finished its work by reporting in favor of the appointment of a commission on that subject; and the bill remains in the House without action, the attempt to pass it under a suspension of the rules having failed.

—The awful midnight murder of the Joyce family in Connemara, Ireland, on the 17th of last August, will be punished in a manner scarcely less thrilling than the crime itself. Three of the leaders of the band of assassins have had their trial at Dublin, and have received the sentence of death, and last week four accomplices pleaded guilty and threw themselves on the mercy of the Crown. They, too, were sentenced to die on the scaffold Dec. 15.

—The railway bridge at Bromley, near London, fell Friday morning. Seven workmen beneath the structure eating breakfast were killed and several others injured.

—Chili has preferred a claim of $20,000,000 damages against the United States of Columbia. This claim is for allowing arms and military stores of various kinds to pass across the isthmus from the United States to Peru and Bolivia during the late war with Chili. Chili now threatens to seize the Isthmus of Panama in satisfaction of the claim.

This Fund is designed to aid in getting subscribers from among those who do not take the Cynosure, and who may be induced to read it by paying themselves $1.00 per year. The Fund pays 50 cents, making up the club rate. It will now aid 302 new subscribers to get the paper for $1.00.

PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.

Wm. N. Lovell sends $15.00 with a claim for a copy of "Holden with Cords" and ten subscriptions for a year each for the Cynosure.

H. S Limbocker, Manhatten, Kan., sends $15.00 and writes:—"I have decided after reflection and prayer to send $15 00 for the extension of the Christian Cynosure whether the one hundred is made up or not. I shall probably have to pay most of it myself, but I regard the reform work in which we are engaged the most effective mission work that is being done. I feel deeply anxious for the extended circulation of the Cynosure with its glorious beaming light. Light is what the dark dens of secrecy need. I expect to finish my earthly race soon and I wish to leave my testimony against the Christless religion of secrecy.

J. W. Suidter:—"I expect to finish my farm work this week and then start out and finish up my club."

H. Avery sends four renewals for a year each and writes: "We are still alive out here. Such proofs of vitality are welcome and convincing.

Geo. Brokaw sends six subscriptions for a year each.

J. Donaldson sends three for a year and one for three months.

L. R. Holbrook, three for a year each, R. A. Cullor, two for a year and two for three months each.

C. C. Foote, ten for a year each.

H. H. Hinman, four for a year each.

S. A. Pratt and E. D. Bailey each have paid the $15.00 on the October 12th proposition.

Fifty-four new subscriptions were received last week.

Next week the number of subscribers on the mail list will be reported.

MASONIC BOOKS

FOR SALE BY

EZRA A. COOK,

7 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

Books sent post-paid on receipt of retail price, but books by mail are at risk of person ordering, unless 10 cents extra is sent to pay for registering them, when their safe delivery is guaranteed. Books at retail ordered by express are sold at 10 per cent. discount and delivery guaranteed, but not express paid. Postage stamps taken for small sums.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicographer, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority because they tell too much.

General Ahiman Rezon and Freemasons' Guide. By Daniel Sickels, 33d degree. The most perfect Masonic monitor published in the United States. Embellished with many engravings and containing monitorial instructions in the degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Masons, with explanatory lectures, the ceremonies of consecration and dedication of new lodges, installation of officers, laying foundation stones, dedication of Masonic halls, burial services, Masonic calendar, ritual for a Lodge of Sorrow, Masonic trials, etc. Bound in fine cloth, extra large 12mo, $2.00.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the entire ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Scores of Masons have privately admitted that this is a standard text-book in the lodge and is strictly correct; but publicly it is not acknowledged as authority, though many officers of the lodge make use of it. Price, in cloth, $2.50.

Female Masonry. Manual of the Order of the Eastern Star. Containing the ritual, symbols, lectures, etc., of the five degrees of "Adoptive Masonry," Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, profusely illustrated and handsomely bound. Price, $1.50.

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. A practical guide to the ceremonies in the degrees conferred in Masonic Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated edition. In cloth, $1.25; in paper, 75 cents.

Although this Monitor is extensively used by the lodge, especially in conferring the higher degrees, it is publicly called an exposition, and not allowed as authority.

Sickels' Freemasons' Monitor. Containing the degrees of Freemasonry embraced in the Lodge, Chapter, Council and Commandery, embellished with nearly 300 symbolic illustrations, together with tactics and drill of Masonic Knighthood. Also forms of Masonic documents, notes, songs, Masonic dates, installations, etc. By D. Sickels; 32mo. In tuck, $1.50; cloth, $1.00.

Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry. Containing a Definition of Terms, Notes on its History, Traditions and Antiquities, and an Account of all the Rites and Mysteries of the Ancient World. 12 mo., 526 pages, $3.00.

Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, or Monitorial Instructions in the Degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Mason, with Ceremonies relating to installations, dedications, consecrations, laying of corner-stones, etc. Price, $2.00.

Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, or Monitorial Instruction Book. By Albert G. Mackey, Past General High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of the United States, Knight of the Eagle and Pelican, Prince of Mercy, etc. Price, cloth, $1.25; tuck, $1.75.

Mackey's Text-Book of Masonic Jurisprudence. Illustrating the laws of Freemasonry, both written and unwritten. This is the great law book of Freemasonry. 570 pages. Price, $2.50.

Allyn's Ritual of Masonry. Illustrated by a large number of engravings, and containing a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, Orange and Odd-fellows' Societies Price, $5.00.

The winter canvass has fairly opened. Strike while the iron is hot! "Ten thousand subscribers and Washington" is the watchword.

TOPICS OF THE TIME.

The remains of Thurlow Weed were taken to Albany on Saturday, the 25th ult., after the brief religious services in New York. Lying in St. Peter's church they were viewed by thousands, before the brief and final service before burial, during which the church was crowded to its utmost. The entire staff of the Albany Evening Journal, the paper founded by Mr. Weed as an organ for the Anti-masonic party of fifty years ago, were present, and with them 200 employees of the printing house established in connection with the paper by his only son James, who died in 1851. Minute guns were fired as the funeral cortege passed to the Rural Cemetery where all that is mortal of this great man rests at last.

Governor St. John is visiting Chicago, and was announced to speak at Grace Methodist church on Sabbath evening. The notice having been made without consultation, he spoke but briefly to the crowded house by way of warning to young men. Chicago, he said, contained a population about one half as great as the State of Kansas; and while its laws protected and fostered churches and schools, they also protected about 4,000 saloons, where the devil preached every day in the week to the disadvantage of the churches. The laws sustaining these places were, he said, the result of politicians carrying a groggery on one shoulder and a Sabbath school on the other. He had little respect for the sentiment which seems to sustain such a law. To the young men he said that instead of thinking of the saloons they should think of God, and rely on the counsels of their parents as the best means, under God, of avoiding the crime of intemperance. Later in the month Gov. St. John expects to make several addresses in the city and in the State on temperance.

Congress met on Monday at 11 A. M. and listened to the President's message, which is this year shorter than usual. It reviews briefly the whole round of our foreign relations, lingering a little upon the Chili case and the defunct peace congress of American Republics. Revenue reduction is recommended by abolition of all taxes except upon distilled spirits. Last year the President recommended the same reduction, excepting tobacco and distilled and fermented liquors. So far as the question has been discussed among Congressmen they wish everything excepted but these three nuisances. The message favors the two cent postage rate and opposes postal telegraphy which Postmaster-General Howe recommends; it also asks for a new bankrupt law, and President Arthur takes almost his only opportunity in an official way to hit back at ex-Secretary Blaine for his foreign policy and vigorous defense of the same since the death of Garfield.

The quiet of Sabbath hours was horribly broken in Chicago this week by the hunting down and killing of a colored desperado. On Wednesday night three officers went to arrest him. The first one was shot dead as he opened the door, and his companions, terrified and cowardly, let the man escape. His whereabouts being discovered by the police on Sunday afternoon, another officer was shot and seriously wounded. The force was then called out, a hundred or more strong, and a rabble of several thousand joined in the hunt among freight cars and coal yards along the Northwestern railway tracks. Every man who had a revolver held it ready for use, and in the excitement it is a wonder that a dozen men were not shot. A spirit of frenzy and revenge, disgraceful to both police and citizens, took possession of a whole section of the city and the hunt went on as if for a mad dog or an escaped tiger. The murderer was little less, for when found and shot down he had a revolver fully loaded, and would have used it to the last. But most disgraceful of all, when the body of the dead ruffian was taken to the station the surging crowd, determined on revenge, could not be kept off even by the revolvers of a squad of police; and to satisfy their beastly Nero-thirst for blood the dead body was exposed in a window while for hours the crowd filed by, until it was glutted with the bloody sight. Chicago has seldom if ever exhibited so sickening and disgraceful a picture. An adequate contrast can be found only in the slave hunts of the South or the guerillar aids of the war.

—John C. W. Bailey, a 32-degree Mason who died a few months since in this city, was the first editor and publisher of the Voice of Masonry, with which he connected the printing and sale of Masonic books. After he sold out this business he engaged in printing and at one time run on his presses a whole edition of Ronayne's "Hand-book" for Baker and Arnold. Bro. Baker called his attention to the character of the book but Bailey turned off the allusion to his lodge oath with a joke. He evidently thought more of a few substantial dollars than of a false and hypocritical oath which no one has any moral right to assume.

—Detroit, Holland, Wexford county, Branch county, and Oakland county, have reported for the American Party. About 300 votes were polled as the aggregate of these places. Other places have not been heard from.

The Pantheon of the Nations.

[Editorial.]

Pantheons are temples devoted to all the gods of paganism. The name is Greek, and means every god. There was one in Athens and one in Paris, the last begun in 1764.

Roman policy brought the leading deities of all its conquered nations to Rome, thus to make it the mistress of the world. These idols were placed in the magnificent Pantheon, which was built on the field of Mars, and was a measure of war-policy. Erected perhaps 130 years before Christ, when it had stood more than seven centuries, Pope Boniface IV. turned it into a temple consecrated to the Virgin Mary. But long before this the best of its images had been taken to Constantinople by Constantine and converted into popish saints. Its image of Jupiter, the head god of paganism, has, however, been retained and removed to the Vatican, where it is worshipped as the statue of St. Peter by kissing the toe of the stone image until the nail is worn off by the lips of Roman Catholics. The temple itself, surmounted by a dome which is an exact half sphere, served as a model for the dome of St. Peter's. When the thought struck Michael Angelo, as he walked the street, it is said he exclaimed, "I will hang the Pantheon in mid air." The old temple is still visited by tourists.

Freemasonry attempts, like the builders of Pantheons, to unify the Christless worships of the world. "The inimitable Ralph Cudworth" (as John Paine calls him in his Intellectual System of the Universe) has shown that all the pagan systems admitted one supreme being, with a multitude of lesser gods. Freemasonry takes that one supreme deity as the "religion in which all mankind agree," or, as Mackey calls it, (Lex. p. 404) "the religion of pure Theism." This is the religion of this world, as it is without Christ, and Satan is the god of it. What the old Pantheon attempted by architecture, stone and statuary, the lodge system attempts by mystery and rites adapted to a higher grade of superstition, and is thus the modern Pantheon of the nations.

The Church and Sin.

BY PRESIDENT C. J. KEPHART.

It is a sad fact that the church is so slow to take an active part as a unit in any of the great questions of reform that have occupied the attention of men. When Moses, at the direction of the Lord, would lead Israel out of Egypt, he must endure almost as much reproach from his own people as from his enemies. When King Hezekiah attempted to reform Israel after the terrible sins of his predecessors, his efforts were very generally spurned.

When Jesus "came to his own his own received him not," but plotted and effected his death. When Luther commenced to preach the truth he met the most bitter opposition from the church.

When the question of the rightfulness of human slavery was before the people the institution had its strongest support in the church. The sin of whisky-drinking has reached its present appalling proportions because of the support it received from the church.

Looking at this phase of the subject one might conclude that the church is the conservator of error, rather than of truth; and such indeed it is, if we look upon it from the human side alone. It is not the perfection of human ideas, plans and efforts, that renders the church the stronghold of truth; it is the constant working in it of the divine idea, formulated in the spiritual rule of Christ, in spite of human imperfections, that renders it the hope of the world. How poor an idea of what the church might be do we get from what it is! God speaks of her in his Word as coming forth, "Fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." Such indeed it is, so far as respects the divinity present in its organization and operation, but such it has never yet been seen from the human side.

To-day sin in some, I might say many, of its most terrible forms, has as its bulwark the church; not so much because of a positive atti tude in favor of sin as because of a negative undefined attitude. I am not one of those who think that the world is constantly growing worse and the church declining from God. Far from it. The world grows better every day, and the church more powerful. But this I claim: The church does not yet so clearly comprehend truth that she preserves herself from being used as the support and defense of sin. The church has scarcely ever taken a position in defense of any of the radical forms of error and iniquity. She has never declared in favor of idolatry. She has never placed it in the catalogue of duties to keep slaves, or to practice drunkenness and debauchery; yet she has tolerated every one of these abominations. The church, nor any part of it, has ever prescribed it as a part of Christian duty to unite oneself with any of the forms of iniquity known in modern times as secret societies. At the same time there is scarcely a Christian denomination which has not in some way or other sought the patronage of these institutions, and thus has taken an attitude which rendered opposition to this iniquitous practice unreasonable. The effort has been to do this in the light of the sinfulness of these organizations, with no possibility of doubting that to do so is most positively to degrade the church in the estimation of the unsaved.

This is too bad. When will Christian men and Christian organizations learn that it is not the right of any man, as God views it, to do that which it is not his duty to do as a servant of God. Nor is it the right of any Christian organization to tolerate or permit that to be done by its members which God does not prescribe as a part of Christian duty. The preservation of Christian integrity is a duty to which every one should give most careful attention. Any degradation of Christian character is a reproach to the cause of Christ, and any toleration of such degradation by Christian organizations is an abomination. To ask whether the union of Christian men with the ungodly of every type, in the manner in which this union is effected in the different secret orders, for no other purpose than personal aggrandizement—to ask whether this is degrading to Christian character is supreme folly.

The effort of every individual Christian should be to exhibit to the world the true Christian character as revealed in the Word of God, of which the world in general has a very correct idea. The effort of every branch of the Christian church should be to throw around its adherents such influences and restrictions as will most conduce to this end. I only ask, does the toleration of union with that which is in its very nature iniquitous, conduce to the accomplishment of this object?

Avalon College, Mo.

Honors Long Delayed.

BY PROF. E. D. BAILEY.

It doesn't often happen that one waits fifty years after death for funeral solemnities, or waiting that long, gets them. It seldom happens either that a man gets a double quantity of such sepulchral honors; but that antiquated reservoir of justice, wisdom and charity the Order of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, believes in giving to every man—if he is a Mason—his due, providing, always, that the man has regularly kept up all his dues.

And it believes also in improving every opportunity to make a grand, imposing moral show of itself in its trappery and paraphernalia, as if it was a monster, combination, Jumbo menagerie.

Such an opportunity occurred a few years ago in Worcester, and it was an emergency that appealed to the vanity of every loyal follower of the square and compass?

Near the part of the city where the new Union passenger depot had been erected was an old cemetery in which the respected citizens of past years had long been laid away for their last slumber. In order to extend a street to reach the new depot, it became necessary to disturb this last resting place of Worcester's most peaceful inhabitants, and such handfuls of mortal dust as could be discovered under the crumbling gravestones were carefully transplanted to a new cemetery. Among the number of those thus unexpectedly asked to "move on," was the slender remains of a man who, no doubt, was respectable and deserving enough in life—Mr. Isaiah Thomas, of savory memory. He had distinguished himself while on earth and in Massachusetts by being the editor of the Massachusetts Spy. Fleeing from Boston at the outbreak of the Revolution, he set his press to work in Worcester, where ever since it has continued to keep an "Argus eye" on the doings of its neighbors. He was also the first to read the Declaration of Independence in New England; it being done from the steps of Old South church in Worcester to an admiring audience. His quinquagesimal honors, however, were due to the facts that follow rather than these. He was also a Mason, and fifty years ago, more or less, he was summoned to the Grand Lodge above. His brethren of the mystic tie would gladly have rushed to mingle their tears of sympathy with those of the bereaved friends—if there were any—and pour their liberal treasures in their lap, and even if they had omitted this first ceremony they would not have omitted to gather their deceased brother in the arms of their ostentatious charity, and bear him to the tomb with mournful pomp. But to the horror and distress of these devotees of Solomon's Temple, their beloved institution was under a painful cloud. Anti-masonry, fierce and destroying, was abroad in the land, and, to tell the honest truth, they were afraid. So the friends buried him and let it go, hoping he would get in somehow, without a Masonic send-off.

But fortune's wheel turned, and the "handmaid of religion" was mistress again. So when the aforementioned reinterment took place, the brilliant idea flashed upon the minds of the knights of the cable-tow, to speed on the soul of the departed—if so be it lingered at the pearlly gate above, kept out by some angelic tyler—because it didn't come properly vouched for, or perhaps it was also to vindicate their right to make ridiculous fools of themselves—which nobody ever doubted—but most probably to give themselves a chance to air their aprons and exhibit their big Bible that the profane outside might know they had one. So they gathered in Mechanic's Hall, these thrice illustrious disciples of the double triangle, a gorgeous and mournful company. At least they tried to look solemn, but it is said they looked ineffably silly.

Over the mortal remains—a bone or two and a puff of dust—of the long-since departed brother, laid in an elegant and costly casket, they held a solemn and imposing service. They made long and eulogistic speeches and then with mournful step and slow, headed by muffled drums, playing a funeral dirge, the long procession moved to the place prepared for mortal man. May he rest there in peace till the last great awakening.

We venture to suggest that this man who had been dead fifty years and had forgotten the pomps and vanities of this world, was very little benefitted, and as for relatives and descendants to be flattered by this show of respect, there were none. But his name and fame served as a background against which the lurid light of Masonic glorification shone astonishingly well, and they were happy, even if everybody else was disgusted.

New Year's Gifts must soon be prepared. What better for some friend than the Cynosure for a year, or a copy of "In the Coils?"

REFORM STORY.

Holden with Cords.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LITTLE PEOPLE," "A SUNNY LIFE," ETC.

Chapter XXX—Rattle Snake Corner.

As soon as we heard of the attack on Mark, I started off for Tonawanda. It was not likely the actual perpetrators of the outrage would ever be known, but there was no reasonable doubt that they were tools of the lodge whose first plot to silence his fearless testimony had so signally miscarried—thanks to Sam Toller.

At one of the stopping places on the way an incident occurred so strongly illustrative of that spirit in Masonry which a distinguished seceder and writer on the subject has justly denominated "infernal" that I cannot forbear transcribing it.

A man well dressed, but with a general mingling of the fumes of whisky and tobacco about his person rather too strong to be agreeable, stood leaning against the bar apparently on the lookout for an acquaintance, which he finally recognized in a thin-visaged, nervous looking individual with an umbrella and big carpet bag. The latter returned his salute with a rather slight nod and cool "How d'ye do?"—but the other was of a class not easy to snub.

"Going to put up at Greene's?" he inquired familiarly.

"I was calculating to," responded the one interrogated.

"Maybe it's none of my business," resumed the other, with the air of a person obliged to say disagreeable things at the call of duty, "but if I did as I would like to be done by, I should tell you that Greene's tavern ain't a good place for travellers that have anything valuable about them. If I was obliged to put up there I should sleep with one eye open."

The nervous looking man glanced toward his carpet bag as if he saw it already in possession of unlawful hands, and answered in a slow, appalled way, "You don't say so. Why now I had no idea the Park Tavern was such a place, but I guess I'll go on to the next stand; it won't be much further. I declare, there's no knowing who to trust now days." And depositing his umbrella carefully between his legs he sat down in a remote corner apparently absorbed in mournful reflections on the general wickedness of the world.

"Well now," put in the landlord who was standing behind the bar, making some entries in his book. "I must say I am surprised to hear that. I always supposed Greene kept a pretty nice house."

"I reckon after you had a brand new ten dollar horse blanket taken from you as a neighbor of mine did that put up there last winter, you wouldn't think so, landlord. The fact is Greene's tavern is getting to be really a disreputable place to stop at, and I only do as my conscience tells me to in warning any traveller that I happen to know against going there."

It is needless to say that my blood fairly boiled with indignation while I listened to these base calumnies knowing so well their foul origin. Should I remain silent and let this thing in human semblance spit out his vile venom without reproof or contradiction? Never.

"I know Mr. Greene to be a Christian and a gentleman;" I said, turning to the man of conscience. "This is the first time I ever heard that travellers' things were not safe at his house."

My words had a somewhat similar effect to poking a venomous snake with a stick.

The stranger reddened with rage, and answered fiercely, "Do you tell me then that I lie?"

"No;" I responded quietly, "I hope you are only misinformed. But I repeat what I said, Mr. Greene has always been a character above reproach; and it is certainly strange that no stories to the discredit of his house were ever circulated till the Morgan affair happened."

"Good now; I'll go sides with ye," interrupted a voice behind me. "I'd a blamed sight rather be him than the men that will steal their own blankets, and then turn round and prosecute him. Or the men either that would take his poor dog, cut its throat from ear to ear and drown it at low water mark. When I get kinder riled up about such doings I pick out a psalm of David and read it—about Doeg the Edomite, or Cush the Benjamite, or some other of them rascally chaps that he is always praying to be delivered from. There's one verse in particular,—'His mischief shall return upon his own head and his violent dealings upon his own pate,' that does me as much good to think of as it ever did to eat my victuals."

And my new found ally who proved to my surprise to be the jocular man introduced to the reader on a previous occasion, resumed his seat and taking a jack-knife from his pocket proceeded to coolly pare an apple, and cut it in even quarters which he stowed away in his capacious mouth with the utmost ease.

Physical bulk and strength is something, decry it as we may, for there is a certain class of men who will pay respect to nothing else. The jocular man stood over six feet in his stockings, and had chest and limbs of herculean breadth and power. The other looked as much at a disadvantage as a terrier before a big Newfoundland dog, and did not choose, for prudent reasons, to turn on him in the same threatening bullying fashion in which he had turned on me. So he contented himself with a few muttered words in reply and sneaked off, probably to play the same small game of detraction and calumny somewhere else.

Nothing was altered at Mr. Jedediah Mill's. The same air of comfort and thrift; the same kitchen with its scoured floor, its flag-bottomed straight-backed chairs, and homely hospitality; the same "best room" with a sampler Hannah had wrought in her girlhood, hanging over the high, black mantle, and such books as Rollins' Ancient History, Watts on the Mind, and Baxter's Saints' Rest standing in solemn rows on the shelves of the book case, yet over it all rested the shadow of a brooding trouble as a thundercloud overhangs a fair landscape.

It was visible in Mrs. Mills dejected face, in her husband's whitening hairs, and even in the smile with which Hannah greeted me when I came to the door, for it was that pathetic kind of a smile which Old Sorrow and New Happiness are apt to wear before they have had time to make each other's acquaintance. Light and shadow, joy and grief! Wisely has Providence mingled the cup as we shall all know when we reach those love-illumined heights that rise beyond the mists of time and death; as many of us come to realize even here when some thorny trial blossoms into a rich red rose of blessing, and "Thy will be done" grows suddenly easy to say, so easy that we wonder it was ever hard.

For Hannah's parents were well suited with her choice, though in a worldly sense they knew she might have done better. They reverenced the young preacher with his slight frame, his burning ardor and devotion in his Master's cause, almost like an angelic messenger; and the recent assault upon him had naturally intensified the feeling by surrounding him with not a little of that homage with which, reasonably or otherwise the best portion of humanity are apt to regard one who has come very near being enrolled in the noble army of martyrs.

Good Mrs. Mills, with pleasant garrulousness, told me the whole story of the courtship before I had been in the house twenty-four hours.

"Father has been real down in the mouth since this trouble come on to us about our farm. You see he's a man that won't give up a grain to injustice. He's always said he'd fight it out to the end, if it took every dollar he had, for 'if I give 'em an inch,' says he, 'they'll take an ell, and then what am I better off?' It was two or three days after Mark was shot that father was sitting over the fire in one of his low spells, and I was trying to chirk him up a little by talking about the old times before we were married, and asking him if he remembered the first night we walked home from the singing school together, and how he walked in one rut and I in the other because we were too bashful to lock arms; bnt I couldn't get a smile onto his face. And just then the door opened, and father, he kinder started up, for there was Mark and Hannah looking as happy as though they had just stepped out of Paradise. And I lay down my knitting, for I see what was coming, and I wondered how father would take it. Hannah stepped up and put her arms around his neck, and give a little sob; and then father seemed to understand it at last. He looked from Mark to Hannah, and says he, 'You know I am a poor man now, I can't give you any setting out.' And then Mark spoke up, and says he, 'We only want your consent and blessing. Hannah's wedding portion is in herself, and its value is far above rubies. I have told her what to expect if she married me, but she is willing to try it.' And father give his consent right off and seemed to cheer up wonderfully, so that I told Hannah afterwards, 'I hain't seen your father so like himself since he begun to have this law-suit.' And though I do say it of my own daughter, Hannah will make a first-rate minister's wife. She is just cut out for it. She'll turn off work, baking or churning or spinning, and you wonder how she gets so much done with so little fuss; and then she will be all ready to go and watch with somebody that's sick. I tell folks she is just like her aunt Eunice—"

But I forbear, remembering that the reader's interest will not be likely to extend as far as Aunt Eunice.

The marriage was to take place in a few months, for as Mark said, neither of them wanted a long engagement. They were eager to enter upon this life work together. The time was short at best. Why should they make it any shorter by unnecessary delay?

Of course the reader of either sex who looks upon matrimony as an affair largely made up of bank stocks, diamond rings, and elaborate trosseaus will have no patience with such an uncalculating young couple; and I fear that no excuse can be made for their verdancy which will be accepted in such quarters.

The fact was, Hannah Mills was not only "cut out to be a minister's wife," but she was cut out to be the helpmeet of a poor and unpopular minister, whose mission led him in the ways of Elijah and Ezekiel, and other old reformers, to the great detriment of his worldly prospects. And when she accepted Mark she simply accepted her vocation.

Mark accompanied me home to Brownsville as the best way to convince Rachel that he had not been seriously hurt; for the report had reached us, as reports generally do, in so exaggerated a form as to rouse all her sisterly anxiety.

He wanted to call at the Park Tavern, however, before he left, and Mr. Mills having an errand in the direction of Batavia, the latter took us in his farm wagon as far as the outskirts of the village, where he dropped us and we proceeded the remaining distance on foot.

Batavia was now in its normal condition, a busy but seemingly peaceful community. I was thinking of the very different aspect it had worn on my first visit when we heard a confused shout from a rabble of men and boys in the distance that did not sound exactly like "mad dog," though the cry partook somewhat of that character. An instant after a window opened, and a woman called loudly to a little towhead making mud pies underneath, "Charles Henry, come into the house this minute, or you'll get hit."

The alarm, whatever its cause, seemed to spread with electric rapidity. There was a general banging of doors and windows while frightened women in all stages of dishabille rushed out frantically calling in their children as if they were menaced by some fearful danger.

"What is the matter?" we stopped to ask of one, the mother of the Charles Henry aforesaid —for that young gentleman was too delightfully engaged to heed at once the maternal call, and was now being dragged unceremoniously into the house in a small skirmish of slaps and kicks.

"Why, hain't you heard about it? It's awful. Twenty or thirty rattlesnakes loose right here in the village! You'd better take care of yourselves."

And so saying she disappeared with her contumacious young scion, while Mark and I looked around us for some weapon of defense. For though rattlesnakes had ceased to be indigenous to the soil of Western New York, they were not infrequently killed in remote or newly settled places, and many an old hunter could tell yarns quite sufficient to make the hair rise on the most unbelieving,—how it fascinated its victim with circles of ever-changing light and color, mingling and melting, melting and mingling; with a low throbbing music sweet as the song of the Syrens, till the fatal spell was broken at last by its fangs in his flesh, and the creeping chill of death at his heart.

Several men and boys ran past us to join the rapidly nearing crowd, armed with every imaginable weapon from hickory clubs to brick-bats and fire-shovels, and we heard the name of Greene mingled with threats and execrations as if he were in some way responsible for the escape of the reptiles.

"This is only another Masonic outrage on Mr. Greene;" said Mark suddenly, dropping the stout sapling which he was trimming. "I don't believe there are any rattlesnakes about. See, they've stopped at the Park Tavern and are pouring into his yard. Come Leander; we must see this affair through. I know a back way that we can take so as to avoid mixing with all that rabble."

Accordingly I followed Mark "the back way" and we entered the public room of the tavern just as a part of the mob, their search for stray rattlesnakes in Mr. Greene's yard and outbuildings having apparently been fruitless, carried the hunt into the house, loading its proprietor with every vile epithet. But the latter met them with cool self-possession. He had been under the fire of the lodge too often to show any surprise or trepidation at this new form of attack, and there was even a suppressed humor lurking about his mouth as if he saw a comical side to the affair.

"Gentlemen,"—and I remember how his clear full voice sounded above the uproar, a voice I was destined to hear afterwards from the platform as he told the story of Morgan to listening crowds, and faced mobs with the same calm heroic bearing with which he now met the daily outrage and insults to which he was subjected; —"the snakes are all safe in their box. Whoever said they had escaped spread a false report. I beg you will be content with this assurance and disperse."

"Do you think we will take your word for it, you cussed, perjured villain?" responded the foremost one, who seemed to be full not only of the spirit of the lodge but the spirit of whisky, and who as I afterwards learned had done a good deal of false swearing as a witness in the Morgan trials. And he brandished his club threateningly near to Mr. Greene's face, but the latter did not abate one atom of his cool, dignified bearing.

"You are not obliged to take my word for it. I can easily send for the man who asked leave to store the box in my granary. He can certify that not one of the snakes has got loose."

"I've seen the box myself and it is all right;" spoke up the bar-tender. "Do you suppose I would be such a precious fool as to stay here, if I knew any such varmints were crawling about?"

This argument was rather unanswerable, especially as another man, a lodger at the Park Tavern added his own assurance to the same effect. And after a little more abuse of Mr. Greene, the rioters—for such they were—finding their game was likely to be a losing one, departed

The court was then sitting, Batavia being a county town, and the explanation of this whole scene consisted in the fact that one of the witnesses in a forthcoming trial had a box of rattlesnakes with him which he was taking to a man in New York. He accordingly asked storage room for it during the period of his stay at the Park Tavern. This was a grand opportunity for Mr. Greene's enemies of the lodge to spread a general panic through the village, and frighten away his custom by a report that the snakes had broken loose.

He greeted Mark and I with a smile as untroubled as if he had just been waited on by some flattering committee who wanted to make him their political nominee; and his only reference to the scene that had passed was in these few quiet words as he took us into a small apartment adjoining the public room:

"You have only seen one specimen of the many ways in which the Masons are trying to ruin my business here in Batavia. I presume they will accomplish their end. My only comfort is that God rules in heaven, a God of infinite justice, who has promised to hear the cry of the oppressed. To him I submit my cause."

Grand, simple-hearted Christian hero, thy wrongs were never righted on earth, but none the less surely will the year of His redeemed come in the overthrow of every dark unrighteous system of falsehood for whose destruction souls under the altar, that have shed their blood in the cause of truth, cry continually, "O, Lord, how long!"

Reader, who may desire a proof that I am relating fact and not fiction, know that in the goodly village of Batavia there is a certain locality called by the townspeople to this day in memory of the foregoing occurrence, RATTLE SNAKE CORNER.

THE SOUTHERN FIELD.

The Star-route Ring---Is it Masonic.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.

DEAR BRO. K.:—There is reason to think that the late political cyclone did much to purify the moral atmosphere of Washington. Important changes in official circles have already taken place, and others are impending. It seems now to be well understood that government officials caused the failure of the Star-route prosecutions, and that there was a conspiracy to make the government appear in the light of a persecutor of the innocent, rather than a prosecutor of the guilty. Every effort is used to not only thwart public justice, but to pervert public opinion. It is pretended that the prosecution was simply a war of the stalwarts on the friends of Garfield, but the people are not and will not be deceived, and the administration dare not hesitate. It is acting with promptness and energy. The following extract from the letter of the Attorney-General to the President will show something of the feeling, at least, by which the Cabinet is actuated:

"I desire to call your attention to the fact that the officers of the law and those who have directly been aiding me in the discharge of my duty in this business have been from the first encircled with snares, pitfalls and every species of vile device that could be invented to harm them, hinder their usefulness and prevent the administration of justice. Some portions of this community who surround these defendants and who have enjoyed, or do still enjoy, minor official positions, know no allegiance to any one but this band of robbers, and render no service to any one but their evil employers. From motives of gain or other corrupt considerations they are saturated with affinities for these bad men, and they have contributed by every means in their power, at the bidding of their masters, to obstruct public justice and to defame its officers, with the hope of securing the aequittal of the worst band of organized scoundrels that ever existed since the commencement of the government."

How much Masonry has had to do with these immense frauds and sham prosecutions we may not certainly know; but there are not a few here in Washington who do not hesitate to say that the Postoffice Department is controlled by a Masonic ring. It is vain to talk of an honest administration, of justice or of civil service reform so long as these men who execute our laws are sworn to another government. I think that it is just such political tornadoes as those of the late elections that will break up the domination of party, and bring men face to face with living issues; and that instead of weeping we ought to "sing the doxology."

I have to-day visited the Garfield Memorial Fair in the Capitol. The entrance was on the west side, the main front entrance being barred by an annex constructed of boards for the use of the great band of musicians. The main display is in the rotunda, and consists of paintings and statuary interspersed with tropical plants and flowers. A fine statue of Garfield is in the center. The display of pictures is large, and some of them are very fine, but as a whole will not compare with Corcoran Art Gallery. The statuary falls far short of that which has been sent to the Capital by the several States. In Statuary Hall (the old hall of the House of Representatives) we found an exhibit of each of the States; each under the care of a committee of ladies from that State. Some of the States made very fine exhibits; that of Kansas was especially noticeable as it consisted in agricultural products arranged in artistic forms. The crypt, which is directly under the rotunda, was brilliantly lighted, and had a very fine display.

I was much pleased with one feature—there were no intoxicating drinks sold about the premises, and no smoking in the building; but I was sorry to find that lotteries were an important feature of the fair. This was conspicuous in the Kentucky department, which was quite small, but was devoted to the sale of Masonic jewels and a few other trinkets by lottery. This is a plain violation of the spirit if not the letter of both human and divine law. On Wednesday there is to be a bicycle display, and Thursday is to be given to the Knights Templar, and in each case there are to be more lotteries. How much Mr. Garfield will be honored remains to be seen. I distributed about the Capitol a large number of the letter of Thurlow Weed to the Batavia Convention. In most cases they were kindly or even eagerly taken. In a few they were rejected with indignation when they saw what they were. But some of this seed will germinate.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has it headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited. E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec.

—The temperance meetings under the lead of Rev. H. T. Cheever continue to be gloriously successful. Mechanics Hall, the largest in the city was filled to overflowing last Sunday, and many turned away unable to find even standing room. It is hoped that this will result in a revolution in our city government. The change of one hundred votes last year would have given the victory to "No license." It is hoped we may find the people better prepared this year.

—Miss Mitchell, of Pittston, Me., writes of one of the evangelists, whom Bro. Spaulding found in Portland, that he recently held some meetings in Gardner, and one evening, turning to a Mason, he said: "When you get the Lord Jesus in your soul it will take out all the secret societies."

—Robert Mansfield, a Wesleyan Methodist brother, sends us some interesting reminiscences and among them a note about the Wesleyan church spoken of last week in the Cynosure: "When the Wesleyan Methodist church at Cochituate was organized it was done by persons of various beliefs, for the purpose of having a church in the village. When it was found that members of secret societies could not be admitted, a large majority left. The house is now secure in possession of the Wesleyan Methodists." This statement confirms the opinion which we have previously expressed that it is Masonic influence which kept the reform churches out of New England. It also explains why the Congregational churches, whose chief strength is here, have from the first feared this reform They know the power of the lodge and are unwilling to risk their strength in an open encounter.

—The same brother adds these words of cheer: "God leads reformers, if faithful, to sure success. Though they have to wade through deep waters it shall not overflow them. The agency at Worcester is a God-send and if rightly cherished, will set fires that will consume the stubble all over the Eastern States. Worcester appears a bright star in the reform constellation and promises to bring to light the hidden works of darkness. Let us take courage and go forward, if need be through suffering, until through God's favor victory shall be inscribed on our banners."

—A note from Mr. Spaulding informs us that his assortment of books and papers is exhausted and he is on his way home again through New Hampshire. He has visited Concord, Plymouth, and Manchester since leaving Vermont. He adds: "One not only needs financial support, but the prayers of the people, to work in these States." Few realize the hardships of such labor and yet it is the most essential part of our efforts. Towns and cities where the subject has not been agitated must be visited and our literature brought before the people. Pay the workmen and pray for them.

The Kingdom of God Cometh not with Observation.

WORCESTER, Mass., Nov. 28, 1882.

The best timber is of slowest growth. The softer and less durable wood grows most rapidly. Is it not so also in moral reforms? Many questions which agitate the people now are as important for the discipline of the present generation as their fruit will be advantageous to those who come after. In every great reform there are fundamental principles involved which have been lost sight of and the revival of which is important to the well-being of the people.

Those who dread and avoid the agitation of reforms and who treat society as they would treat house-plants, forget that the strongest character is developed by the most adverse circumstances. The course pursued by many is calculated only to produce moral imbeciles and cowards. Those periods of history which reveal the greatest of human achievements reveal also the most of human adversity.

These reflections arise from a clearer view of the immense revolution in human affairs which must take place before the principles of the Gospel wholly predominate. The disciples were not more ignorant of the manner of spirit they were of, when they proposed to call down fire from heaven to consume their enemies, than many persons, prominent in the councils of the churches, are in reference to the Kingdom of Christ as compared with other kingdoms.

It would be a small matter to destroy Freemasonry if its destruction were only accomplished by playing with the predjudices of men or awakening their jealousy. One of the great burdens laid on those who engage in this reform is to awaken a new interest in the study of the false systems of worship which in all ages have hovered about the true, and blow again the blast of the old prophets by which the people shall be delivered from the thraldom of false worship and brought into the glorious light and liberty of the Gospel.

The South Worcester chapel is progressing rapidly and it is expected to be completed ready for use by the first of January. Meanwhile the attendance at our services is increasing in a marked degree. The indications are all good and we are correspondingly hopeful. For a few Sabbaths I have also been preaching at Washburn Hall and may continue this service hereafter, both morning and evening. Of these services I shall have more to say soon. Our plans have to await development somewhat but the work goes on continually. We have means of knowing that our movements are closely watched and that no steps will be taken without meeting every impediment which can be thrown in the way.

I hope friends will send large orders for the Thurlow Weed pamphlet and give it a wide circulation. We will fill promptly all orders for they should be scattered immediately while the people have a desire to read whatever Mr. Weed has written. E. D. BAILEY.

—We have not yet received the secretary's report of the Wisconsin State meeting, but learn that Rev Isaac Bancroft, for some years pastor of the Congregational church at Monroe, was appointed State agent and lecturer and that he begins his work this week. Bro. Bancroft is a man of excellent spirit and will be able, with due co-operation of the Wisconsin friends, to put the work forward grandly in that State.

REFORM NEWS.

To Friends in Indiana.

Can you not open the way for work in your several vicinities and let me know. I can now have the assistance of Eld. I. W. Lowman. We can with the moral support of the friends of reform do much good by holding conventions or by lecturing in neighborhoods. Our work will never be done till sin is thoroughly reproved and its power restrained. Your work will never be done till you give your testimony against this giant system of moral corruption. My friends there must be a positive reproof.

You cannot evade responsibility. One cannot do the work of many. I can do much more with your co-operation, shall I have it? Will you not remember that moral support will not feed the body? Pledges amounting to $76.00 are not an encouraging page to look at, nor is it a pleasant recollection that $20.00 indebtedness remains for the horse that helped to do my work and yours. Will these pledges continue to be scattered over a whole year or what is worse, several years? Will you not forward at least half your pledges by New Year's day? and will not those who have not pledged feel that they have a duty to perform and forward as God may direct. Eld. Lowman hopes to have issued a copy of the Indiana American in January. I urge the co-operation of all the faithful in this adjunct to our work. Let us all this winter do our best and ask God's blessing. One of England's great captains on the approach of an important battle thus addressed his fleet, "England expects every man to do his duty." Germany's great general's favorite address to his army was, "Forward, brethren, forward!" Christ pronounced a woe against you when all men speak well of you. Let your popularity go. Move forward; let me hear from you.

Note from Elder Rathbun.

As I have received invitations from Nathan Callender of Pennsylvania, and H. Curtis of Kansas and others to work for them, I wish to say through the Cynosure that I shall confine myself to work in Iowa, as some of the friends of the cause are paying largely to keep me in the State. I recommend S. E. Starry and James Fergurson, both of Clarence, Iowa, as efficient degree workers, and advise you to correspond with them and secure their services if possible. I have had a very successful month's work, which I expect soon to report through the Cynosure.

Sowing Beside all Waters.

South Salem, O., Nov. 21, 1882.

Dear Editor:—According to my strength and opportunities, I endeavor to carry out my maxim, though doubtless I come short, as I have in all my attempts to serve the Master.

I responded to the call of Mr. Baldridge to visit Adams county, and gave two addresses to fair congregations in the U. P. church of Cherry Fork. But other places in the county where Masonry has more power, were closed to me. Yet in this way and by literature, the seed must be sown and the light must spread.

Having occasion to spend a few days in Cincinnati, I visited Lane Theological Seminary, and found in the Library there the minutes of the Philadelphia Anti-masonic convention of 1830, the letters of John Quincy Adams on Freemasonry, Stearns on Freemasonry, Webb's Monitor (a very old edition), Freemasonry Illustrated by Doesburg, and two bulky volumns in laudation of the institution. I took the pains to let the Seminary know that these books were there: and also had the opportunity of addressing the faculty and students for three quarters of an hour.

I also had the privilege yesterday, of addressing the ministers meeting of Cincinnati and vicinity (twenty-five ministers being present) for a very few minutes, and as I condensed into a few words as much truth as I possibly could, perhaps you will print my speech, allowing me to report it myself.

ADDRESS BEFORE THE MINISTER'S MEETING.

"In the very able address on Home Missions, to which we listened here one week ago. Dr. Rumler spoke of false religions to be encountered and put down by the agency of ministers, and the power of the Gospel: and among these he mentioned Romanism and Mormonism. He did not mention Freemasonry, the false religion by which you are more immediately surrounded, and with which we are more immediately concerned. Because he did not, I am obliged to infer that he is unacquainted with it. It may be that you are all unacquainted with it "As a religion, Freemasonry has its creed, its temples, its altars, its priests, and its religious rites, numerous and imposing. It gives religious instructions, and promises the new birth, purifying of an evil nature, freedom from sin, the house not made with hands eternal in the heavens, and the reward which belongs alone to the just made perfect, to all its votaries of the third or Master's degree, and all this by Masonry alone. It rejects the name of the Lord Jesus from all its rites and acts of worship, and denies his power, and its rites are literally and precisely the rites of the ancient sun-worship as we find them in history, and as they are described or referred to in the 8th chapter of the prophet Ezekiel.

"Freemasonry is also a government, claiming to be above and independent of all other governments, yet using the state and the church where it can do so to its own advantage, and opposing and ready to destroy either or both whenever and wherever they come in the way of its own designs. An old man, a Mason and church member in the State of Kentucky, conversing with me familiarly on the subject of Masonry, said to me, "It is a cover for scoundrels anyway." And another old and high Mason and minister of the same State said to me, "The only objection I have to it (Masonry) is that men will lean on it for the salvation of their souls."

"I give you these facts naked, without asking time for their verification; but the means of their verification are ample and at your hands. I have no opinions of my own to utter here concerning Freemasonry, or advice to give respecting modes of treating it. I speak as unto wise men, judge ye what I say. There are in Ohio, more than 500 lodges and 28,000 members, and in the United States 5,000 lodges and 500,000 members."

At the Seminary, I could see that the truth was well received at least by a good portion of my audience. But I could not judge of the effect of that very brief speech on the staid and conservative Presbyterian ministers of Cincinnati and vicinity. I can only hope that it was not in vain. Yours truly, Warren Taylor.

RATHBUN AT MORNING SUN.

The following is from the Morning Sun Herald, of Nov. 16: "Monday evening was the time set for the lecture of Rev. D. P. Rathbun, of Clarence, Iowa, and at the appointed time the audience was called to order and Rev. J. W. Dill, of Mediapolis led in prayer. Rev. Trumbull then introduced the speaker, who spoke for nearly two hours on the evils of Freemasonry. We would like to give a full synopsis of his speech, as it would be of interest to many of our readers, but are compelled to omit the greater part for want of space. He started out by saying that Freemasonry is a religion and to prove his assertions he quoted from such Masonic writers as Mackey, Morris, Reynolds, etc. He said that the workings of the lodge inside originated from the ancient sun-worshippers and therefore it was heathenish. * * * It was a very interesting lecture and would have paid every body to have heard it. This is the first opportunity that the writer has ever had of hearing a speaker on this subject, so we are unable to make a comparison between Mr. Rathbun and other anti-secret lecturers. A large and attentive audience was in attendance, all the seats were occupied and many standing up from the beginning to the close of the remarks. Rev. Rathbun spoke Tuesday evening and Wednesday afternoon in Sharon church to good audiences."

I would add to the above that I have heard from a goodly number who have attended the lectures of brother Rathbun in this vicinity, and all express themselves as highly pleased; and I desire to urge friends of the cause in Iowa, to send for him to lecture in their respective neighborhoods and to do all they can to encourage and support him in his self-denying labors in the anti-secret cause.

C. D. Trumbull.

AT SHARON.

The meeting of our State Association in Winterset, did one thing for the cause of reform which it has no reason to regret, viz., the appointment of a State lecturer. We have long felt the need of some one to head the work, and yet the way did not seem to open so that we were justified in giving any one the appointment. At our last meeting an appointment was made, and Bro. D. P. Rathbun is in the field. He sent word he would visit this neighborhood at a certain time. We were not quite ready for him, but still we made arrangements. His lecture in Morning Sun I did not hear; but on the evening of the 14th he spoke to an interested audience in our church (Sharon R. P. church) and I am quite certain no one present went away with any prejudices in favor of Masonry.

The next day a small audience gathered and listened to the heart-rending tale of what this dear brother has suffered for righteousness sake. As I was entering the church I spoke to a man who came a long way, and said I had not expected to see him there. He replied, "I do not know what I came for, because I am as much opposed to Freemasonry as I can be." After the meeting closed, the same man, with tears in his eyes, said, "I know now what I came for." Another man, one who has long been wide awake on the subject, said, "That was the best lecture I ever heard on that subject."

I am sure if Brother R could only come in contact with the people, he would warm many of the old friends into renewed action, and would gain many new friends to the cause.

And now, friends of the cause in the State, remember Bro. Rathbun is our State lecturer. This fact lays us under certain solemn obligations:

1. If he is lecturer for our State it is our duty to find work for him in the State. Every friend of the cause can, by persistent effort, secure an appointment and a good audience. This can be done even where secretism has a fast hold, where the cause for which we labor is unpopular.

2. Where there are a large number of friends they ought to make one or two appointments in their midst, and make the presence of the State lecturer a time of good work.

In the cause of temperance we do not expect the saloons to pay the expenses of the temperance work; neither ought we to expect the lodge or its abettors to pay one cent of Brother Rathbun's expenses. On the other hand, we who are strong, ought to help the weak. "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." Friends of the cause, send for Rathbun, and then make it possible for him to go where he is not asked.

Our State lecturer has been in these parts again, and our prayer is that he may not be so near killed just after leaving us, as he was a few days after leaving us when here before. He preached at Granville on Sabbath at 11 o'clock, at the U. B. church, and in evening at Friends church in Chester, to fair audiences and to good satisfaction.

On the evening of the 6th he lectured at Granville and spoke some on the political issues of the American party. On the 7th he lectured at Writer school-house on the general character and claims of Masonry; on the 8th, at Friends church in Chester, on the relation of secrecy to the family and church. We consider this one of his master lectures, and should be heard by all, even "jack Masons." His next lecture was at a Important Morgan Reminiscences.

HADLEY, Lapeer Co., Mich., Nov. 20, 1882.

The first settlers of this part of Michigan were mostly from the State of New York, many of them from the region of the Morgan tragedy, and the spread of Anti-masonic literature together with the building of the monument at Batavia is loosening tongues somewhat.

Mandly Swears tells me that he lived in the town of Clarence, midway between Batavia and Buffalo; that he had a brother-in-law, a shoemaker and a Freemason, living in Canandaigua; that when he (Mandley Swears) was sixteen years old he went to learn the shoemaker's trade of his brother-in-law.

When he had been inCanandaigua a few days, one evening, after his brother-in-law had gone out, his sister said to him, "There is something going on among the Masons. I wish you would go out and watch around and see what it is."

He went out and finding the gathering near the jail, he went round the block, got over the back fence into the jail-yard, crept forward to the front jail-yard fence and lay down there. While lying there by the fence he saw Morgan brought out of the jail, seized, gagged, thrust into the carriage and driven off.

When all was over he went and told his sister. The next morning at breakfast he was told that his trunk was packed, and a seat secured for him in the stage, and that he must go home; which he did that day.

Walter M. Beden tells me that he came from near where a certain Dr. Lewis lived, that he was well acquainted with Dr. Lewis, and that it was well known in his neighborhood that Dr. Lewis personated the fictitious Mrs. Munroe in the Munroe inquest over Morgan's body. On his way home he was recognized while yet in female attire, at a hotel, by the landlady, who boldly charged him with being Dr. Lewis. The Dr. whined out, "No I am Mrs. Munroe." But the landlady told him she knew better; that she knew him. "He was Dr. Lewis."

Alonzo Conant tells me that his father had a horse to sell that was noted for speed and endurance. One day a Masonic neighbor came to buy the horse. A bargain was soon made, but before closing it the Mason wanted to take the horse home and try him a few days. In a few days the horse was returned, not wanted. Mr. Conant afterward learned enough to satisfy him that his horse was used in the Morgan transit.

Edward Sawyer of kidnapping fame, I knew to be living in the town of Grand Blance, (a few miles west of here) forty-five years or more ago. I have seen him occasionally since. Is living there still or was not long ago.

Timothy Shaw's Part of the Morgan Affair.

EAU CLAIRE, WIS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I don't know as I can give you anything that will do the public any good, but will give a little sketch of my brother's life. He was ten years older than myself and joined the lodge when he was 23, in the town of Chelsea, Vermont, in 1815. Soon after, he cut his ankle, took cold in it and his leg mortified on one side, up to his body, and for weeks we expected his death daily. It was a year before he could do any kind of work. The Masons gave him twenty dollars.

Not long after, he left Chelsea and came out to Lewiston, N. Y., and as he had a sore on his leg he could not work very well. He was made deputy sheriff and custom house officer, and was in various kinds of business; and when Morgan was carried off he wrote home that a man had revealed Masonry and they had run him out of the country; that they were making him trouble about it, but said he never saw the man. As father never thought any good of Masonry, he was a little excited over it and called on the Masons of Chelsea to know about it. After much joking and laughing they told him that Timothy (my brother) was master of the lodge and it was his duty to furnish a team to pass the man along.

In 1853 I made him a visit, and talking of financial affairs he said his Masonic trouble had cost him a thousand dollars. How I learned Timothy was one of the eight that cast lots is this: A young man, acquainted with all the Morgan affair, left those parts and came back, I think some years ago, and said there were eight that met out on the plain and gave their names, among them was my brother, and Valance says there were eight that cast lots, but don't give names. This information is in one of the Cynosure books that I have had but have forgotten the title. I lend my books and they get Morganized.

Kissing Baal.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Nov. 23, 1882.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We have lately had our city placarded with announcements of Colonel Bob Ingersoll's lecture; which in reality was no lecture, but a frothy demonstration.

Mr. Ingersoll was careful not to ridicule the "grand lodge on high" of Freemasons, or the absurdity of Odd-fellowship. He seemed bent on getting the name of "smart man" and pocketing the cash derived from admittance fees.

He did not hurt the lodges here, for the Masons delight in their royal law of doing as you would be done to, which was the speaker's standard of holiness, much as he falls short of it, by speaking evil of the best citizens on the face of the globe.

I lately met a gentleman from the Black Hills, who told me that he met a preacher out there who fought Masonry, and therefore was not a success. What the gentleman calls success I do not know.

Some people here cannot understand how such good men can be Masons if Masonry is so bad, and why good men keep so quiet in their pulpits on the subject.

A little girl was not long since reproved by her mother for kissing a dirty boy, and told her mother that she almost hated that boy, and nothing could tempt her to kiss him, but he gave her candy; "and" said the little one, "I kissed just enough to get the candy."

So it is with business men and preachers, they will kiss Masonry just enough to get the Masonic patronage.

Obituary.

REV. JOSHUA DAVIS HAUGHAWOUT died at Carthage. Mo., Sep. 29, 1882, in the 76th year of his age. He was born in Mifflen county, Pa., in 1805; was converted and joined the M. E. church in 1830; in 1832 he was married to Amelia Steese, who survives him. He was an ordained minister of the Gospel in the M. E. church for many years; he was a traveling preacher and was a man strong in the faith and full of the spirit of the Master; and in the great day many will bless God that this brother lived to proclaim a pure gospel. Rev. Haughawout was also a believer in Scriptural holiness and practised it. He was a man of a very strong and clear mind and many times I have found him to be better and clearer than commentaries on the difficult passages of the Word of God. He read the Christian Cynosure, and believed its truths and practiced them in his life. In a word, he was full of light and truth and love for the cause and people of God. Although he suffered for years before he died, yet he was full of patience and it will be said of him, that he "came out of great tribulation and washed his robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." He raised a large family, and some of them are ministers of Christ's Gospel. All of them can say with David, "Mark the perfect and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

LESSON XII Dec. 17, 1882.—AFTER HIS RESURRECTION.—Mark 16:9-20.

(9) Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seven devils. (10) And she went and told them that had been with him, as they mourned and wept. (11) And they, when they had heard that he was alive, and had been seen of her, believed not. (12) After that he appeared in another form unto two of them, as they walked, and went into the country. (13) And they went and told it unto the residue: neither believed they them. (14) Afterward he appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen. (15) And he saith unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. (16) He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. (17) And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues: (18) They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover. (19) So then, after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God. (20) And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the work with signs following. Amen.

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

What order did Paul give to the churches of Galatia and Corinth about the first day of the week? What is Jesus promise to those who go into all the world to preach the gospel? How many instances can you find of the fulfilment of the promised sign, "they shall cast out devils?" What is the latest mention of "speaking with new tongues?" What, of healing the sick by laying hands on them?

—Scholar's Quarterly.

INTRODUCTION.—We can never rightly understand the words of the apostle, "that we might know him and the power of his resurrection," but by a careful study of our Lord's appearances to his disciples and his words addressed to them during the forty days he remained on earth after he had risen from the dead. Indeed it is here that our study must begin, if at every step of his life of humiliation we are to behold his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father full of grace and truth. It is too common among us to dwell upon the death of Christ apart from the resurrection, whereas in the word of God the two events are linked together in doctrinal teaching as closely as they are connected with each other as historical facts.

ANALYSIS.—9. What do we know of the history of Mary Magdalene? Why called Magdalene? Many conjectures, the most probable that she was of the town of Magdala. What she owed to the Great Healer. Luke 8:2. Ten appearances recorded. 1. To Mary Magdalen, v. 9. Why did the Lord reveal himself first to this woman? Her state of mind when she comes to the sepulchre. Matt. 28: 5; Mark 16; 5; John 20: 1, 2. Why she could not recognize the Lord when he appears to her. Why was she not permitted to touch him? What was the message given to her for the disciples? What great truth contained in the wording of the message? John 20: 17. How was the message received? vs. 10: 11. 2. To the woman. Matt. 28: 9, 10. 3. To Peter—the details of this appearance unknown. Luke 24: 34. 4. To the two disciples as they walked to Emmaus—Emmaus about 8 miles from Jerusalem, exact site not known. The stranger who joins them as they walk by the way. The conversation. The opening up of the O. T. Scriptures. The invitation to abide with them. The recognition. Luke 24: 13-35. 5. Ten of the disciples sitting together with doors closed, for fear of the Jews. Luke 24: 36; John 20: 19. His salutation. The effect upon the disciples. Their thought about him. How he meets their doubting. He eats in their presence. His benediction. His gift—"Receive ye the Holy Ghost." Their commission. v. 15. Their message. v. 16. Their power. vs. 17, 18. 6. Next Lord's Day, when Thomas is present. John 20: 26, 29. 7. To seven of the disciples by the sea of Galilee. John 21: 1-24. The fishers and their success. The breakfast. The restoration of Peter. John 21. 8. To the eleven apostles and five hundred brethren. Matt. 28: 16; 1. Cor. 15: 3-6. 9. To James only. 1. Cor, 3: 7. 10. To all the apostles on the Mount of Olives. vs 19: 20; Luke 24: 50; Acts 1: 3-12. Forty days had now elapsed. The ascension. The angel's testimony. The work begun.

LESSONS.—1 His appearance to many, a special proof of love—2 to the women, as the reward of faith—3 to Peter as the seal of forgiveness—4 to the two disciples on the way to Emmaus, to comfort them that mourn in Zion, to enlighten those who are in doubt and difficulty, to show his delight in communion with his disciples—5 to bestow upon his disciples the gift of the Holy Ghost—6 to rebuke unbelief—7 to encourage his apostles and to restore Peter by renewing his commission—8 to engage all his followers in the great work of preaching the gospel to every creature—9 to James, tradition says, because he had taken a solemn vow not to eat or drink after the supper until he had seen the risen Lord. Whether there be any truth in that or not, it is certain the Lord does grant sweet and secret interviews to his own which only concern themselves—10 to witness his glorious ascension: His ascension, the consummation of his earthly history and inseparable from his whole manifestation as the Son of God, attesting his heavenly origin, declaring that his kingdom was to be established by the spirit from heaven and giving the glorious assurance of his return again to take the kingdom to himself. Acts 1: 11.—Notes for Bible Study.

Suggestive Opinions.

We ought to be more careful not to ordain a man who has departed from the truth than a man who is coming up higher toward the truth. Here is the mountain of truth. One man is at the very bottom of it and is going up; another man is at the top of it, coming down. They meet at a certain place, and each agrees exactly with the other. They are both equal then, but the man who is going up is far superior to the man who is coming down. Our Unitarian friends at the beginning of this century preached more orthodoxy on these doctrines than is preached in some orthodox pulpits at the present day. This is a melancholy fact, and it shows that we must stop somewhere, that we must have some dividing line. We must insist on some doctrines; unless we do our denomination is in ruins. If we are not to insist on these great doctrines, on these great schemes given us by Christ and the Apostles, if we are to give up the faith of our fathers, much as I love it, the sooner Congregationalism is sunk the better. On some of these doctrines we must look to the Methodists for light and instruction, for they are more orthodox than we are.—Prof. E. A. Park.

The reason given by Prof. Felix Adler for withdrawing from the Free Religious Association may well cause many in our churches to pause and think. His chief reason was that the society seemed to have no object beyond the perpetual discussion of religious questions. The temptation everywhere is to spend time in such discussion, as did the ancient doctors of the law, instead of giving one's life, as did Christ, to the active, self-denying, but fruitful work of saving the lost. When we look over our churches, and see how few are blest with revivals, how small the number of additions on profession of faith, how feeble are all our efforts to bring men to repentance, and what great spiritual dearth there is in the land, it is enough to silence all our war about words and humble us into the dust. And it is not so much great meetings for the promotion of holiness that is needed, as what faithful John Bunyan called "heart work." During a recent meeting of a multitude of ministers in this city from various parts of the world for the promotion of a deeper spirituality and more effective evangelism, very little—some say almost no time—was given to prayer. We talk and argue and discuss and misunderstand each other, and make almost no headway. The cloud still hangs over the camp and the hosts of God move not forward.—Advance.

It really seems as though the Romanists were proud of the great financial swindle of the now almost childish Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati. Every possible and almost impossible occasion is eagerly seized to bring his personality or position into publicity. Even such an odd event as the 49th anniversary of his consecration was celebrated with pomp and rhetorical gush. In the meanwhile the millions of which he swindled confiding Romanists remain unpaid. In their appeal to the pope the creditors say that "after three years of patient waiting the creditors, many of whom have lost all the proceeds of labor accumulated in a lifetime of toil, are becoming desperate, and that many of the poorer creditors have died from want, while others committed suicide, and others still have become insane from despair."—Lutheran Standard.

SANCTIFY THEM THROUGH THY TRUTH; THY WORD IS TRUTH.

Thursday, Dec. 7.—Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee. Prov. 3:3.

Friday, Dec. 8.—Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby. Heb. 12:11.

Saturday, Dec. 9.—He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God. Micah 6:8.

Sabbath, Dec. 10.—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. 1 Cor. 15:20.

Monday, Dec. 11.—Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom. James 3:13.

Tuesday, Dec. 12.—He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me. Matt. 10:37.

Wednesday, Dec. 13.—I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see. Prov. 3:18.

American Party Papers.

These papers represent and seek to promote the principles of the American Party. Four of them are now published as follows:

New England American, by E. D. Bailey, 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass.;

Illinois American, by Ezra A. Cook, 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.;

Michigan American, by Elder H. A. Day, Coldwater, Mich.;

Iowa American, by N. Bourne, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The Indiana American has been voted by the State Association; Elder I. W. Lowman, Goshen, Ind., editor.

These papers are published monthly and are uniform in size and in price as follows:

TERMS, POST-PAID:

Single copies, per year								25 cents.
5 copies to one address 1 year								$ 1.00
12	"	"	or 9 to	9	addresses 1 year			2.00
50	"	"	" 40 "	40	"	"		7.00
100	"	"	" 100 "	100	"	"		15.00

Most of the matter in these papers is also used in the Cynosure, and the great object in starting them is to afford friends an extremely efficient and cheap way of introducing and promoting this reform. A few friends could club in together and by raising $15.00 per year, either have the paper sent directly to 100 different, persons or have one hundred and fifty copies sent monthly for distribution.

The influence of these papers for good, when received regularly by 100 families in any neighborhood, can scarcely be overestimated.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1882.

Theological Land-Slides.

Wickliffe and Luther taught theology by giving the Bible to the masses. But they formulated theology as well. This formulation is not to supplant or make a new Bible, but to ward off false doctrine or practice professedly drawn from the Bible which we have, as a church at Salt Lake, might properly put in its formula, that "Divine marriage is between one man and one woman." Thus theology teaches "What Man is to believe concerning God, and what duty God requires of Man;" and is either "expressly set down in the Word of God or derivable therefrom by good and necessary inference."

Now this leaves little or no room for what is now called "progress" or "restatement" in the doctrines of Inspiration, Depravity, Regeneration and Retribution, at least, in the English tongue. The "more truth," which John Robinson believed was yet to "burst forth from the Word of God," was not new versions of established truth, but new applications of divine truth to established errors and corruptions. There are no new continents and islands in our theology or on our globe; and, so, no work for discoverers. We are to use what we have of both to support and save mankind. If new spots are found, they are the same as the old, but merely those not hitherto used.

The English tongue can never yield clearer or shorter theological propositions than, "Man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy him forever." "God is a spirit, infinite, eternal and unchangeable, in his being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness and truth." There never was, nor is likely to be, so favorable a time for clear, unbiased statement of theological truth, as when the above paragraphs were written. Henry VIII. had freed mind from the fear of the pope, and Parliament had cast off bishops and kings; there were no sects yet, and men went boldly to the Bible to learn what it taught.

The present vaunted "progress" in theology, as Dr. Edwards A. Park has recently intimated, is a progress down hill. It is pitching theology toward Sodom, and the world knows and delights in it. Wherever this "progress" comes, family prayer and prayer meetings die out, gradually, as grass died under the hoofs of the steed of Alaric. In the words of Dr. Goodwin at Portland, this progressive theology "explains away sin and its penalty," and "spans the very gulf of perdition with a rainbow of hope." But that rainbow rests on a Satanic mirage.

There is a swing or libration in statements of true doctrine, as in everything else, the heavenly bodies included. Beza, as disciples are apt, had pushed Calvin's doctrine of decrees to an extreme, and Arminius, who studied at Geneva twenty eight years after Calvin's death, was disgusted at Beza's extremes of doctrine, and produced an Arminian land-slide in the opposite direction, which was chiefly remarkable for denying the fag-ends of Calvinism, as taught by his disciples.

Our American theology came to us from an English furnace, which was heated up near half a century after the kindlers of the continental fires had died (1643). The Westminster and Savoy confessions, and the Episcopal Thirty-nine Articles, were all Calvinistic; but not so much so but that John Wesley put the substance of them into "The Articles of Religion" for his Methodist church. Men who study theology in sight of the stake differ little in the doctrines of salvation; and those English Confessions were written by martyrs by the light of the fires which burned them. Our modern "progress" on the contrary is made to meet the exigences of worldly-minded churches, and surely, as Dr. Park says, it is a progress "down hill."

Hopkins and Emmons produced no revivals by their speculations; neither did Tyler and Taylor by theirs; though they produced revivals and were earnest and able men. Hopkins left Barrington for want of hearers, and had like to have met a similar fate at Newport. Dr. Channing's resplendent genius produced a system which was a dissolving view; and Dr. Woods, accounted for years the theologian of the country, did not convince his own children of the truth of his ideas. Such is the fate of stalwart theologians who prefer their theology to salvation and reform. On the contrary "Luther touched the pope on his tiara, and the monks on their belly," and his work flourishes to-day. John Wesley attacked distillers an age before prohibition. He said, "They murder his Majesty's subjects without stint." "They drive them to hell like sheep." And Wesley's "soul is marching on."

Indeed a subtle, malign influence pervades all theological land-slides. The Tyler and Taylor controversy split one theological seminary into two; and its discussions; having an appearance of religion, diverted thousands of good and holy men from the study of the slave question, while yet the war might have been prevented; and Satan seems to be starting another theological land-slide to stave off reforms which are pressing and knocking at the gates of the church.

But, of all land-slides, those are the most fatal which slide the church into the lap of the world. Not to pause upon the apostles of the world and Satan in Chicago, whom the churches have cast off, and who, openly, let us scan the teachings of one who has lately been pronounced, if not orthodox, yet within the pale of orthodoxy. The following excerpts are taken from his carefully prepared statement of what he believes, made to a council:

"Lead to bewilder and dazzle to blind,"

"I believe in one God existing in three eternal distinctions." "That beside the written canon of faith, we have a second source and aid, viz., the Christian tradition." "That man is a spiritual entity or person,"—while God is "three distinctions." "That the atonement is God's satisfaction of himself in his whole ethical personality in the forgiveness of sin." Contrast this with Moody's favorite text, "Jesus Christ died for our sins." "That this present dispensation, or world-age shall come to an end at the day of judgment." And that "for the individual, the day of judgment is his confirmed self-determination to good or evil." And he believes that "for infants, idiots, some heathen, and children born to no moral chance," God will provide "some special unrevealed opportunities for repentance in Hades;" i. e. take them to heaven by the way of purgatory! And to think of a pastor of a popular church including in his statement of his religious belief, things "unrevealed!" These excerpts are promiscuously taken from a mass of like utterances.

Surely the time is come when "men will not endure sound doctrine." Let us fervently pray that "the days may be shortened."

The N. C. A. Board met last week and passed upon the important business of opening an auxiliary office in Washington. Several letters from Bro. Hinman and other friends there were urgent for as little delay as possible, and it was decided to make the arrangement in accordance with their wishes if possible. Secretary Stoddard is this week devoting himself to it. A vote of thanks was given to Washington friends for their generous co-operation. The action of the committee appointed at Batavia in publishing 100,000 copies of the Weed letter was approved, as also the final report of the National Convention and the Morgan monument fund. A deficit of $190 43 was reported in the latter which a former vote of the Board will cover. The extension of the Cynosure list and the interests of the paper as the Association's organ were considered at length. The Board was well represented, only two members being absent from the discussion of these important questions.

Two New Books.—The first, "Holden with Cords," will be ready for delivery, providence permitting, April 1st, 1883; the second, "Scottish Rite Masonry Illustrated" consisting of all the Scottish rite degrees, including the highest or thirty-third. For price and description see next week's Cynosure. All orders accompanied with the cash, received in advance of publication, will be filled at twenty per cent discount on retail and dozen rates and those first received will be first filled.

—We have the pleasure of promising for our next issue the Thanksgiving sermon of Pres. C. A. Blanchard in the union service at Wheaton. For the week following, Dec. 21st, Dr. F. A. Noble, pastor Union Park Congregational church, Chicago, will furnish a sermon for the Cynosure. All will be edified by the perusal of a discourse so scholarly, practical, entertaining and full of Biblical strength.

—Seth Hanchett, the lately elected Republican sheriff of Cook county, Ill., is a member of the order of United Workmen, who are lionizing him. They know in whom to put their trust if they get into legal trouble.

—At a meeting held at Quasqueton, Iowa, Bro. T. F. Blair of that place was appointed chairman of a committee to communicate with the friends of reform in Buchanan county, Iowa, and arrange for the organization of a county auxiliary association. Let all the readers of the Cynosure in that county mark this and drop a card to Bro. Blair saying what they can do to forward so landable an object.

—At a State prohibition convention held in Minneapolis, Minn., on the 14th ult., Prof. E. J. Paine of Wasioja Seminary was made president, and received the special thanks of the meeting for the ability he displayed in managing its sessions.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman wrote on Thanksgiving day from Baltimore where he is hoping to devote some time in useful labor. He finds in some respects a more hopeful state of things in respect to reform work than in Washington. There are Reformed and United Presbyterian churches, which will aid, and five United Brethren churches which—bnt we leave to Bro. Hinman's letter, which will appear in our next, to state the startling condition of at least a portion of these organizations which shonld be heartily committed to our movement for Christ against the Baal worships of the lodges. Three of the ablest of the colored pastors he finds also decided Anti-masons, who have suffered for their convictions. There are also some Quaker churches with which he hopes for further acquaintance. After speaking in the United Presbyterian church on Sabbath he expected to return to Washington on Tuesday evening to fill an appointment to lecture. Our prayers should follow Bro. Hinman in his important work.

—Bro. Trumbull, president of the Iowa State Association in writing of Elder Rathbun's work in that place, says beside that the Grand Army of the Republic is making a new attempt to organize in Morning Sun, and have held one preliminary meeting at which the Methodist Episcopal pastor presided. An open letter was immediately addressed to this minister through the local paper arguing the case on its merits. "No secret organization," says Bro. Trumbull, "shall gain a foothold here without being attacked and exhibited if in our power to show them up." Grand resolve! Let it be made by every minister of the Gospel of Christ and the work is done. The synagogues of Satan will then no longer divide and distract the churches of the true God.

—Rev. H. Cogswell, formerly of Wadsworth and Mansfield, Ohio, where his renunciation of Masonry had a stunning effect on the lodge, is now in Olathe, Kansas. He visited the late Wesleyan conference of that State and during the session gave, says the Wesleyan report, "a crowded house some of his experiences in getting into and out of the meshes of secretism. Such men pursued and persecuted most cruelly by the lodge, merit the sympathy and encouragement of all the friends of righteousness. Other ministers not so marked in their sympathy with us, but more liberal in their criticisms, were present on different occasions during our sessions."

Thurlow Weed.

The Tributes of the Press and the Quaking of the Lodge.

Seldom in any land or in any age has the death of any man, whose reputation has been made without the aid of public office, received so wide and so extended notice as that of Mr. Weed. The New York papers fill pages with the record of his fruitful and eventful life; and the press of the whole nation follows their leading. But while his political career, wonderful in its continuance and influence, has been very fully set before the public, the beginning of that career in the Anti-masonic campaign of 1827-32, receiving its impetus and direction from the thrilling experiences and sound principles of that great struggle; and the record of his Christian life which has been, since the Moody meetings in New York city in 1876, a matter of some publicity and general satisfaction,—these important portions of his life have been passed over with too few words. Exceptions are: The story of the Anti-masonic contest in the New York Daily Times, and the notice of his Christian life which appears, with a portrait, in the Christian Herald of the same city.

But the publication of Mr. Weed's Batavia letter in the Cynosure and by the National Association in pamphlet form has given a new direction to the current of public thought. The Assistant Secretary sent 500 copies of the latter to prominent papers throughout the country, and the reprinting of the statement, together with Mr. Weed's affidavit, entire in the Buffalo Express and New York Sun; and the publication of portions, greater or less, in almost all the prominent daily papers of the whole country (Senator Pomeroy secured its insertion, in whole or in part, in all the dailies of Washington), has been like the explosion of a torpedo under the barnacled old hulk of Freemasonry. The survivors are coming to the surface, and when overhauled are free with their opinions. The force and effect of the blow may be judged by their sullen denials, their brazen defiance, and their dishonorable mention of the dead, while all the rest of mankind are eager to do him honor. The opinion of such a mind as Charles A. Dana, editor of the New York Sun, also indicates its effect when he says Mr. Weed's testimony "is so clear that, were all the parties now living, the alleged murderers might be brought to trial and CONVICTED." But we must give Mr. Dana's editorial in full. It heads the column in the Sun of Nov. 28, while the Weed letter is first on the first page, and reads:

THURLOW WEED'S DYING REVELATION.

Mr. Weed's dying revelation concerning the death of William Morgan is a document of absorbing interest. It clears up a mystery which has overshadowed the public mind for more than half a century. His sworn testimony is so clear that, were all the parties now living, the alleged murderers might be brought to trial and convicted.

"For fifty years has this secret been locked within the breast of the veteran politician. The reasons are manifest. The information was vouchsafed by a participator in the crime. It was given in a friendly spirit, to be used with care as a weapon of defence when Mr. Weed was hard pressed in a court of law. The arbitrary ruling of the Judge rendered its use unnecessary, and gratitude to the friend who proffered it made the secret inviolate.

"The death of all whowere nearly concerned in the disappearance of Morgan unlocked the lips of the only man who retained the secret, and it is now given to publicity for the first time in an authentic form."

A dispatch from New York to the Chicago Tribune, Nov. 28th, says that the publication of the sworn paper caused much comment, and evidently of an excited nature, among the Masons of that city. It is considered by them "one of the most serious charges ever brought against the order."

COL. E. M. EHLERS,

Grand Secretary of the New York Grand Lodge, was interviewed and said: "The story was ingeniously woven, but when you come to analyze it there is little importance to be attached to it. In the first place, all the parties who it is alleged were concerned in the Morgan affair are dead, and consequently cannot come forward to defend themselves. In the next place, you must remember that Mr. Weed was a man of strong likes and dislikes, and would be the last man to let slip an opportunity to vindicate himself when attacked. It is not likely that when Whitney made the confession to him, with a request that it should be published after Whitney's death, Mr. Weed would miss such a chance to get even with his tormentors. But, admitting the truth of the statement, let me tell you there are thousands of Masons who would tell you Morgan was justly punished. We can afford to meet any charges of this or any other character. Masonry withstood the onslaught of 1826 and the two following years, and will be quite unaffected by the present one."

When asked if the order would be likely to take any action in the matter, Ehlers replied, "I think not. I mean, of course, openly. The subject will naturally be more or less discussed in the lodges, but beyond that it is unlikely that any action will be taken."

the Pea Ridge scalper of Union troops and head of the Scottish rite Masons of the South and West, makes this declaration through the St. Louis Republican:

"It is my belief that they killed Morgan," said he yesterday to a Republican reporter. "It would be just as impossible, however, for me to prove that as it would be that they did not kill him. Still, I believe it. If he was not murdered, why did he not come back? I was in Albany, N. Y., in 1831, and I recollect that then nothing else was talked about. Morgan published a book purporting to give an expose of Blue-lodge Masonry. He was taken to Canada, and I suppose they found they had an elephant on their hands and so put him out of the way. I know nothing more about it, though, in all probability than you do, for, not being a Mason then, as I only joined the order in the fifties, I cared nothing for it one way or the other. The story current at the time was about the same as this which has been revived, that he was taken out in the lake and drowned. As for Weed's affidavit, it is nothing new, for several years since I saw this same statement credited to him in the newspapers. It was reported during the excitement over Morgan's disappearance that he was living in Batavia, but as he never came back I never credited it. The Anti-masonic convention was held. Thomas Jefferson wrote some letters on the subject, and there was testimony taken in the courts, but I do not think that the men whom Weed mentions were mentioned at the time. Masons know no more about the matter than anyone else. Perhaps at the time it might have been known among a few members of the lodges in the State of New York. Of course, every man concerned in it, if Morgan was really murdered, should have been hung. In the obligation which a Mason takes it is expressly stated that it shall not compel him to do anything against his conscience or the laws of his country."

REV. DR. JOHN D. VINCIL,

Grand Secretary of the Missouri Grand Lodge of A. F. and A. M., spoke of the story as a slander, the act alleged being opposed to every tenet of Masonry, which aimed to inculcate a beautiful system of morals. The book which Morgan had published was as silly as had been all the professed exposes of Masonry written by men wholly ignorant of what they were writing about, and at no time worthy of serious consideration. The excitement over Morgan had been worked up and nursed carefully for political purposes, but now nothing could revive it.

BEN PERLEY POORE,

the old Washington correspondent and Sublime Prince Freemason, the detractor of John Quincy Adams in the columns of the Atlantic Monthly, and the defamer of Garfield by representing that he was "devotedly attached" to Masonry, went to lodge dances, and was a bibber or "temperate drinker" of beer, Rhine wine and champagne—this aged and bitter Freemason writes to the Boston Journal:

"Careful of his reputation, it was not strange that Mr. Weed, as the end of his eventful life approached, desired to remove the stigma that he had been prominently concerned in extracting a front tooth from the body of a drowned Irishman and of saying defiantly that 'he'll make a good enough Morgan until after election.' His statements about the taking off of Morgan, which are all hearsay, were doubtless believed by him, but they are not evidence. When in Smyrna some forty years ago, I gathered a good deal of information about a mysterious American who had come there soon after the Morgan excitement. He received quarterly remittances, and finally died there. Were I disposed to give hearsay statements, I think that I could show that the mysterious stranger was Morgan, who was paid liberally by the Anti-masons to absent himself, but who hoped after some years had elapsed to return to the State of New York. But I cannot prove the statement, and my own oath would not make my statements of what I saw, heard, and read, legal evidence."

ENOCH T. CARSON

who is known among Masons as Past Grand Master of the Grand Commandery of Ohio Knight Templars, and a representative of that State in the body of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General of the 33d degree gave this opinion to the Cincinnati Commercial:

"Well, it is one of the unsolved mysteries. Morgan disappeared. Nobody ever heard of him. It is like the Baldwin or the Ross murder. It has never been solved. If Morgan was murdered by Masons then I say, most emphatically, it was the most outrageous violation of every teaching and doctrine of that order. That ignorant men commit crimes under the impression that they are fulfilling the law of God or of some society or organization to which they belong, is one of those facts common in the history of the world. Terrible crimes have been committed in the name of religion. It is possible that crimes have been committed in the name of Christianity and Masonry for which neither Christianity nor Masonry is responsible.'

"The statement is false, and yet it is an important one. It involves questions of great interest to every person, it strikes at the very heart of Masonry. I know the thing to be false. I have so written to members of the fraternity in New York to-day. The whole trouble comes from ignorance on the question. Now, there were Masons in New York who, at the time of the dedication of the Masonic Temple in Twenty-third street, New York, called on Thurlow Weed. Well, I have no patience with those kind of Masons, and we don't have them outside of New York, either," said Mr. Carson, warming up—"and don't you forget that." * * * "The order has survived all such attacks, and it will continue to survive them and flourish when Mr. Weed's memory is only known in connection with all that was corrupt in the history of American journalism and politics. There is much said at the present time about bosses. Thurlow Weed was the prince of bosses even down to this present day of Nov. 29, 1882. With him the end justified the means. He was really the father of American political Anti-masonry."

"Mr. Carson, I should like to ask what would become of a man who would expose the secrets of Masonry."

"The only penalties known in the order are reprimand, suspension from membership, and expulsion from the order. That is our capital punishment. A man who claims that Masonry teaches any higher grades of punishment than those is a fool, a knave, or worse, as was Thurlow Weed."

Kansas.

The Kansas State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will meet in convention at the Free Methodist Church, Emporia, at 7 o'clock p. m., Dec. 19th, and continue in session until the 21st. Secretary Stoddard and other active and able workers are expected to be present. The place is central and easy of access, and we urge the friends of reform from all parts of the State to be present. Important business will come before the Association. Come, brethren, "to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty." JOS. ALTER, Sec'y.

HOME CIRCLE.

Cumbered with Serving.

She was cumbered with serving;—the household, the board,
The meal to be mingled, the feast to be spread,—
So she could not sit still at the feet of the Lord
Though her spirit was faint for the heavenly bread.

She was cumbered with serving; the quick tones grew sharp,
There were lines on her brow, there was grief in her eyes;
And no time could she spare for the sweet thrilling harp,
Or the hymn that should gently as incense arise.

She was cumbered with serving; she marvelled indeed
That any could rest while the work must be done,
The work that was pressing, since days with such speed
Fled on till the night, and the fall of the sun.

She was cumbered with serving; the dear Lord was there,—
She could touch Him, could call Him, could bend at his knee;
Yet this was the whole of her querulous prayer:
"O Master, my sister, wilt bid her help me?"

Ah! Martha of Bethany, many there be
Who are cumbered like thee with earth's service this day.
And fettered and weary and fretted like thee
They go to the Master and bitterly pray.

And some of them, matrons, are tired of steps
All over the house from the morn till the eve,
And some of them, mothers, are pale to the lips,
With the tasks they must do or the tasks they must leave.

And their comfort it is, when the great tears well up,
And the soul with endeavor and longing is spent,
That the Lord has compassion, who sees their life's cup
So dark with the brewing of hot discontent.

And his "Cumbered with serving," although it reprove,
And stir them with shame, hath a pitiful tone,
And they hear through its tender reproach the Christ's love
That never lets slip from its clasping, his own.

A Remarkable Document.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT OF PONTIUS PILATE CONCERNING THE CRUCIFIXION OF CHRIST.

A book entitled "Acta Pilate," edited by Rev. Geo. Sluter, late Secretary of Missions, Presbyterian Synod of Missions, has recently made its appearance, and adds much weight to the New Testament version of the death of Christ. It claims to be "important testimony of Pontius Pilate, recently discovered, being his official report to the emperor Tiberius, concern- the crucifixion of Christ."

The editor in his preface says that until now this remarkable document has been concealed among the 24,000 manuscripts in the penetralia of the Vatican. Its existence was known from the earliest periods of the Christian Era, and was familiar to men of letters. It was concealed from the world till 1874, when it was brought to light through the efforts of Dr. Constantine Tischendorff. Through various and authentic agencies a transcript was obtained from the Vatican. The original was so old and defaced that a magnifying glass had to be used in transcribing it by Father Freelin Husin, a monk of great learning, at Rome, and a custodian of the Vatican, who furnished the following certificate: "Rome, Italy, April 25, 1859. I hereby forward the transcript as it is on record in the Vatican, in Tiberius Cæsar's court, by Pilate. I certify this to be a true copy, word for word, as it occurs there. PETER FREELIN HUSIN."

The genuineness of the report is proved by the published testimony of the apostolic fathers and early defenders of Christianity.

Pontius Pilate, in his letter to the emperor says: "One day, in passing by the place of Siloe, where there was a great concourse of people, I observed in the midst of the group a young man, who was leaning against a tree, calmly addressing the multitude. I was told it was Jesus. This I could easily have suspected, so great was the difference between him and those who were listening to him. His golden colored hair and beard gave to his appearance a celestial aspect. He appeared to be about thirty years of age. Never have I seen a sweeter or more serene countenance. What a contrast between him and his hearers, with their black beards and tawney complexion."

Further on in his report, Pilate says: "I wrote to Jesus, requesting an interview with him. You know that in my veins flows the Spanish mixed with the Roman blood, as incapable of fear as of puerile emotion. When the Nazarine made his appearance, I was walking in my basilica, and my feet seemed fastened with an iron hand to the marble pavement, and I trembled in every limb as a guilty culprit, though he was calm—the Nazarine, calm as innocence. When he came up to me, he stopped, he seemed to say to me, 'I am here.' For some time I contemplated with admiration and awe this extraordinary type of man unknown to our numerous painters, who have given forms and figures to all the gods and heroes."

Pilate's report concludes with a succinct yet descriptive history of the events connected with the life and death of Jesus.—Selected.

Some Rules for Reading.

1. Put your whole mind into the business of reading. The counsel to do with our might what our hands or our minds find to do applies with full force to reading. Dawdling with a book is an enervating process. Better read an hour with close attention and vigorous thinking than to read half a day with desultory glances and wandering thoughts. Read while you read: then if you wish to drowse or indulge in reverie, resign yourself to that intelligently. It is easy for lazy minds to cheat themselves with the pretense of reading when they are simply idling. President Porter is entirely right when he says: "Read with attention. This is the rule that takes precedence of all others. It stands instead of a score of minor directions. Indeed, it comprehends them all, and is the golden rule. To gain the power and habit of attention is the great difficulty to be overcome by young readers when they begin. The one reason why reading is so dull to multitudes of active and eager minds is that they have not acquired the habit of attending to books."

I have known persons who had been much employed in reading aloud for the entertainment of others, and who had formed the habit of reading without attending at all to what they read, who could pass over page after page, pronouncing the words properly, and even conveying the sense to others, while they were wholly oblivious of the words they were reading. And there are many who, while reading silently, are addicted to the same vice; the eye passes over paragraph after paragraph while the thoughts are at the ends of the earth. It is a mischievous habit. The power of mental concentration is one on the chief things to be gained in education; anf our reading must strengthen and not weaked this power.

2. When there are others who will join you in reading, it is well to read aloud. Then let every mispronounced word be noted with pencil by those who listen (to be reported and settled afterward,) and every unintelligible statement or allusion be looked up on the spot. Whether reading alone or in company, pass over nothing that you do not understand until you have exhausted all your sources of information.

3. Read, therefore, with the constant aid of as good a supply as you can command of books of reference. Some such books you must have. A good dictionary, for one thing, is indispensable. You might as well think of going to sea without a compass as of reading without a dictionary. The Springfield rule, and I think it a good one, is to "get the best" dictionary. If you cannot afford the "unabridged pictorial," get the completest edition you can afford. A good atlas is also indispensable. An encyclopædia, too, is greatly to be desired. Some of the abridgments are not expensive; the edition of Chambers published by the American Book Exchange is very cheap. The encyclopædia answers the purpose at once of a gazetteer and a geographical dictionary; but if you cannot obtain the larger encyclopædia, get if possible, Champlin's "Young Folks' Cyclopædia of Persons and Places." Use these books of reference freely.

4. Read with pencil in hand; make notes freely of what you read, putting the author's thought, if you can, into your own words. The note-book is an important part of your outfit. Look over your notes when you have finished the book, and if the thought be not wholly familiar to you, turn back to the page and refresh your memory.

5. Read judicially. It will not always do to surrender yourself to your author; prove the things he tells you; hold fast that which is good. Exercise your judgment—your historical judgement, your moral judgment—on all that you read. If any statement seems to you doubtful, weigh it well and see if it cannot be verified. It is not, however, necessary that you should cultivate only the skeptical habit. Presumably your author, knew what he was saying. At any rate, as Mr. Ruskin says, "Be sure that you go to the author to get at his meaning, not to find yours. Judge it afterwards, if you think yourself qualified to do so; but ascertain it first."

6. Remember, finally, that of all the best books—those which DeQuincey ranks in "the literature of power" rather than of knowledge, the books that stir the heart and invigorate the moral nature—the true worth cannot be found out by any who are not themselves worthy. It is the pure in heart who see God, and it is only they who ever clearly perceive the truth of God, whether in words that are written or in things that are made. It is as true of many other books as of the Bible, that the reader gets but little from them because he brings but little power of true discernment to them. "To him that hath shall be given."—Washington Gladden.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

Frolicking Elephants.

The little readers of the Cynosure who take great delight in the playing of their kittens and dogs will be astonished to read that huge elephants can sport with each other in the same way. Mr. Barnum, the great showman, is keeping part of his great collection of animals at his country home at Bridgeport, Connecticut. We have here an account of a bath which the elephant had a few days ago, as told by one who saw the sport in a letter to the Philadelphia Times:

Barnum took a notion to give twenty of his elephants a swim in salt water the other day. Seaside park, near the showman's mansion, is a magnificent area of tastefully improved land, reaching down to the water's edge, and gently-sloping pebbly beach. To this beach the elephants were marched in stately procession followed by an immense crowd, which seemed to embrace half the people of Connecticut. Thousands of people were on hand to enjoy the fun. As soon as the elephants got a sight of the Sound they made a break for the water, with expressions of the most stupendous joy. They showed no desire to keep near the shore, but pushed for deep water, where they began to play with all the heartiness of a lot of school-boys let loose in the surf. Never had elephants displayed to a gaping crowd their capacity for fun and frolic in so pronounced a manner. They frisked like puppies, tumbling each other over in the water and performing all sorts of wild gymnastic feats. Two elephants would sportively go for a third and duck him under the water. Then half a dozen of them would fill their trunks with water and squirt it at each other as children in the surf splash water in each other's faces with their hands. Sometimes an elephant would be missing for several minutes, and people would get an idea that he had sunk to rise no more. But, presently, the round black nozzle of his trunk would appear on the surface, reminding the spectators that a beast with such a long nose can remain out of sight as long as he pleases, if he only keeps the end of his breathing apparatus within reach of fresh air.

"Emperor," the large and unruly elephant, who made such trouble last summer when he escaped at Troy and went on a rampage through the streets of that city at night, showed a sportively riotous disposition. He acted as if he was drunk and wanted to get up a fight among the other elephants. He is next to Jumbo in size, and ten times as frisky. He took several of the little elephants one by one and tossed them over and around in the water as if they were cats. Two or three of the little ones thought it was too much of a good thing, and seemed to want to unite their efforts to play a trick on the monster and hold him under the water. This they tried for a little while, but soon got enough of it. They knew how ugly he could be when he felt like it, and so, after a few weak trials they concluded to let him alone. After awhile Emperor and another elephant nearly as big as himself took a notion to start off twards the Long Island shore. Side by side, as if harnessed together, they swam majestically away, as if to return no more. When they had gone several hundred yards one of the keepers put after them in a rowboat, and soon caught up with them. He had pole with a hook on its end, such as is used among elephants as an instrument of correction. After he had given Emperor one punch with this the beast turned and gave the boat a push with his shoulder, indicative of what he might further do if annoyed. The boat began to fill, and the frightened keeper headed for shore. As he turned the other elephant gave the boat a whack with his trunk, just as a little reminder. For a few moments there was deep excitement among the crowd, for nobody knew but that the creatures might take it into their heads to swim the whole length of Long Island Sound, and thence out to sea. Somebody suggested sending a steam tug after them, and others idiotically proposed harpoons and lasso-ropes. The venerable Barnum sat on the portico of the bathing pavillion, near by, and laughed like a big boy, heartily enjoying the fun, and knowing that the voice of Arstingstall, the chief trainer, would in time avail to prevent the animals from being lost at sea. In a few minutes Arstingstall's word of command was heard from the beach. Instantly the swimmers turned and headed for the shore, greeted by immense cheering from the crowd.

The whole swim of the elephantine party lasted about two hours, to the great delight of the beasts themselves and of the Bridgeporters who were assembled to see them. Interest in the performance did not for a moment flag, though the day was cold and drizzly. The elephants would have staid in the water all the afternoon had they not been commanded to come out. When called to come to the shore they obeyed very reluctantly, performing all sorts of capers. One muscular elephant wound his trunk around one of the posts supporting the platform which extends out from the bathing-pavilion over the water of the Sound. He was about to pull this post up, the effect of which would have been to give a large party of people an unexpected bath. His keeper told him to stop it. With the air of a boy caught in the act of stealing jam from his mother's pantry the beast let go of the post, tucked his trunk under his left fore leg, and ambled ashore.

Arrived on the pebbly beach the elephants had to be chained or hobbled to prevent them from doing mischief as they paraded through the streets to their winter quarters, which are about half a mile from the shore. While the keepers were adjusting the chains the beasts made the most of their opportunity to have some fun with the soft mud at the water's edge in which they were standing. Scooping up as much as they could conveniently handle with their trunks they slung it around at each other and at the bystanders. There was a sudden scattering among the boys and others who were thus visited with a baptism of mud. The chaining completed, the whole party marched off as stately and solemn as if no such picnic as they had enjoyed had ever been heard of. Jumbo was kept at home.

A Pleasant Experiment with Salt.

Do you want to grow salt, and at the same time have an interesting, handsome ornament? The proceeding is a novel chemical experiment that may be tried by any one. Put in a goblet one tablespoonful of salt and one spoonful of bluing. Fill the goblet two-thirds full of water and set it in a position where it will have plenty of warmth and sunlight. In a little while sparkling crystals will commence forming on the outside of the glass, and it is both a novel and interesting sight to watch it gradually growing day by day, until the outside of the goblet is entirely covered over with beautiful white crystals. Another variation of this beautiful experiment would be to take a goblet with the base broken off, and fasten it in the center of a thin piece of board, which may be round, square or oblong. After the crystals have formed on the glass, set it on a tiny wall bracket, and place a bright holiday or birthday card in front of it; this will hide the base, on which no crystals will form. After this is done, fill the goblet with flowers or dried grasses, and you will have a vase which will cost but comparatively little.

The Bible Gentleman.

It was a hot July morning, and old Mrs. Dawes, carrying the clean linen home to the rectory, thought her basket seemed heavier than usual. Johnnie Leigh, the son of the village doctor, overtook her halfway up the hill.

"Why, mother," said he, "that's more than you can manage! Let me have one handle, and then we'll trot it up easily enough."

"The idea," said Fannie Leigh, who came down the lane just in time to see her brother and Mrs. Dawes turn at the rectory gate, "You are a gentleman, Johnnie! Supposing Lady Blake had met you carrying a clothes-basket! How could you do it?"

Johnie whistled.

"A gentleman! Of course I am. I am a Bible gentleman, like father."

Fannie looked puzzled, so Johnnie explained.

"Father said that a Bible-gentleman is always civil to poor people as well as to rich ones; and poor old Mrs. Dawes is my 'neighbor' as much as Lady Blake."—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

Temperance and Legislation.

I think that total abstinence is necessary, and I will turn directly to the question of legislative restriction. Gentlemen, I look around me, not here in England only, but also through all the world, over dependencies over which the sun never sets, and I see the frightful, the intolerable evidences of the devastation wrought by one fatal sin, the sin of drunkenness; and that sin caused by one fatal product, alcohol diluted in intoxicating drinks. I am unable, I have not the heart to-day to touch on one tenth or one hundredth part of the proofs which demonstrate to every serious mind which is at all acquainted with the facts the awful importance of the question. Focus the lurid gleams which flash upward from this pit of destruction and you will see how frightful is the glare. Track the subterranean ramifications of this evil, and you will see how the whole nation is undermined; how every tread we take is over fire ever bursting through the treacherous ashes. It is matter, not of assertion, but of sternest demonstration, that the drink traffic causes the most amazing waste of our national resources; that to it are due, mainly and almost exclusively, the worst phenomena of pauperism; that it causes seventy-five per cent. of those melancholy cases of domestic ruin which fill our police courts; that it contributes enormously both directly and indirectly to the hideous social evil; that but for it, on the testimony of nearly every judge on the bench, crimes of violence would wellnigh disappear; that it is the cause both directly and indirectly of a mostt errible mortality; that it chokes our prisons, madhouses, and penitentaries; that it creates an hereditary taint which makes life a curse to a stunted population; that because of its thousands, aye, tens of thousands of miserable men, and yet more miserable women, and poor little children most miserable of all, lead lives of such squalor and anguish as only they who have witnessed can conceive; that it devastates the humanity, and blights the bodies and the souls not only of 600,000 drunkards, but of the millions which their ruin drags down to shame; that it frustrates our religious efforts at home; that it destroyes and ruins our mission efforts abroad; that it is the chief bane and ruin of our homes; that it is the darkest stain on the glory and prosperity of our nation.

Exaggeration, gentlemen! There is not one word of this indictment which is not true to the letter; not one word of it which is not capable of the most rigorous proofs which evidence can establish and statistics contain. And unless it be proper to say twilight when we mean midnight, if it is no exageration to say twilight when we mean midnight, then it is none to say the blackness of it darkness could only be represented insuch colors as when some mighty painter dips his pencil in the hues of earthquake and eclipse. Those who know nothing whatever about the subject—those who are so unhappy as to be blinded by the possession, in some shape or other, of a share, or a freehold, or an interest in the production or the sale of that which is the cause of all this iniquity—may call this impeachment exaggerated; but they have never shaken, they have never even attempted to shake the damning evidences on which it is founded, and to which concur, with startling unanimity, the testimonies of every single person, and every single class of persons that has in any way, studied or come across the subject. That evidence has been produced in the most public way, and in every possible way, again and again; it has been produced before committees of the House of Lords, and before committees of the House of Commons; it has been gathered for the northern house of convocation, and for the southern house of convocation; it has been collected by statesmen, and collected by political economists; it has been furnishsd from sources the most opposite and the most unsuspected; it is derived from clergymen, and from judges, and from jailors, and from policemen, and from the heads of workhouses and asylums, and from physicians, from publicans, and it stands not only unshaken, but absolutely unchallenged—and more than this, it is constantly admitted, at unguarded moments by the very agents, and the very writers who detest teetotallers, and leave no stone unturned to overthrow the alliance.

We are met by a decrepit witticism and delusive epigram: "You cannot make people sober by act of Parliament." Well, that is a form of fungus of which the mushroom-head ought, I think, to be remorselessly brained with a fan. Gentlemen, it is not true that God cannot, to an immense extent, make people sober by act of Parliament. You can, it has been done over vast tracts of America. It is being done in wide areas of our colonies. It is done in hundreds of our English parishes where the landowner has the wisdom to shelter his people from crime and pauperism by the simple rule, which he, on his single authority, can make, and make unquestioned, but which hundreds of poor men and poor women and poor children on his estate cannot make, however passionately they desire it, and however deeply it affects their social, moral, and religious welfare, namely: That there shall not be a single liquor-shop on his estate. Not make people sober by act of Parliament! Why, at this moment, to their own immense benefit, you are making 20,000 people, among whom are the very worst drunkards in England, not only sober by act of Parliament, but absolute teetotalers by act of Parliament. Who are those? Why, they are poor prisoners now in our prisons, not one of whom from the day he enters prison is allowed to touch a drop of alcohol, and who, in consequence of this restriction, are as a class, in spite of their other disadvantages, so completely the healthiest class of people in England, that there is a lower rate of mortality among prisoners than there is among professional men, and that, as the death-rate stands highest of all among publicans who sell alcohol, so it stands lowest of all among prisoners who are absolutely deprived of every drop of it.—Canon Farrar.

—Alcohol is admitted by every one to be an irritant. If a drop of spirit and water is placed in the eye it will make it smart; if it is held in the mouth it will make it burn; if a piece of lint is dipped in spirit, placed on the skin, and covered with oiled silk to prevent evaporation, it will raise a blister. Its effect on the inside or lining of the stomach is just the same, only we do not feel what is ouching that part of our bodies.—Selected.

school-house northwest of Searsboro'. Here, after spending the night at the hospitable home of Henry Johnson and wife, he started for Marengo, where he was to spend the Sabbath, and then go to Morning Sun and other points in the southern part of this State.

Now, friends of the reform in Iowa, we hope you will not wait too long for a special opportunity for getting the lecturer's services, but write him at once, and keep him busy. He wants work and should have it, and be liberally paid for it, too. We expect him here again next spring to do more work for us, as he had calls here he could not fill this time. I say again, let us give him work and plenty of it. As ever for the war, T. K. BUFKIN.

Bro. Mathews' Visit to Birmingham, Iowa.

BIRMINGHAM, IOWA.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—There has been nothing yet published in your worthy paper of the work of Rev. E. Mathews at this place. He came amongst us on the 12th of October last, and lectured at the United Presbyterian church in Birmingham on the subject of reform, showing the great evils of secretism, especially that of Freemasonry, on the evening of the 21st of Oct. His audience was large and attentive.

On the following Sabbath he preached in the Free Methodist church, the Lord wonderfully helping him to hold forth his truth in such a manner as to shake the sandy foundation of some holiness professors. On Sabbath evening he preached at the U. P. church to a large congregation, where the Lord again assisted him in drawing the line so close that lukewarm professors were made to feel uncomfortable. On the evening of the 23d of October he again lectured at Hebron (a Christian church) to a large audience, on the subject of Freemasonry.

His stay with us was short, though very pleasant, and we trust much good will result from his labors. Bro. Mathews is a real stirring stick for God. Before he came here, the devil was having things pretty much his own way. Freemasonry was seldom disturbed by those whom God had commissioned to preach his Gospel, some holding out the idea that the subject of reform has been agitated enough in this place, and that a better way is not to touch people's idols. God surely then made a serious mistake when he said, Cry aloud and spare not; lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins. Isaiah 58: 1. If ceasing to agitate the lodge be right, then why not cease to agitate politics, or why not cease to preach repentance and faith to sinners? No, sir, this is a trick of the enemy. God's people should be an aggressive people, and when they cease to be so God has no farther use for them. I know something about the wicked and abominable systems of Freemasonry and Odd fellowship. I have been behind the scenes. God in his mercy has saved me out of them, and commissioned me as a watchman on the walls of Zion to faithfully warn the people of their wickedness. "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land" Jeremiah 5:30. That thing is Freemasonry. Shall we quietly close our mouths, and cease to agitate the subject of a vile system that is doing more to create infidelity than all other systems combined? I am a Methodist, and free: yet I have had Free Methodist preachers try to quiet me, or tone me down from raising my voice against a wicked and vile system that God has saved me from. God pity them and give them more of the Apostolic fire is my prayer. When it comes to the pass, that Freemasons will endorse Free Methodist preachers, and call them good sort of fellows, you may rest assured their system is not disturbed by them; and yet I have known this done here in this place. I am glad the Lord sent Bro. M—I pray the Lord to keep him filled with Holy Ghost fire. Amen. Yours for reform, J. W. HOUGH.

—We are told by a correspondent that the vote of D. B. Turney for Congress in the 16th Illinois district was 7,569; this was largely an anti monopoly vote.

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

Nominations for 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
of Illinois.

For Vice-President.
JOHN A. CONANT.
of Connecticut.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

In North Carolina the Republicans were the saloon party and the Democrats prohibitionists. The Republican State Convention held last July at Raleigh, the State capital, passed the following as a part of their platform:

"RESOLVED, That the Bourbon leaders of the Democratic party are responsible for the passage of the prohibition bill, and the agitation resulting therefrom, the said bill having been rejected by a vote of the people; and the Republicans of this State, in maintaining the fundamental principle that a majority must rule, request their candidates for the Legislature to vote for the repeal of said prohibition bill, and against all similar measures."

—The Detroit Evening News, has the following election note from Holland, Ottawa county. "The following are the Republican majorities: Holland City, 24 for the State and Congressional districts. Holland township 67 on the State, and 75 on the Congressional ticket. Zeeland, 180 majority for governor and representative in Congress. The vote polled was light on account of the new registration. The Anti-masonic element again raised its feeble form but only succeeded in polling a few votes for their 'American' ticket." We do not wonder that the poor fellows endeavor to excuse the littleness of the above figures. They are a pretty meager showing for the "great Republican party." We are inclined to think however, that the "feeble form" above mentioned had more to do with this showing than the "new registration.' It takes a good deal of pinching to fetch out a groan like the above from the "great party."

A Hint.

Voters for American candidates who do not see the record of their ballots in the official reports, please read, mark and inwardly digest this case. Soon after the November election the Anti-monopoly party representatives met in Chicago and found that a number of their votes had not been returned by the judges of elections. They adopted resolutions setting forth and condemning the fact, and determined to prosecute the delinquent functionaries. The Legal News says, editorially, on the matter:

"If the matters stated in the above resolutions are true, then the judges of election have been guilty of a great crime and ought to be punished for it. The fact that three or four citizens voted this way or that way, when their votes do not change the result, is not of much importance to the public, but when the judges fail to count their votes or take any notice of them in their return, it is evidence of fraud or criminal carelessness. If the judges can refuse or neglect to count three votes, they can three hundred, and if three hundred they can three thousand The result of an election count should be verity itself. There is no safety in any other rule."

Essay on Christian Politics.

PRESENTED BY THE EDITOR OF THIS PAPER AT THE WESLEYAN METHODIST MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION CONVENED AT PITTSFORD MICH., NOV. 14 AND 15 1882.

The assignment of such a subject as that of Christian politics, for presentation at an association of ministers such as is convened here to-day is a step in the right direction. As straws indicate the way of the wind, so this assignment may be regarded as an indication of the approach of the long looked for, and much needed reform, which must come speedily or we, as a nation, must perish. Too long have the politics of our country been managed by ungodly men. While we do not, and cannot tolerate the idea of the union of church and state, we hesitate not, to say, that Christianity in politics is the only remedy for our national ailments to-day.

God is the author of pure politics, and should be consulted and recognized, in political matters as in all other matters. It has ever been the political history of governments, that so far as nations have failed to recognize, and trust in God's guidance, just so far have politics become corrupt and ruin and disaster followed. Our own history as a nation is proof of this. Our Puritan fathers struck Plymouth Rock with their knees, and lifting their hands to heaven, invoked, first of all, the blessing, guidance and protection of the Christian's God, who gave to this world the only true science of government. And had not their sons refused, or neglected to follow that example, peace would have been continually within our palaces, and prosperity within our gates. We are aware of their presence and influence, who say it is not necessary that a candidate for public office, should be required to express his belief in Christ or the Bible. But, notwithstanding all this, we say we hope and pray, that for our nation's well-being, the time may speedily come when no man, whatever other good qualities he may possess shall be eligible to office, and especially to one of the high offices of this government, except he be a Christian. Scripturally speaking, no man is qualified for office except he be a child of God. Paul says, speaking of rulers, "They are God's ministers." He says also concerning the subject of government, "If thou doest evil, be afraid, for he (i. e. the Christian ruler) beareth not the sword (i. e. his authority) in vain." But, he says, "He is the minister of God to thee for good." Happy is the nation which hath such rulers: cursed are we, for our great men are not men of God. Political reformers may compass sea and land, advocating this measure and that, but until a reform is advocated and pushed to speedy success, which calls this nation's attention to the God of governments, and humbles us before him, there will be no lasting reform. Reform to be lasting, must bring Christ out from Pilate's hall, down from the cross, and up from the grave, to which the official Judases of this government have betrayed him. God in the Constitution, the Bible in schools, a proper recognition of the Christian Sabbath, the prohibition of the importation, sale and manufacture of intoxicating drinks, and the suppression of all secret societies from within our borders, are reforms immediately sought for, and needed now. These can only be brought about by making the politics of our nation Christian in every respect. Christianity in the White House, in Congress, in the Senate, is really what the people are longing for, and hoping to see. When at Washington, Senators and Representatives carry Testaments instead of whisky flasks, when in place of Congressional drunken debauches, are held Senatorial and Congressional prayer-meetings, it will be to us what the birth of the Son of Mary, was to the shepherds of Chaldea—the dawning of a brighter age. Then will we say with Simeon of old: "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

"Happy is that people that is in such a case, yea, happy is that people whose God is the Lord."

Complete self-forgetfulness is the surest way to reach completeness of character.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

—Prof. L. N. Stratton of Wheaton Theological Seminary preached at a union service at Sycamore, Ill., on Thanksgiving day. The Wesleyan and College churches of Wheaton met in the church of the former on the same day and were addressed by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.

—A letter from G. H. Filian, the Armenian brother ordained at Wheaton last May, tells us that he hopes to start for his fatherland and life work in April. He is meantime speaking in New England, awakening an interest in Armenian evangelization, and preparing for his journey and future work.

—Thirteen new theatres have been built in Berlin in ten years, and in the same time only two churches. The downward progress of morals in that city may be gauged by the statement thus made.

—Dr. Sheldon Jackson has returned from a visit to Alaska. He located for the Board of Home Missions 160 acres for the Indian Training and Industrial School, and erected a two-story mission house, 100x50.

—Of the Moody and Sanky meetings in Paris, M. Reveillaud writes: "There has been nothing more beautiful and more powerful than these great gatherings which have each evening filled the nave, the choir, the platforms, and the galleries of the vast temple of the Oratoire. Notwithstanding the hindrances of a foreign tongue, and the difficulty of interpretation (a difficulty marvellously overcome by the linguistic skill of M. Theodore Monod), these crowds were held for the space of two or three hours, hanging upon the lips of preacher and singer, without a symptom of weariness or fatigue. Never before in our experience have we borne away from a religious assembly so deep an impression of these thousands assembled in one place, these bowed heads, these bended knees, this genuine Gospel unity and brotherhood, which induces the pale-faced workman from Mr. McAll's meetings to rub elbows with the white-handed fine lady. Large numbers requested prayer, and publicly expressed their desire to become Christ's."

William Taylor.

The General Missionary Committee of the M. E. Church, at its late session, discussed the relations of the Missionary Society and the church with William Taylor's missionary work. Bro. Taylor is a noble man, and has done very marked and successful work for God. Especially is this true of the United States, of India, and of Africa. There is a phase in his South American work, however, which has made it principally a spiritual failure; and this defect and failure we have been seeing for a considerable time. The discussions of the Missionary Committee bring the matter prominently forward. His mistake has been in sending out men and women as school teachers rather than as evangelists, as scientific men rather than as gospel men; that is, school work has been made the principal work, and gospel work incidental. It appears that they have been prohibited, by contract, from doing religious work in their schools. We do not know of but four men, and perhaps one or two women, who have been expected to work, and have made religious work their prime effort. These are Bros. Birdsall and Lapham at Aspinwall, Bro. Hoffman in Northern Patagonia, and Bro. Krauser, first in Northern Patagonia, and now in Valparaiso. We hear that Bro. Taylor has "sent forty men to the West Coast; twenty-two of these have returned, and seven more will before the end of this year, leaving only fifteen on the field." Bro. Taylor is just started for South America, we believe; but we do not know his designs.—Christian Harvester.

Week of Prayer for 1883.

The following programme has been designated by the Evangelical Alliance:

SUNDAY, Jan. 7.—Sermons: "For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the Man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all." (I. Tim. ii., 5, 6).

MONDAY, Jan. 8.—Praise and Thanksgiving: For the long-suffering love and faithfulness of God, and for his continued mercy and goodness; for the progress of the Gospel, the gift of the Holy Spirit, the revival of true religion; for the preservation of peace among the nations; and for all temporal blessings. Psalm ciii.; Isa. xxv.; Psalm cvii.; I. Thess. i.; Psalm xxxvi., from 5th verse.

TUESDAY, Jan. 9.—Humiliation and confession: Of unfaithfulness to Christ, divisions among the Lord's people, and want of brotherly love; of pride, self will, and worldliness; of national sins, especially intemperance and licentiousness, the desecration of the Lord's day, the spread of skepticism and infidelity, and the prevalence of disorder and violent crime. Psalm li. and cxxx.; Jer. xiv., 7-10, 20-23; Luke xv.; Lam. iii., 12-41; Hosea xiv.; James iv.; II. Cor. vi.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 10.—Prayer for families—for parents, children, and the household—that all connected with the training and education of the young may be deeply impressed with the vital importance of Scripture instruction, and that the absolute need of the power of the Holy Spirit in all departments of this great work may be realized; for the cultivation of every moral virtue; for integrity, purity, and piety in the home life; and for a special blessing upon Sunday-schools. Deut. vi., 1-16; Psa. cxxvii.; Eph. vi., 1-18; Deut. xxxiii., 12-16, 24-29; Prov. viii.; John xiv., 12-17.

Thursday, Jan. 11.—Prayer for the Church Universal—for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit—that all ministers of Christ and those preparing for the ministry may deeply realize their responsibilities and their need of the Spirit's teaching and power; that their testimony before the world may be open and faithful; that sound doctrine and holiness of heart and life may prevail in the churches, and false teaching and superstition be counteracted; that all the children of God may be filled with earnestness and zeal in seeking to gather in the lost; for a rich blessing upon efforts to promote union and brotherly love; and for afflicted Christians everywhere. Joel ii., 23-31; Acts ii., 32-41; Isa. lv.; Eph. iii., 14-21; I. Cor., xii., 1-13; John xv., 12-27; Phil. ii., 1-16; Psa. xcv.

FRIDAY, Jan. 12.—Prayer for Nations—for Sovereigns, Rulers, and Magistrates; that all laws favorable to cruelty and vice, the opium traffic and intemperance, may be abolished; for the better observance of the Lord's day; for for peace and good-will among men, that all may yield obedience to the powers that be, and that the spirit of lawlessness may be subdued; for the cessation of war; that the pursuit of literature, science, and art may be influenced by the fear of God; that all people may be turned from their sins, saved from unbelief, and brought to know Christ as their Saviour; that God's ancient people, the Jews, may be delivered from their oppressions, and all persecuted Christians be relieved. Matt. v., 1-16; Prov. xxi., 1-13; Rom. xiii.; Psa. cxliv.; I. Peter i., 13-25; II. Tim. ii., 1 21; Acts x., 34-48; Rom. xiv., 1-19; Jer. xxx.; Mark x., 28-45.

SATURDAY, Jan. 13.—Prayer for Missions: that all missionaries, and others engaged in mission work and in the circulation of the Scriptures, at home and abroad, may be filled with the Holy Spirit, and that great success may crown their efforts; that all native Christians may be kept steadfast in the faith, and made earnest and efficient in seeking to bring souls to the Saviour; that many more faithful laborers may be called into the Lord's vineyard: that the Mohammedans and the heathen may be won to Christ, and that the Jews may be constrained to receive him as their long-expected Messiah; that the blessing of God and the power of the spirit may abundantly rest upon the conference of Christians of various nations proposed to be held this year in Stockholm. Luke xxiv., 36-53; Luke x.; 1-16; John xvi., 1-15; Acts xi., 1-21; Psa. cx. and Psa. c.; Rom. xi.; Ezek. xxxvii., 21-28; Isa. lii, 7-15.

SUNDAY, Jan. 14.—Sermons: "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." (Titus ii., 13.)

Literary.

LETTERS TO CARDINAL MCCLOSKEY by Rev. James A. O'Connor, pastor of the Independent Catholic Church of New York. This volume of letters is now issued in a second edition; they first appeared weekly in the columns of the New York Witness and though not so learned as the celebrated letters of "Kirwan," they may be in many cases equally effective and valuable, on account of the experiences of the author. The questions discussed are the power and luxury of Romanism, celibacy, convent life. Virgin Mary, Confession, the use of wine at Mass, and the way of salvation as taught by Christ and by the priests. Published for 25c. by James A. O'Connor, 42 S. Washington Square, New York.

A Lecture on the Inspiration of the Bible, by H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian. Boston, delivered before the Sixteenth Annual Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association, of Mass., in 1881, and subsequently repeated by request, in 1882, at the Sixteenth Annual Convention of the Y. M. C. Association of Maine, has been issued in pamphlet form to meet a wide demand. To all who are familiar with Bro. Hastings' incisive style and originality of thought through the columns of the Christian, this address will hardly need recommendation. It is one of the best arguments on this question ever issued in so small compass and cheap a form.

The Century, while it does not in the current number reach the superlative as last month, has yet very able articles on the Supreme Court, which with its illustrations, sets before the reader the character, surroundings and methods of that august body in a most clear and able manner. The sketches of the Chief Justices, and especially of John Marshall and his great decisions touching upon the character of the federal compact of the States, are a valuable study. Washington Gladden tells how the "Christian League" met the questions of establishing a mission church, paying a church debt, temperance work and caring for the poor. These articles on practical Christian union are full of suggestion and should be read by every pastor. Mr. Cushing begins the story of his adventures among the Zuni Indians and illustrates abundantly the peculiar life of this sun-worshiping tribe. "The Taxadermist Art" is the best illustrated article and "The Problem of Spelling Reform" by Prof. T. R. Lounsbury one of the best things that has been written on this subject.

The North American Review for December is a strong number, opening with a tripple article on the health of American women by Dio Lewis. Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Dr. James R. Chadwick. The question seems to be settled by this three-sided attack. One gets a blow at the corset, indoor habits, long skirts, and tight shoes; another at the "feminine" occupations, so-called; the third, writes of the physical difficulties peculiar to American women like a skillful and learned physician. This is good reading for mothers. Gov. Sherman of Iowa writes fairly on the temperance struggle in his State. Gen. Grant comes near having a hobby in the matter of Fitz John Porter. His attempt at vindicating that cashiered officer only results in conspicuous failure. It has, however, drawn out a demolishing reply from Senator Logan of Illinois in the Chicago Tribune. If Gen. Grant had remembered that the whole case as it is before him has also been before Congress and the people, he would hesitate at so partisan an article. Prof. R. A. Proctor writes on the "Influence of Food on Civilization" and Prof. George P. Fisher on "The Decline of Clerical Authority" both learned and able.

—The MS. works of the physician Galen, which were supposed to be lost, have been discovered in Salonica by a M. Papageorges. They dated from the fifteenth century and appear to have originally formed 248 sheets; 144 are in good condition, twenty-four are mutilated or worm eaten and eighty are missing.

—Heaven will pay for any loss we may suffer to gain it; but nothing can pay for the loss of heaven.

HOME AND FARM.

Cheap Food and Good Food.

Dr. Dio Lewis says: To make the best bread that can be made of wheat, obtain good wheat and grind it without bolting, mix it with cold water until it is as thick as it can be well beaten with a spoon; after it is thoroughly beaten down, put it into a large iron pan composed of many little ones, which must be first made hot; put it then quickly into a hot oven, and bake it as rapidly as possible.

Indian corn makes excellent nourishment. It contains a large amount of oil, has remarkable fattening qualities, and is likewise remarkable as a heat producer.

Rice keeps its consumers fat, but it lacks the elements which feed the muscles and the brain.

Potatoes, both Irish and sweet, are very poor for brain and muscle.

Of meats the best for heat and fat are pork, mutton, lamb, beef and veal; for muscle, brains and nerve, beef, veal, mutton, lamb and pork.

In cold weather, fat meat, butter and the like will keep the body warm; and in warm weather, milk, eggs, bread and summer vegetables will keep it cool.

There is no difficulty in a poor man's having meat for his family every day. Take, for example, what is called a shank of beef. The very best can be bought for a fraction of what the dearest parts cost. A single pound cooked in a stew with dry bits of bread will make a meal for an entire family.

How do you Keep your Room.—A look into a girl's room will give one an idea of what kind of a woman she will probably become. A girl who keeps her clothes hung up neatly, whose room is clean always, will be very apt to make a good wife and successful woman. Order and neatness are essential to our comfort as well as to that of others about us. A girl who throws down her things anywhere, will do things in a slovenly, careless way. A girl who does not make her bed till after dinner (and she should always make it herself rather than have a servant to do it) and throws her dress or bonnet down in a chair, will make a poor wife in nine cases out of ten. If all the world could see how a girl keeps her dressing-room, many unhappy marriages would be saved. Always be as tidy about your person and room as if all your friends could always see you. Get into the habit of order and neatness, and it will come easy in life afterwards.

Night Lights in Bed-rooms.—The common practice of having night lights in the bed rooms of children is deprecated by Dr. Robert H. Bakewell. He says it has a most injurious effect upon the nervous system of young children. Instead of the perfect rest the optic nerves ought to have, and which nature provides for by the darkness of the night, these nerves are perpetually stimulated, and of course the brain and the rest of the nervous system suffer. Children thus brought up are excessively timid for years after on going into the dark. If a light is used at all it should be turned down to a mere point, and placed where it cannot be seen by the child.

Feeding Swine During Winter.—Swine should be fed oftener than twice daily, and during the winter the first feed should be given moderately early, and the evening feed should be given not at 4 or 5 o'clock, as is the custom with many, but at about 6:30. Fourteen or fifteen hours between the evening and morning feeds are periods altogether too long for comfort and profit, as the appetite is liable to become ravenous, the animal gorging itself unduly.

A Large Farmer.—At the session of the Tariff Commission at Rochester, Mr. Hiram Sibley of that city was presented as the largest farmer in the world. He leases to tenants 143 farms, cultivates a larger number under his own direction, owns the Howland Island farm in Cayuga county, said to be the largest in New York State, and an estate in Ford county, Ill., of 40,000 acres.

The census informs us that there are 12,611,148 cows in the United States. This shows a cow population equal to about one fourth of the human population. The estimated value of these cows is $323,746,646, or about $27 each. The cows are not distributed among the States with much regard to population. In Iowa there are 845,000 cows, while in Louisiana, with about the same number of voters, there are only 115,000. The average value of a cow in the Southern States is only $16. In New England it is between $30 and $32. California holds fair rank among the great dairying States, being the sixth in valuation. The States which have a higher valuation are New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and Iowa. Michigan, Indiana, Wisconsin and Kansas have nearly the same in number, but their valuation is less. The number in California is 487,000—valuation $16,051,792.—Call.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge aud Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legslly attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich , snd oth rs. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozcu, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illnstrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprisiug the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers. 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths aud penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massschusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introdnction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refnsing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defenso presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antsgonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents esch; per dozen, $1.25

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry 15 cents each: per dozen $1.25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

FOR SALE BY

EZRA A. COOK,

No. 7 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

In the Coils; or the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historial sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of every-day life, and showing how individual, domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. Parents who wish, not only to keep their children out of these night-schools of Satan, but to give them arguments against them in the most attractive dress, will do well to purchase this book. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen. $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Stearns' Review of Two Masonic Addresses. In this scathing review the lying pretensions of the order are clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Letters on Masonry. Showing the antsgonism between Freemasonry and the Christian religion. Paper cover, 30 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen, $7.50

Freemasonry and the M. E. Church. Let every lover of truth and justice read this report of the trial of Rev. J. T. Michael, showing how he was driven out of the M. E. church for opposing Masonry and loving Methodism. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate, and afterward in pamphlet form. The Evangelical Repository, reviewing it, says: "This pamphlet consists of a series of articles originally published in the Church Advocate, Lancaster, Pa. Elder M. S. Newcomer opposes secret societies, and especially Freemasonry and Elder G. W. Wilson defends the system. We are free to say that Mr. Newcomer has thoroughly routed his opponent at every point. Mr. Wilson speaks by the book, as he is a Royal Arch Mason." 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louiss Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—Attorney-General Brewster states that he has instructed special-counsel George Bliss to indict the members of the Parker-Saulsbury Star-route combination if a grand jury could be found to make such a presentation. All attempts at compromise have been sternly rejected by Mr. Brewster.

—H. P Lee, President of the recently-suspended First National Bank of Buffalo, has been convicted in the United States Circuit Court at Syracuse, of embezzling $200,000 of the bank's funds, and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment in the Erie County Penitentiary. Last fall Lee was the stalwart candidate of Western New York for the office of State Treasurer, and came near securing the nomination.

—David Lee (white) was lynched in front of his house at Storr's Landing, La., for hog stealing. Some of the lynchers are threatened with a dose of their own medicine.

—Last week there were 186 business failures in the United States, an excess of fifteen over the preceding week, and an increase of twenty-eight over the corresponding period in 1881.

—Thurlow Weed's will was filed Friday, and bequeathed the bulk of his property—between $500,000 and $700,000—to his three daughters and six grandchildren.

—Near Union Point, Ga, a double rail way collision occurred in a deep cut, a passenger running into a freight train, and another freight crashing into the passenger train. Though one locomotive exploded and another engine and several cars were wrecked, all the passengers escaped.

—The steamer Cedar Grove, from London, for Hilifax and St. John, struck the rocks off Cape Canso, and sunk shortly afterward. A boat, containing among others, the captain, chief officer, and a lady passenger, is missing, and is supposed to have been lost.

—At the Coliseum Theater, Cincinnati, Frank Frayne, an actor, shot Annie Von Behren dead while attempting to shoot an apple from her head. He fired with his back turned to the victim, and it is claimed the accident was due to a defect in the rifle. Mr. Frayne was placed under arrest.

—The Canada Pacific Railroad Company has raised its capital stock from $15,000,000 to $100,00,0000.

—The last of the new procedure rules of Parliament were passed Friday evening, after which there was much applause.

A PLACE FOR YOUR DICTIONARY,
A PLACE FOR YOUR NEWSPAPERS,
A PLACE FOR YOUR PERIODICALS,
And an ornament for your house, all in one,
THE NOYES DICTIONARY HOLDER.

A thousand dictionaries in out-of-the-way places will not instruct, while a single dictionary, the Holder, will instruct a thousand. In fact the Holder is the great helpmate of the great lexicons and in making these vast stores of learning available, is second only in importance to the lexicons themselves. The Holder is now made in five styles, but especial attention is called to the Lacquered White Holder, the finish of which is more durable and brilliant than nickel, and has much the appearance of silver. This finish consists of a heavy metal plating, is exceedingly attractive, and will withstand any amount of rough usage. The Tilting Top Holder is meeting with great favor wherever seen. A neat attachment is now made for holding newspapers and magazines, thus bringing together the publications most constantly referred to. Papers, periodicals, dictionaries, all in one handy piece of furniture. Price, $3.00. Send for them now. Address I. W. NOYES, 99 & 101 W. Monroe St., Chicago.

MASONIC BOOKS

FOR SALE BY

EZRA A. COOK,

7 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

Books sent post-paid on receipt of retail price, but books by mail are at risk of person ordering, unless 10 cents extra is sent to pay for registering them, when their safe delivery is guaranteed. Books at retail ordered by express are sold at 10 per cent. discount and delivery guaranteed, but not express paid. Postage stamps taken for small sums.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicographer, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority because they tell too much.

General Ahiman Rezon and Freemasons' Guide. By Daniel Sickels, 33d degree. The most perfect Masonic monitor published in the United States. Embellished with many engravings and containing monitorial instructions in the degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Masons, with explanatory lectures, the ceremonies of consecration and dedication of new lodges, installation of officers, laying foundation stones, dedication of Masonic halls, burial services, Masonic calendar, ritual for a Lodge of Sorrow, Masonic trials, etc. Bound in fine cloth, extra large 12mo, $2.00.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the entire ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Scores of Masons have privately admitted that this is a standard text-book in the lodge and is strictly correct; but publicly it is not acknowledged as authority, though many officers of the lodge make use of it. Price, in cloth, $2.50.

Female Masonry. Manual of the Order of the Eastern Star. Containing the ritual, symbols, lectures, etc., of the five degrees of "Adoptive Masonry," Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, profusely illustrated and handsomely bound. Price, $1.50.

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. A practical guide to the ceremonies in the degrees conferred in Masonic Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated edition. In cloth, $1.25; in paper, 75 cents.

Although this Monitor is extensively used by the lodge, especially in conferring the higher degrees, it is publicly called an exposition, and not allowed as authority.

Sickels' Freemasons' Monitor. Containing the degrees of Freemasonry embraced in the Lodge, Chapter, Council and Commandery, embellished with nearly 300 symbolic illustrations, together with tactics and drill of Masonic Knighthood. Also forms of Masonic documents, notes, songs, Masonic dates, installations, etc. By D. Sickels; 32mo. In tuck, $1.50; cloth, $1.00.

Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry. Containing a Definition of Terms, Notes on its History, Traditions and Antiquities, and an Account of all the Rites and Mysteries of the Ancient World. 12 mo., 526 pages, $3.00.

Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, or Monitorial Instructions in the Degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Mason, with Ceremonies relating to installations, dedications, consecrations, laying of corner-stones, etc. Price, $2.00.

Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, or Monitorial Instruction Book. By Albert G. Mackey, Past General High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of the United States, Knight of the Eagle and Pelican, Prince of Mercy, etc. Price, cloth, $1.25; tuck, $1.75.

Mackey's Text-Book of Masonic Jurisprudence. Illustrating the laws of Freemasonry, both written and unwritten. This is the great law book of Freemasonry. 570 pages. Price, $2.50.

Allyn's Ritual of Masonry. Illustrated by a large number of engravings, and containing a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, Orange and Odd-fellows' Societies Price, $5.00.

TOPICS OF THE TIME.

The arrangements for the corner-stone laying of one of the finest buildings in Chicago, and the peer of of any commercial structure in the world, are all made for Wednesday the 13th inst.; but if we were speaking for the secret order self-styled "Hiramites," we should say to the honorable committee of arrangements, You have made a serious omission—a great blunder. Nowhere appears any notice or recognition of our "ancient and honorable fraternity." An explanation is due. The answer might be: We do not care for a repitition of the farce at the Government building in 1874, when the work was delayed seriously to accommodate the lodge and its 24th of June saints' day. A secret lodge of bakers, tailors, lawyers and confidence men have no business with any corner-stones but on their own premises. It is perfectly evident that assiduity in Freemasonry is at the expense of business integrity and success. For these and other reasons too numerous to mention, we are clear in saying to you gentlemen of gaveled morals, Hands off. Our Board of Trade has sins enough to answer for without assuming those of Freemasonry, and our new Chamber of Commerce must be built by other rules than those laid down in your trestle-board.

Like a small boy after a parental admonition, Congress presents to the watchful eyes of the nation an appearance of hopeful industry. The House has already passed two appropriation bills, the Diplomatic and Indian, and the Post-office, Army, Fortification, and Military Academy bills are expected to be ready for the Senate before the close of next week. So excellent is the disposition of that body that it may even postpone the holiday adjournment, so as to hasten its business. If this exhibition of virtue is due to the Democratic party we may yet refuse our thanks since the benefit was unintentional. There is one question which this Congress should take up, since it is in so good and obedient a mood. The amendment of the Edmund's Anti-Mormon law is imperative. The experience of the Utah Commission is conclusive that the bill has come far short of its promises, and the necessities of the case. Though it disfranchised some 16,000 Mormons, the rulers of the sect, who are among the number, rule none the less surely. Their will is still the law. A memorial from the non-Mormons of Utah has been presented to the House. It says: "The Mormon people regard the past efforts of the National Government as weak and futile, and as indicating that the Government is not in earnest in its avowed intention of suppressing polygamy and priestly domination in civil affairs in Utah. The laws already enacted have served only as a gentle irritant, have consolidated the people, strengthened the control of the Mormon priests over their followers, and failed to diminish the celebration of polygamous marriages, for the reason that they regard the church superior to the Government." The memorial asks that a Council be appointed by the President who shall have legislative powers.

The transit of Venus on the 6th inst. was a matter of some moment in astronomical circles, because the planet will not again pass between us and the sun for over a century. The significance of this position lies in the fact that more careful approximation of the distance from the earth to the sun may be made from observations made at such a time than from any other data. It is of no importance to astronomical investigation whether this distance is 95,000,000 miles or 93,000,000 or 193,000,000; for from the earth to the sun is the astronomical unit. Irrespective of miles or kilometres this distance is unity and all the dimensions of the solar system are expressed by it with great exactness. But when the science is to be brought down to the comprehension of common folks who know how long a mile is across a prairie it is convenient to give the astronomical scale in miles. Astronomers vary in their estimates of the mile-length of this unit and hence the desire to obtain accurate observations of this phenomenon. The hope was fulfilled except to those who used only smoked glass, and when the results have been figured out we shall know better how hot it has to be at the sun to break up a spell of zero weather.

The first blow at the Irish secret societies was the conviction of the seven murderers of the Joyce family. The assassins of Lord Cavendish and under-secretary Burke have not yet been discovered, and the reward of 10,000 pounds sterling for their conviction having passed its limit of time, the offer has been renewed for six months, with minor rewards offered to draw out a word from some informer. The authorities have the horse and car which drove off on that fatal evening with the four assassins, but the driver and his bloody passengers are yet entirely unknown. The government, by removing all trials under the act suppressing the secret orders to Dublin, has been much more successful. The country juries were hardly better than those with which Victory Birdseye and John C. Spencer wrestled in western New York after the Morgan murder, so widespread is the lodge contamination among the peasantry of Ireland. Fair juries have been obtained in Dublin where the Joyce murderers were tried. But another danger threatens. Judge and jurors must face the assassin's dagger in every dark corner. Last month an attack was made on Judge Lawson by a man armed with a revolver, though he was guarded by two policemen and two detectives. In Dublin the "Moonlighters," Fenians and "Whiteboys," the Thugs and Nihilists of Ireland gather. Within a few days these assassins of lodgery have shot a detective, stabbed a juror and a bailiff, and produced a small "Reign of Terror" about the Dublin courts. The government has, therefore "proclaimed" the city under the Repression act, and all persons found on the streets at night unable to give a good account of themselves will be arrested. Some American journals howl at this as an act of tyranny, very conveniently forgetting that Chicago was put through the same severe regimen just after the fire to the perfect satisfaction of all good citizens.

The Cloture and the British House of Commons.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES, A. M.

There is an amusing story told in England of a negro that once lived in the State of Illinois, who was condemned to die for murder, claiming, according to custom, the privilege of singing a hymn when on the scaffold prior to execution. On reaching the 157th verse the sheriff thought it was time to claim the right of carrying out the sentence of the court. More than two years ago Wm. Parnell and his Land-league followers tried to outdo the negro by constructing a hymn having in itself a power of endless reproduction. Every verse of this wonderful composition is an exact facsimile of every other verse. One verse of this work of art may therefore be taken as a fair sample of the whole:

"Obstruct, obstruct, obstruct, obstruct,
Obstruct, obstruct, obstruct;
Obstruct, obstruct, obstruct, obstruct,
Obstruct, obstruct, obstruct."

After listening to the strain for more than two years, sung to the tune of the Sham-patriot's Lament, Mr. Gladstone claims the privilege of carrying out the sentence of the nation with regard to progressive legislation. The Conservatives have joined the sham-patriots of Ireland in their opposition to liberal and beneficient legislation. A little disorder, however, has arisen from the fact that Sir Stafford Northcote and Lord Randolph Churchill are both anxious to ride the same horse without either of them sitting behind—a feat which, while ambitious, lacks dignity. Mr. Parnell declares that it is highly necessary for Ireland that the legislative efforts of Mr. Gladstone should be defeated, and the Conservatives think it equally desirable, in order to make way for their own elevation to power; and so patriotism is being sacrificed to partyism. To carry on the warfare of obstruction, gifted men like Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett, who is credited with the ability to speak on any subject he does not understand, from everlasting to everlasting, are called into requisition. Prince Bismarck's definition of a debater is, one who argues questions which have been long decided by practical men. If meetings of other public bodies can do their work in a reasonable time, surely Parliament ought to be able to do the same. We fail to see how the reasonable rights of minorities are to be endangered by stopping talk, when nothing fresh is being contributed by the speakers. The right of majorities has of late been fearfully invaded by the twaddle of minorities. The danger to liberty of speech mainly comes from vanity, loquacity and unbusiness-like aptitude. If any argument is wanted to prove the necessity of closing a debate when it is finished, it is the opposition during the recent sitting of the House on the cloture, when twenty nights were consumed in talk before the first resolution could be passed.

Call it by the Right Name.

BY J. N. NORRIS.

Many of our speakers and writers when handling the subject of Freemasonry and kindred brotherhoods, use one word in designating them that seems to me clearly out of place. I allude to the use, or rather the misuse, of the word "institution." This word lends them too much dignity, so to speak. It invests them with too much importance in their own estimation, and in the estimation of those who have given but little thought or attention to the real character and legal status of such brotherhoods.

"Institution," according to Webster, is: 1st, "The act of establishing; 2nd, establishment. That which is appointed, prescribed, or founded by authority, and intended to be permanent." By what authority is Freemasonry founded, and intended to be permanent? In what good sense, then, can so-called Freemasonry be dignified with the title of "institution?" With all its puerility, profanity, mockery, blasphemy, despotism, degrading rites and false pretensions, is it a good and desirable thing to be perpetuated? Satan's kingdom will stand firmly while it has such an ally.

There is another brotherhood having a striking analogy to Freemasonry, viz., the brotherhood of piracy, which is also a secret association or conspiracy, and whose oaths, obligations and penalties cannot, by any possibility, be more wicked, savage and revolting than are those of Freemasonry. How much propriety would there be in dignifying piracy with the title of "institution?" So, also, in relation to Masonry. It is the prostitution of a good word to a bad use. It seems to me the names clan, cabal, or junto, would infinitely better designate the character, the designs, the aims and the ends of both, than would the respectable word institution. Both are secret conspiracies against all outside of their given pale. Freemasonry can be nothing but a detestable clan, or cabal, in the most sinister acceptation of these sinister words—a cabal which by intrigue, by secret signs, tokens, grips, obligations, etc., possesses itself of place and power, of honor and emoluments to which it has no just claim, and which it could not obtain by open, honest fair-dealing.

Wherein is it better, then, than piracy? A man may be a pirate and also a worthy brother in Masonry. (See Mackey's Mystic Tie.) Even a mountain robber may be a good and worthy brother Mason. (See Masonic Review, 1858, vol. xviii., p. 350.) The presumption is that pirates, like Masons, are bound to keep all the secrets of their clansmen, in order to shield them from the consequences of their crimes. We know this is the case with Masonry, for the obligations of the "sublime degree" except two crimes only—"murder and treason," and they are optional; and in the Holy Royal Arch degree" there is no exception. What mighty difference then is there between the two? If antiquity has a sanctifying and hallowing power as Freemasons would have us believe that it has, they must most assuredly yield the palm to piracy. The latter is more than 165 years old, while speculative Masonry is that old and no more.

Here the analogy between Freemasonry and piracy ends. The latter is a little more modest in its pretensions than is the former. It does not claim to be respectable, even. It never boasts of its charity, benevolence, morality, etc. It lacks the brazen impudence of Masonry, which claims to be divinely inspired, and given of God. Piracy don't insult the common sense of all Christendom by claiming to be the pure essence of religion, conferring the new birth, not only upon impenitent sinners, but also on so-called preachers of the Gospel; nor of three degrees being all that the soul of man requires, (see Gen. Aliman Rezon, p. 189.) Piracy does not descend the immeasurable depths of solemn mockery, to the unblushing blasphemy and to the deep damnation that Masonry does in its bold hypocrisy in claiming to be a sovereign religion.

Not every one who has been entrapped by or who is connected with the clan is a Freemason at heart. The great bulk of the clan, no doubt is made up of honest, well-meaning but mistaken men, men who by obligations blindly assumed, have yielded private judgment, and freedom of action, to be awed, subjugated and manipulated by bad men—the worst men in the lodge; and it is notorious that such generally rule them.

While we are free and glad to make this concession, we have no doubt (to use the words of a veteran in this reform) "that the spirit of Masonry is the spirit of murder, and of every crime this side of it." Then let us not lend to Masonry a seeming respectability which in no wise belongs to it by calling it an institution; and by so doing prostitute a good word in designating a miserable cabal, whose esotery and exotery show it to be a degrading burlesque on all that is great and good.

Masonic Symbolism.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

We know of no religion with such an array of symbols as the religion of Masonry, unless it be the ancient pagan worship, from which the former is evidently evolved. One of their symbols is certainly singularly apt. On page 22nd, of "Scottish Rite Masonry" is the tripple triangle with corrugated crimson plate with mica reflector and argand, gas burner representing the sun. Forming the extreme border, which encircles all, is seen a snake, which seems to have the peculiar marks of the rattle snake, and (to complete the circle) his tail is pushed into his own mouth. We may thank the craft for, at least, one appropriate emblem. Did the author intend to make his symbol suit the facts: Is this serpent picture to symbolize "the old serpent who is the devil and Satan," who seems to be the "Royal Arch" conspirator against God and our world? He did claim the world to be his, and once offered to give it away to Him whom Masonry now discards, on the condition that He would fall down and worship him. Christ declined the present, on the proffered terms, with an emphasis which put the old serpent in the rear. For this he had good reasons, as "He upholdeth all things by the word of his power" and had a better title to the world than the devil or even Masonry itself; which now seems to rival Lucifer in many ways. While so many of the clergy and the churches, seem more than willing to come within the slimy folds of this serpentine circle, thank God, the Father of Jesus, a goodly number, more than seven thousand, are by him reserved, who have not bowed to the image of Baal.

We must concede to the craft great discrimination in selecting the serpent as the all-embracing symbol of the order. The analogy between them is perfect, and whoever selected this symbol is entitled to the title, "Perfect Master." The habits of the snake are those of the lodge in every main feature.

Another feature of this serpentine ring is in its self-swallowing attitude. In 1880, the report of the "Grand Secretary of the Knight Templar conclave in Chicago showed an increase of the Knight Templar Masons up to date, but a decrease of membership in the lower degrees of about 20,000, up to 1879. This looks like the head swallowing the tail of the serpent. "So mote it be." May the head grow hungry for Knighthood till it makes clean work of the body, like the fabled snakes, which, beginning at each other's tails, went into mutual annihilation. There would then be as much of his snakeship as the world ever needed.

SECRETISM.—The Ashantees and other negro tribes have supreme rulers who make and unmake, create and destroy, as the whim seizes them. But we do not believe there is a tribe, nation, order, society or association in the world outside of barbarism, with eighteen thousand people that are ruled by a self-elected tribunal, with supreme power, that are answerable to no one; and can be called to no account by the people they assume to govern; who tax their subjects at will, vote themselves salaries, make the strictest laws, rules and regulations, and enforce them, yet when a vacancy occurs in their numbers elect another law-maker without consulting the eighteen thousand people governed.—Royal Templar.

REFORM STORY.

Holden with Cords.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LITTLE PEOPLE," "A SUNNY LIFE," ETC.

Chapter XXXI—New Scenes and old Faces.

Let the reader imagine me a necromancer whose magic wand, waved lightly over him, has the power of putting him to sleep for about forty years; for though a great many things may happen in that period of time very interesting to the world at large, to say nothing of minor events equally interesting in a smaller way to the individual, none of which would be omitted by a conscientious historian or a careful biographer, I am neither the one nor the other. I am simply telling the story of my experience with Freemasonry; and if, when nearly all the States passed laws prohibiting extra-judicial oaths, and the churches of Christ everywhere disfellowshipped adhering Masons, the institution had actually died down as it feigned to do I should probably make this my concluding chapter, or what is more likely the case, not written any story at all, preferring to let the dead bury its dead in decent oblivion.

But the wounded dragon of Masonry did not yield up its life so easily. At the South, under cover of the night-dark wing of slavery it hid in shame and dishonor, to slowly recover from its grievous hurt, and finally creep forth again into the light—not always under its true name—while brave men and women fighting with tongue and pen for the freedom of the slave never dreamed what chains were forging in secret; or how in their own free North, the time would come when under the intimidating power of the lodge, men dared not freely discuss its claims; when editors of religious journals would refuse, in their craven fear of losing patronage, to publish articles against it; and even the Christian ministers, while hating it at heart, should be afraid—Oh, shame!—actually afraid to stand up in the pulpit and speak God's truth concerning it.

But in passing over such an interim of time there must necessarily be many scattered threads, which it behooves one to gather up and knit in one general whole before I proceed further.

Of the score or scores of persons, actually participating in the murder of Morgan or consenting thereto, only five were convicted. Loton Lawson was sentenced to two years' imprisonment; Nicholas G. Cheesboro to one, and Eli Bruce, Edward Sawyer, and John Whitney to varying terms of one month or more, and this was all that resulted from four years' trials and investigations.

That these men were considered by their brethren of the lodge, not as convicted felons but as martyrs to the Masonic cause may be inferred from the fact that they remained in full fellowship therewith as members in good and regular standing; that they were visited daily while in jail by their Masonic brethren, in many cases accompanied by their wives and daughters; that they were furnished with every luxury money could procure, and when their term was up escorted from prison in triumph. But O, most benevolent Masonry, where were thy bowels of compassion for many an unfortunate brother confined within those very walls, not for kidnapping and murder but for debt?

Darius Fox came unexpectedly back to Brownsville about a year after his sudden flight—nowise improved by his stay among the wild and reckless characters of the Western frontier. Why he chose to run the risk of returning; whether he had been led to believe that all danger of conviction was over, or whether his course was dictated by mere braggadocio, is more than I can say. But he talked swaggeringly about having "come back to stand his trial," and had his small circle of admirers, who surrounded him in store and tavern, and praised and cheered him as if he had done a very brave and plucky thing in returning.

Perhaps he had overlooked the possibility that some of his associates in evil might turn State's evidence against him. A few days after his unexpected appearance in Brownsville one of the men convicted of abducting Morgan gave testimony in regard to his own share in that transaction that would inevitably have consigned him to a felon's cell had he not been found dead the next morning. The cause of his sudden death was said to be apoplexy, though a story never exactly authenticated was whispered about and believed by many in Brownsville that he had really hung himself in a moment when remorse and fear of punishment so acted on a mind unbalanced by drink as to drive him to self-destruction; and his family, to avoid the dishonor attaching to the name of suicide had attempted to cover up the fact by ascribing his untimely end to a cause which was not the true one.

But whether he met death by his own hand or in the common orderings of Providence, Darius Fox went to his own place where in the course of years all his companions in crime followed him; into that dim eternity towards which the evil and the righteous are alike hastening, where the deeds done in the body are either angel's wings ever raising us higher in the scale of purified being, or weights sinking us deeper and deeper into into the pit of final despair.

For three years the proprietor of the Park Tavern tried to carry on his business in the face of wrongs and outrages that in number and petty malignity fell to the lot of no other Anti-mason of those days. Hear his own words on the subject:

"My help was hired to leave me; others sent who after being hired would get in debt and prove unfaithful. Sham sales of stage horses would be made to unprincipled drivers who would keep their horses at my house on usual contracts, and when a quarterly bill was presented against the ostensible owner it would be shoved off upon the driver who was irresponsible and would abscond; or it sued, pay the debt on the jail limits. Merchants with whom I had dealt would divide my accounts and sue me on each day trade, causing me to pay unnecessary costs."

Nor did they stop short at personal violence, as witness his further testimony:

"My furniture was injured, and in my attempts to save it from destruction I have been choked in my own house till my family were alarmed lest my life should be taken. All this was done with the avowed intention of tempting me to commit assault and battery, or seek redress by law suit that they might avail themselves of the law to destroy me effectually."

The fight was too unequal. What chance had one man, however just his cause, against hundreds working in secret conclave to accomplish his ruin? Mr. Greene disposed of his business in Batavia, and as a public lecturer did more perhaps than any other man to enlighten the public mind on the real nature of Freemasonry.

Undaunted by opposition, undismayed by danger, though he once came very near sharing the fate of Morgan, he kept on his way, lecturing, editing, publishing, side by side with a young man, Lloyd Garrison by name, who had just heard the bugle call to another conflict which was destined ere long to be the one great absorbing issue that should swallow up all others.

The Liberator and the Anti-masonic Christian Herald were both published in the same building and delivered by the same carrier—but while one waxed and grew the other waned before the new struggle for human rights. And when a terrible punishment was at last meted out to us, when every newspaper was like the prophet's scroll written throughout with mourning and lamentation and woe, when Rachels wept their dead in Northern and Southern homes alike, who saw the secret hands working in darkness and silence to prolong the contest?

Good patriots on the Union side blushed for the cowardice and incompetency that stayed idly in the trenches for weeks and months; that led hosts of brave men to inglorious slaughter or disgraceful flight before the enemy. Could they have known that promotion did not depend on bravery or merit, but on the number of Masonic degrees; could they have witnessed those secret midnight meetings when Northern generals fraternized with the enemy, they would have had a better understanding of the whole subject. And when the guns of the Rebellion were silenced and the smoke cleared away, could they have seen delegations from Northern lodges on a visit to Southern cities uniting in brotherly union with Knights of the Golden Circle, these same good people would not have been so slow to recognize grinning under the mask of the Ku Klux the same old enemy against which Samuel D. Greene so faithfully warned his countrymen.

He died on the threshold of the on-coming struggle—a new struggle with an ancient foe, and saw not its end. Pursued even to the last by the unsparing hatred of the lodge he died as he had lived, boldly testifying to "the truth as it is in Jesus" against every unfruitful work of darkness," and now translated into that great "cloud of witnesses" perhaps he does see the end after all.

Bright, mischievous brother Joe married early in life a fair acquaintance of Brownsville, who I have reason to suspect was the same he accompanied home from Jake Goodwin's party; and emigrated to Kansas in the early stages of its struggle to be a free State, where as a friend and associate of John Brown he participated in more than one stirring scene of that eventful era.

Sam Toller has long since passed from earth, but there is still a circle slowly narrowing who hold him in kindly remembrance.

Luke Thatcher has represented his native State in the Legislature, and is looked up to by his neighbors as an honest, far-seeing man who is always on the right side of every social and political question.

Mr. Jedediah Mills lost his law-suit and his farm—a result not hard to predict from the beginning. Anxiety and trouble so wore upon him that he did not live long after; and another name was added to that hidden roll of martyrs to the lodge which God keeps in his secret place against the day "when he maketh inquisition for blood."

Mark Stedman's life has been one of constant warfare with every prevailing and popular form of sin. When the Anti-masonic excitement died away, and even he believed that the lodge had fallen never to rise again, he turned his attention to the crime of American slavery. At a time when the mere avowal of Abolitionist principles cost more than the present generation can readily conceive, he preached, prayed and worked for the emancipation of the slave. And careless of fine and imprisonment, out of his own slender store he and his good wife Hannah sent many a fugitive rejoicing on their way towards the North Star,—a work in which Rachel and I not infrequently had the pleasure of helping, for both families left Brownsville and moved to Ohio about the same time, where we settled in easy visiting distance of each other.

We are a staid, elderly couple now, Rachel and I, with a number of grandchildren to spoil, and one or two grown up fledglings still lingering about the home nest. But our little David never went forth with sling and stone against any of these moral Goliaths that from time to time have come out from their Philistine fastnesses to defy our American Israel. One bright summer day we laid him under the green grass in Brownsville cemetery; and on another summer day as bright, there came to our home a second little David. He sleeps in his nameless grave at Antietam. Still another of our boys donned the blue and marched proudly away to die by slow starvation in a Southern prison.

Oh, it is not in hours of joy that hearts knit together the closest and strongest! From that mighty baptism of anguish Rachel and I came forth united in the grand fellowship of suffering without which love is like gold that lacks the test of the crucible.

And now having brought my story down to Anno Domini 1870 or thereabouts, I take it for granted that the reader is sufficiently interested to wait its further development, first promising that the end is not far off.

For with Rachel and I the shadows are beginning to stretch eastward. She sits shelling beans in the porch which commands a view of rich Ohio cornfields basking in the August sun, a gray-haired, placid-browed matron. But the fires of youth flash still from her brown eyes showing that she has not materially altered from the quick, imperious Rachel of former days.

If any one doubts it let him rouse her indignation by some act of meanness or duplicity, and if he don't have cause to remember that day as long as he lives I am very much mistaken.

The Sermon.

PREACHED THANKSGIVING DAY, IN THE WESLEYAN CHUROH, WHEATON, ILL., BY PRES'T. CHAS. A. BLANCHARD.

Oh give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever.—Ps. 136:1.

If we are to estimate the importance of duties by the frequency of their mention, the duty of returning thanks to God for his goodness is of the greatest moment. Over and over again in many forms we are exhorted to praise him, give thanks to him, magnify him, etc. This probably arises from two facts: first, that the duty is essential to a worthy life; and second, that it is much neglected. It is natural for man to forget God, and to ascribe all the blessings of his providence to chance, nature, or his own exertions. Hence in the mad race which men run between the cradle and the grave they too seldom stop to give thanks to God for his goodness. They congratulate themselves when they have "good luck." They are glad when things "happen" to turn out well. Miniature Nebuchadnezzars walk the earth in every direction saying, "Is not this great Babylon which I have builded?" Men also praise one another, to receive as much again. Mutual admiration societies are numerous, largely attended and apparently interesting to the members, but there are too few who obey the injunction of our text and give thanks to God.

Another thing to be observed is that we are thus to render him thanks

BECAUSE HE IS GOOD.

Men too frequently offer thanks and praises to their fellows because they are rich, or popular, or powerful. Moral excellence which is the standard of worth in God's kingdom, is lightly esteemed in that portion of it which Satan has usurped. Now in the text our minds are directed to this fact, that goodness is the ground of all rightly ascribed honor. Do not give thanks to God because he is mighty, because he has founded the earth, stretches out the heavens, and fixed the stars in their distant orbits. Do not praise him because from the foundation of the world he has known all things, because the lightning of his eye pierces that thick cloud which hides the future from mortal sight. Give thanks unto the Lord because he is good.

I have said that this duty is sadly neglected, who does not know this. How seldom do we hear in our meetings the trembling tongue telling the goodness of Jehovah. We have confessions of sin, prayers for pardon, entreaties to the Holy Spirit, none too many of these, but along with them there should be doxologies of loftiest and most earnest tone. There is no doubt that a failure in this regard is the occasion of many an unanswered prayer. "In all things by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving make known your requests unto God, and then the peace of God that passeth all understanding will keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." Phil. 4:6.

Should there be those here this Thanksgiving morning whose hearts are cold, whose hopes burn low, who feel that God is far away from them. Let such burdened hearts recall the countless mercies of God, tell him of the undeserved bounties which his hand has heaped upon your heads, and you will find the hot, dry eye moistened, and the cold, dead heart warmed and overflowing with gratitude and love. Give thanks to God; for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever.

SPECIAL MERCIES CALL FOR SPECIAL THANKSGIVING.

There is sometimes a disposition to generalize in religion, after the recommendation of the boy who, weary of the giving thanks at table, requested his father to ask a blessing over the meat barrel so that it would last all the year. It is not well thns to do, but it is wise to give particular attention to those times and places in our individual or national history when God has in special manner exhibited his goodness to us. The event to-day commemorated is one of those times when God most evidently appeared for our fathers' help. You are all familiar with the story. A group of shivering men and women huddled in the log cabins, on an iron-bound coast, far from the homes of their childhood and the graves of their fathers, while three thousand miles of long, lumbering billows rolled on the wintry sea between. The provisions are exhausted and starvation, that had already blotted out more than one colony, looked in at every door and snapped his jaws in hideous delight. They appointed a day of fasting and prayer during which they might entreat the protection and care of God. As the hour for service approached some watcher on the beach catches sight of the rounded sail and sends through all those famished homes the glad cry of, "A ship from England." The vessel drops anchor in the bay. The fainting and hungry are refreshed and then they gather in the log church to "Give thanks to God, for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever."

Ab uno disce omnes. From a single event understand the character of our whole history. It can be described in one word. It was providential. How did it come to pass that this continent of noble rivers, lofty mountains and wide extended plains, was hidden from the darkened millions of Europe and Asia until 1492, when the mind of the world was waking from its sleep of a thousand years and the printing press had just commenced to shoot its blazing arrows through the thick night of ignorance and superstition? What was it which sent educated men and women of gentle birth across the sea to live among savages? They were compelled to come. As the eagle when she sees that her brood are strong enough to fly, scatters the nest she reared with loving care on some rocky craig, and then pushes her young over its edge. And as they flutter a moment in fear, and then delighting in their new found powers soar away above the mountain summit to bask in presence of the sun, so God first educated our Puritan ancestors and when they were trained, hurried them out of the old land where they would. have gladly attempted to put the new wine of liberty into the old bottles of kingly power, and enabled them to lay here the foundations of a state, which despite all its defects, is to-day the strongest, freest nation on the globe.

The hand of God is not less evident in the events which attended the struggle for independence, and the civil strife which a few years ago rocked the nation to its very foundations and threatened our complete overthrow. We are evidently directed by an omnipotent hand and shall doubtless find, year by year, continned reason to do as the Psalmist exhorts us in the text. Let us, however, leaving the past, confine our attention for a little time to the mercies of to-day, and first to those of a

TEMPORAL CHARACTER.

These are obvious and so great that the mind staggers in attempting to sustain them. Other nations are in war or sustaining vast armies in expectation of it; we are in peace at home and abroad. Other nations are wrestling with difficulties respecting the ownership of land which will never be settled until the men who till the land own it: our old States have not a tenth of the population which they can sustain, and millions of acres on our western border are still waiting for the first plowman's furrow. Last July throughout the length and breadth of our land men trembled for fear of their crops; now, wheat is counted by hundreds and corn by thousands of millions of bushels. A year or two since whole towns were depopulated by yellow fever; this year no pestilential disease has invaded our homes. We have had fire and flood but they have done their work of ruin on limited areas, and as a people we are in prosperity. Food and fire, shelter, air and water are the happy possessions of a large majority of onr people. The burdens and miseries of general pauperism are still afar off and, recognizing God as the author of all the works of nature, we should to-day return our hearty thanks for these unmerited favors.

THE PROGRESS OF REFORM EFFORTS

is another occasion of thanksgiving, and this also is evident on every hand. In the temperance cause there are solid gains in public sentiment with temporary back-sets which occur in all movements, material and spiritual. The adoption of the amendment in Iowa was a glorions triumph of the people and the politicians. The people won a victory in that they recorded their votes against that immense evil; the politicians that they avoided all responsibility for it by calling it non-partisan, so that now there is a law with one to enforce it. In Kansas also there is a seeming victory for the rum trade that will result in an onward movement all along the line. The Republican party attempted to play double—to carry both parties: those who favor and those who oppose the enactment of temperance laws, and were overwhelmingly defeated, as it deserved to be. The Democrats boldly avowed their adhesion to the rule of King Alcohol and were not defeated as they deserved to be. But Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin, is written on the brow of any party which attempts to champion the cause of the saloon, and if the Republican party wish not to undertake the battle of home protection, there will be a party which will take up the glove so insolently thrown down by the liquor traffic and fight the fight out to the end. Conventions are being held, papers printed, tracts circulated, the nation educated and God is marching on. Let us to-day give thanks unto God, for he is good. All the attributes of his natnre are against a triffic like the one in ardent spirits, and he graciously permits us to see the work of reformation going on.

THE MOVEMENT AGAINST SECRET SOCIETIES

is also widening and deepening. The erection of the monument to William Morgan, the convention held at its unveiling, the letter of Hon. Thurlow Weed, the newspaper discussion provoked thereby, and the whole tone of public sentiment are indices of and means to produce great resnlts. All Christians should for this give thanks. Secret societies are in nature and tendency hostile to everything that is good. They protected slavery, they protected the rebellion, they protected the whisky ring, they are protecting the liquor trade, their obligations bind them to aid one another in distress and though some of them are worthy men, others interpret this to mean men who stand at the jndgment bars of courts justly accused of crime. In addition to this they rival and supplant the Christian church in their ceremonies, use vainly and irreverently the name of God, and sacreligiously mouth the awful words of Holy Writ. It is not needful to say that some men called Masons, Odd-fellows, etc., are not in sympathy with the unChristian, unrepublican and unsocial conspiracies. Only the past week one who is called a Mason and has never publicly seceded from the order, said to me, "Secret societies are of no use, they train men to lie. I have no care for such organizations." The number of snch men is increasing on every hand and is yet to increase. Multitudes of these men are now in the condition of the man who had the wolf by the ears, they are afraid to hold on or let go, but other multitudes have let go, and other multitudes still are slackening their grip. A brother said to me the other day, "Now that the secular papers are printing on this question, the religious papers will get courage and print too." There is no doubt at all respecting the matter, the east is reddening and though clouds and storms may at times obscure the sun it will by and by reach high noon.

Another sign of the times for which we ought to be thankful is the led by Father McNamara. Catholicism in the United States is not the Catholicism of Enrope; that of 1882 is not that of 1100. But there is in the system the virus of ecclesiasticism, that deadly poison which crucified Christ and slew the holy apostles and martyrs. Hence when we learn that more than five hundred priests have written this brother, who in the providence of God leads in this Catholic reformation of the nineteenth century, asking what they they can do for deliverance from the iron yoke of the church, it is a matter for which we shonld give thanks. The Inquisition is a thing of the past, but the Vatican decrees are melancholy witness that the spirit of the Inquisition still exists and waits only opportunity to throw off its shepherd's cloak and again put on the shirt of mail. The decree that sent men to dungeon and rack for having in possession the word of God is no more, but a Catholic Bible is so costly that the mass of the church are ignorant of it, save as expounded by a priest. We shonld therefore be grateful that in this free air the spiritual chokedamp of past ages is so dissipated and weakened that those who in former days might have been willing slaves now try the bars of their prison-house and look with at least a measure of desire upon the green fields and blue sky of that land where there is one Master, even Christ, and all men are brethren.

Once more we have occasion for gratitude in that the work of the

is extending, the society now employing five agents instead of one, and the public taking a greater and more intelligent interest in the question than in former times. It is needless to say that much remains to be done, but something is already accomplished and there is more to follow. There is a very general apprehension that the only thing desired by those of us who wish for national reform is the insertion of a recognition of God's authority in the document which lies at the foundation of all our laws. It is no exaggeration to say that there is not a single advocate of the cause who ever made any such proposition. We do not want the words there that the nation may be Christian, but we desire that a Christian nation should have a Christian constitution. We do not want a constitution verbally right while the people are wrong. We desire that the people should be right that the fundamental law may not be wrong.

Every school boy knows that the Constitution cannot be amended without the consenting desire of about three-quarters of the people. Unless these people wish a change none will be made. Our business is to get them to desire it. We have now no foundation for any of our distinctively Christian laws. The Sabbath, profanity, marriage, and similar laws all depend upon common consent rather than the Constitution, while the law against Mormonism which is now and seems likely to remain a dead letter, is in direct violation of its provisions. The National Reform Association has for its purpose the education of the American people on this question, and its work is extending.

These are a few only of our occasions of thanksgiving, but these are sufficient to make us grateful and glad. God is reigning and all his enemies are being put under his feet. Let us then as we go from this place of prayer reconnt our individual, family, and national blessings, praying that God may still let the light of his countenance fall upon us for Jesus'sake, to whom with the Holy Spirit be praise and glory and honor forever. Amen.

Thurlow Weed as a Christian Man.

ON THE TRAIN NEAR LOCKPORT, ILL., December 4, 1882.

After reading letters of encouragement from Senator S. C. Pomeroy and others at Washington that came in just as I was leaving Chicago, I have looked over a few numbers of the Tribune, thoughtfully handed me by Mr. Carpenter. Reports of Mr. Weed correspond in the main with what he said to me when at his house in September last, although some incidents of especial interest to me are omitted.

As yet I have seen very little mention of Mr. Weed's religious belief or Christian experience. Of this he spoke freely to me. His conversation, or perhaps I should say relation, was based upon two fundamental facts, which he assumed rather than stated formally, viz., natural depravity and the atonement. In proof he spoke of the profanity, corruption and licentiousness prevalent in New York, and our large cities, and then of the wonderful change wrought in these "habitations of cruelty" by the transforming power of the Gospel. He spoke in the highest terms of Mr. Moody and Sankey, and was enthusiastic in his approbation of their work in lifting up the poor and outcasts of New York. He mentioned Jerry Mc Auley as an example of what the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost would accomplish in the lowest and most degraded of men.

After Mr. Moody and Sankey left New York he endevoured to still push on the work. To obtain means for the purpose he applied to Jay Gould for a contribution. Mr. Gould received his request kindly and asked, "How much do you want?" Mr. Weed declined naming any sum, and as they parted Gould said, "I am interested in this work for the poor, and think sometimes that I am overlooked in such things. You may draw on me monthly for what you think I ought to pay." Mr. Weed accepted the kindness and drew on Mr. Gould for $100 per month for some time, and his drafts were always honored. The fact that Mr. Gould was giving money to Mr. Weed became known to the politicians, who asserted that it was corruption money and not for the poor; and to avoid the speech of these men he discontinued his drafts.

In speaking of personal experiences and the desire of his own soul, Mr. Weed said, "I have long wished for some proof outside the Bible, that there was such a person as Jesus Christ who appeared at the time spoken of; and I have been accustomed to inquire of clergymen whom I have met if there was anything of the kind to be found. Not that I doubt or question the fact for a moment, but it would be a great satisif I could find something of the kind." I refered to Josephus. He replied, "You know that has been called in question. There is a letter by an old Roman General, that was for a long time admitted as authentic, but of late the authenticity of this has been denied. I used to publish that letter once and sometimes twice every year in my paper, and was very reluctant to give it up; and have been encouraged by Dr. Hall and others to hope that subsequent investigations would remove all doubt of its genuineness."

Mr. Weed, in speaking of the order of his household, said, "I am accustomed to attend to the reading of the newspapers, and receiving friends during the day until 9 o'clock in the evening. We then spend an hour in reading some standard history; after which we have Scripture reading, followed by a prayer from this book (handing me a book of private prayer). I then retire to my room and there, after reviewing the mercies and blessings of the day, offer up my prayer of thanksgiving to God and commit myself to his care for the night."

Mr. Weed related his experiences and the longing of his soul in such an artless, childlike spirit, that he impressed me with the feeling that I was in the presence of one who was not only near the end of his journey, but that he was one with the Father, having his life hid with Christ in God. The little book he gave me I shall cherish as a memento from the hand of one great among the most distinguished of earth, and whom I believe now to have excelled his highest earthly fame, as the light of heaven exceeds the darkness of earth, by having escaped the corruption that is in the world, and become a "King and a priest unto God forever and forever."

E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec.

—The news of this letter is too good to be lost, even if long delayed: "The leaven of Anti-masonry is still at work here. I had a long conversation Saturday with a personal friend of mine—a Knight Templar and an Odd-fellow. He is weakening a great deal for him, and said to me frankly, 'I am not near so good a Mason as I used to be.' I think some day he will take a stand with the Anti-masons."

—Here is more of the same sort: "Since I saw you I have had a conference with our pastor on the snbject. While an adhering Mason, he has not been into a lodge for many years—has no sympathy with the lodge and in his own language, considers the teachings of the institution 'mere bosh.'" The same writer gives several other similar facts.

—Mr. Tanner is in Tennessee and reports himself "as well as usual."

WORCESTER, MASS., Dec. 5th, 1882.

No recent event indicates a more marked change in public opinion concerning this reform than the general discussion going the rounds of the press concerning the "dying revelation" alleged to have been given by Thurlow Weed. Five years ago the press of the country closed its columns completely to all discussion adverse to Freemasonry and treated every effort to put facts before the people as an affrontery. Now the paper which has not published a synopsis of Mr. Weed's letter to the Batavia convention is considered behind the times and wanting in enterprise. Under a variety of startling captions the papers have given with fairness Mr. Weed's account of the abduction and murder of Capt. Morgan, and some cases editorial comments have also accompanied the historical article.

In giving a history of Mr. Weed's life it is also noticeable that no endeavor has been made to suppress his Anti-masonic record but abreviated accounts of political Anti-masonry have appeared in due proportion. To the younger portion of the people these facts will come like a revelation, for the press has so long accustomed itself to the suppression of facts that young politicians are in total ignorance of that chapter of American history. A kind Providence has unlocked the doors of the press and a beginning is made of a discussion destined to become general in years to come.

There is an amusing side to these publications and we must be pardoned for a little laugh at the expense of "enterprising journals." Some of the leading New York and Boston papers lead off in the publication of the facts, making it appear as if their reporters caught the message from Mr. Weed just as his last breath was leaving the body, and thus the long kept "mystery" was finally solved. The Boston Traveller gives its contemporaries a side thrust after this manner:

"The telegraph brought, this forenoon, a revelation of the late Thurlow Weed in relation to the alleged murder of William Morgan for his revelation of the secrets of Freemasonry, fifty years ago, which statement, it is said, was kept secret until the death of Mr. Weed. We publish the dispatch because the death of the great leader of Anti-masonry has recalled the story of the Morgan abduction, and we do not care to seem to be behind our contemporaries in a matter like this, but the revelation is by no means a new one. We have before us a pamphlet giving Mr. Weed's version of the abduction, which tells the story word for word as given in the dispatch printed in another column, with a full account of the circumstances under which Mr. Weed received "the confession" of Mr. Whitney, and of his own trial for libel for charging Gen. Gould with complicity in the murder. Mr. Weed's statement indicates that he fully believed the story of the murder, and that his belief was based on very strong testimony."

Another item has gone the rounds of the press, which confirms Mr. Weed's account fully and is exerting a considerable influence with many who are unfamiliar with the facts heretofore published. The dispatch is from Canada, and supplies the names of the Canadian Masons who were to have aided in the spiriting away Capt. Morgan. The item is as follows:

"ST. CATHARINES, Ont., December 1.—A gentleman of this city, who has read Thurlow Weed's statements regarding the disappearance of Morgan, says that when a boy he well remembers much of the excitement occasioned, and says that the men who kidnapped Morgan tried to get the following-named Canadian Masons to bring him into Canada and take charge of him: Colonel Clench, Dr. Muirhead, Edward McBride, John Brant (the Indian chief,) Judge Edwards, and others whose names he cannot remember. They declined to have anything to do with the matter, and some of them never went back to the lodge meetings again. He likewise states that those who are reported to have kidnapped Morgan all came to violent deaths with one exception, as follows: Colonel King of Niagara county, N. Y., fell dead in a bar-room; Whitney of Rochester died a miserable death; Howard of New York was drowned in Buffalo creek; Adams, one of the leaders, was drowned in the Niagara river; Garside of Niagara fell from his horse and broke his neck: Colonel Jewett died in Lockport, his last years being very miserable, being unable to sit still. The only one who lived out his days was Mr. Chubbuck, who died a natural death in Lewiston not long ago."

It is to be hoped friends of this cause everywhere will see the importance of circulating the Weed pamphlet published by the N. C. A. now, while the public is in a frame of mind to hear the facts. Fifty pamphlets bought and judiciously distributed in a town will of necessity help the reform more than the same expenditure in any other way.

Mr. Spaulding had one experience in Vermont worthy of mention among the trying circumstances connected with this class of work. In one town as he left the train he handed a tract to a young man on the platform of the depot. The tract fell into the hands of a Mason standing near. This Mason followed Mr. Spaulding about town to hinder his work and finally succeeded in producing a street commotion, attended by loud and boisterous threats to "report his name to the lodge and send his character on ahead of him." This was evidently done, for a stranger the next day in another town accosted him to say that he knew him and accused him of having been "driven out" of the last town. To a tried soldier such threats are like the bursting of air bubles, and yet there is nothing pleasant about being "spotted" by a set of unprincipled men who are taught to believe that murder is no crime when committed in behalf of their secret clan.

"No man can preach in Worcester who is opposed to secret societies." This is a remark made by a Mason to a gentlemen who has been instrumental in opening the way for me to preach in Washburn Hall. It was accompanied with the advice that my services be dispensed with. This is the subtle foe that is interposing obstacles to every step we attempt to take. To determine whether that remark is true or not is the problem given us to solve. I do not think even the readers of the Cynosure in Worcester fully appreciate the situation, but I earnestly pray that God may open their eyes to the truth concerning this matter and lead them to aid in breaking the shackles of the pulpit in this city.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Few Remarks.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—For some time past I have desired to give expression to my yearnings for the welfare of a certain institution of learning; a cut of which appeared in the Cynosure lately; and which I wish could remain; as I do not well see how the space could be better occupied.

WHEATON COLLEGE

is certainly unfortunate in not having an extensive reputation; or rather the Christian world is a great loser by its lack of information, concerning this rare seat of learning.

That it has a fair share of patronage is not questioned; but nothing seems more evident than that it deserves tenfold the support and attention it receives: and these it would obtain, should zealous Christians throughout this land, have an adequate knowledge of its merits; of its facilities for imparting knowledge of the most necessary and useful type; in short, of its capacity unequalled anywhere, for giving to youth the principles that are fundamental to the purest and happiest society, as well as for giving them simply an intellectual training. On visiting the College in February last, the writter was remarkably impressed with the high spiritual atmosphere that prevailed here, and which seemed a common factor of the institution. And it was then and there determined, concerning certain rumors unfavorable to leaders in our cause, that if any one doubted that these were ill-founded, nay that they were even set afloat by enemies of the College, he could not better satisfy himself, then to spend a time in the vicinity, and witness how remarkably God in his kind providence, has prospered and blessed the work there carried on. I repeat then, that as a means of securing the attention of parents and others, whereby Wheaton College may be more widely known, I would like to see the aforesaid cut given regularly, a prominent place, not only in the Cynosure, but in other papers interested in our cause.

THE CHICAGO PUBLIC LIBRARY.

I was very agreeably impressed lately on seeing in the supplement to the Library catalogue, a list of our books requiring about a column of that pamphlet for the display. The Cynosure is now also kept on file; so it will be inexcusable for the people of this city if they longer remain in darkness. Without reflecting on the Masonic character of the Board, or the librarian himself, the Cynosure, if it could speak, might have for us all, an entertaining story, concerning its treatment, in that connection. For a time, after being received when called for, it would, after some search, be produced from quarters of a character not the most dignified. When asked why it was not catalogued and put on file, the reply was that it was not the only journal not accorded a conspicuous place.

AT WASHINGTON.

It will certainly be a happy day when this is accomplished. But our advisers never did better prospecting than in properly weighing this question. The difficulty, however, to have this done, all the more indicates its great necessity. The brewers and distillers even have here their stronghold. Some time since the editor of the Washington Sentinel, brazen and audacious, told in his paper of a flying trip of his to Washington, to "tamper" with a committee; whereby he claimed vast good was done. His remarks concluded with an urgent appeal as to the absolute necessity of having constantly some one in the lobby of Congress, to watch every movement.

J. C. SCHOENBERGER.

Lodge Enticements.

TORONTO, Can.

Among the fancied enjoyments which men are prone to pursue, those fascinating gardens of imaginary bliss—secret societies—lay around him on all sides, enticing and imposing without, sounding from within words of joy and welcome, resplendant with signs and emblems of all that is great and good; but in their interior awaking unpleasant experiences, creating dangers, begetting and nursing vice, upholding selfishness and treading on virtue and religion.

As surely as a man is allured into such, so surely will he repent. But he may not cry for help, or express his repentance aloud. Why? Because he has entrapped himself into a snare from which there is no release except through the jaws of death, or by dangers which he will not encounter. He will remain there, and endeavor to make his situation as happy as possible rather than resort to despair or the means of freedom.

Men, born imprudent, are seldom cautious, contented that they are more wise than those who offer to advise them. But the stings of danger are the wages of imprudence, and the imprudent man always repents too late. It will be well, therefore, for men to listen once in a while to reason, and to heed the stern voice of experience, and while trying to avoid dangers pointed out, above all not to be smitten by the outward splendors of secret societies.

They who are of their own will entrapped into them, endeavor to exonerate from all blame those who ensnared them, arguing for this purpose that a foreknowledge of the powers and penalties of their superiors was extended to them. If the high-titled officers of secret societies do really extend this foreknowledge to their innocent candidates, they possess at least the heroic generosity of the rattlesnake; which, before lodging its poison in the body of an intruder, will give a warning of escape.

He who, in his innocent or selfish desires, expects to find in secret societies abounding joys, will be deplorably deceived. He will find that, like a child pursuing a butterfly for the beauty of its wings, or a boy, in his curiosity risking his limbs, climbing for a nest, he has placed himself in needless danger; with but little to toil after, and only a colored bubble when he has obtained it.

E. J. BUTLER.

The Question of Separation.

OLATHE, KANS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Is it not the duty of every one who is a member of a church that tolerates secret societies, and who are satisfied by thorough investigation that such societies are a detriment to the welfare of Zion, to withdraw from such church and use their influence toward establishing a Christian society whose God is the Lord?

Can any one who loves the Saviour, please God and grow in grace, and yet worship Jah-Bel-On in the secret chambers? If not does he stay in the hearts of his followers when they entered the Sanctum Sanctorum of Masonry? If not, are not such men lost to all eternity except they repent? If that be the case, is it not the duty of all true followers of Christ to separ themselves that they be not "partakers of their sins?" Can one live in a church with Baal worshipers without partaking of their sins to some extent? Who troubled Israel, Elijah or Ahab? and yet Ahab was an Israelite. Will some one answer these queries, and oblige

The Twenty-fifth of December.

The holiday season naturally suggests to the minds of men two questions—one respecting the wisdom of such days in general; the other respecting the particular arguments for and against the observance of each particular day. In the first case, we inquire whether it is well to have days on which the people of a nation, released from labors, shall spend their time in social enjoyments; and in the second, whether Thanksgiving, New Year's, or the twenty-fifth of December, are such days as may be profitably kept in this manner. These questions are as can at once be seen, quite distinct. It is within the memory of those who are yet young that the day of Thanksgiving was a New England institution, while the twenty-fifth of December was celebrated in the South, and by Catholics and Episcopalians in the North. We have seen a complete change in this regard—the Pilgrim day traveling southward, and the Catholic day traveling northward, until each has spanned the States. This is mentioned simply to call attention to the fact, that in very recent times holidays have changed and interchanged, and hence, that we may consistently believe in the observance of days of national recreation, and at the same time for satisfactory reasons avoid and condemn the observance of a particular day.

In relation to the first question suggested, we must content ourselves with a few words. It might seem that men in this work-a-day world are so constantly exhausted by the toils and cares of life, that holidays should be a great blessing to wearied bodies and burdened minds; that a general release from toil would result in happiness and increased powers of production. A careful inspection of the national life of the world will perhaps shake this a priori judgment. We find that those people who have most holidays have less property, less intelligence, less virtue, and less liberty, than those who have fewer occasions of this sort. Compare Italy with England, and the United States with Spain. Compare, also, any country at different times, and the number of its holidays will, I think, be found to increase with the poverty and degradation of the people. Thus in the department of Lyons, France, in the sixteenth century, the number of compulsory annual festivals was near forty, while in France, in 1802, the number was reduced to four. It would be inside the truth to say that the people of France were ten times more prosperous in 1800 than in 1600.

It will probably be said that Jehovah in setting up the Jewish polity, established three great national feasts. It is true; and if national holidays could be conducted as those festivals were, perhaps they might still be advantageous, though this cannot be admitted without argument. The camp meeting of to-day is not the power for good that it was in the days when newspapers were unknown and hymns were "lined out," not only because there were few books, but because there were many who could not read. At the present time, however, national feast days are of two sorts—mere play-days and celebrations of idolatrous rites and ceremonies. The latter are always wrong, and deadly in their influence; the former are, at best, of doubtful benefit. The great danger of the world is not that men will have too much religion or too much industry. Idleness, infidelity, extravagance, these are the dangers of the present age. Of course, I speak now of men; children are to play during the most of childhood; men should put away childish things.

In passing to the second question suggested above, it may be remarked that, admitting the utility of holidays in general, Protestant Christians should not celebrate those with bad names, if they can get enough that have good ones. The word "mass" has for all those who are acquainted with the history of past ages a deep and terrible meaning, dark and bloody association. It recalls the instruments and agents which were used during hundreds of years to coerce the consciences and subvert the liberties of humanity. Why should we choose for a day of joyous, social intercourse, a title that is encrusted with the blood of myriads of martyrs? If the needs of men require the observance of the twenty-fifth of December as a day of rest and sport, let it be observed; but the heathen name for the winter solstitial festival would certainly be less objectionable to Protestant ears than the word "mass," which has associated with it the creaking of racks, the groans of innocent men and women, and the flames of the auto-da-fe.

Then, again, take the first part of the name, Christ, the anointed. This is one of the peculiar names of God. As such, it comes within the scope of the command: "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." Taking God's name in vain is using it in a light, trifling, irreverent manner. Take now the expression: "I wish you a merry Christmas;" analyze it, and what do you find? It is the statement of a desire that the person addressed may have a merry Christ's mass. That is, the festival is a mass of communion, which is specially celebrated in memory of the birth of the Saviour. In Catholic churches they have one mass at midnight, another at dawn, and a third along in the morning. It is emphatically a mass day in honor of the Saviour's birth. But how many of the millions who utter that wish have any thought of Christ at all? The multitude mean: I hope you may spend this day of feasting and sport pleasantly. That is, they use the name of the Saviour to designate a play-day, and think it no profanity, because they have entirely forgotten the God whose name they are using. On precisely the same principle the man who curses in the name of Jesus, is innocent as soon as he has sworn so often as to forget the being whose holy name he employs.

If, on the other hand, it be affirmed that the day is to be observed in a sacred and reverent manner, the question at once arises: "Who hath required this at your hands?" In what part of the Scriptures are men required to observe the birthday of the Saviour? If in no part thereof, then this day is simply part and parcel of that system of man-invented worship, which has for as many centuries offended God and degraded men. The Puritans unanimously rejected this, and all similar days. Mather (Ratio Disciplinae) calls it: One of the earliest apostacies and superstitions of the Christian Church." The Westminster divines declare that "there is no day commanded in Scripture to be kept holy under the gospel but the Lord's day. * * * Festival days, commonly called holy days, having no warrant in the word of God, are not to be continued; nevertheless it is lawful and necessary, upon special emergent occasions, to separate a day or days for public fasting or thanksgiving, as the several eminent and extraordinary dispensations of God's providence shall administer cause and opportunity to his people." This is the language of reason and revelation. All that God has commanded is to be done. Nothing that he has not commanded is to be done. In religion all things are to be arranged by divine command. If, then, the ordinary name of this winter festival is used to designate a day of sport, it is a profanity; if a day for worship, it is evil worship, strange fire, a part of an idolatrous system; in either case Christians should stand aside from its observance. These considerations seem decisive, but their force is greatly increased by the fact that nature and custom have united in designating the New Year's day, only one week later, as a festival time, which is found, on examination, to be free from the weighty objections which lie against the twenty-fifth of December, while those who love children can have on that day the fairest field that could be desired for the excercise of their benevolent impulses.

In conclusion it may be remarked that there is no festival day at present observed in this country which seems to be the occasion of such a vast amount of falsehood. All scholars, so far as I know, are agreed: 1. That this festival was invented more than one hundred years after Christ was dead. 2. That it was originally held in the spring-time—May or June. 3. That some four or five hundred years after Christ was born, a pope undertook to settle the day, and had it fixed at the present time of the year. 4 That the Eastern church now observes the sixth of January, instead of the twenty-fifth of December. 5. That no one can tell exactly when Christ was born. 6. But that everybody knows that he was not born on the day celebrated. Now in the face and eyes of a set of facts like these we find poets, parents, and artists combined to make childhood believe that Jesus was born at precisely that time in the twelve months, when we know that he was not born then, and churches of God celebrating a faleshood, as inquisitors burned heretics, "ad majorem gloriam Dei."

Is it not time for us to pause in this career, and if determined to have a jovial and pleasant time at or about the winter solstice, to choose some day not associated with those corruptions of the church that gave the world its dark ages, and to name the day not by the awful and reverend name of God, especially when the name is a suggestion of what every intelligent person knows to be untrue?—Wheaton College Record.

Of "Liberty of Women in Unchristian Lands," W. F. Crafts, writting in the New-Englander, says, "Confucius taught in 'The Great Learning of Women,' and Buddha afterward adopted the maxim, 'A bride must serve her father-in-law and her mother-in law.' When a bridegroom goes forth from his father's home to bring back his bride, the mother, as a regular part of the wedding-ceremony, asks, 'Where are you going, my son?' He answers, 'I am going to bring you a female servant.' In Asia it would hardly have been necessary to correct the mistake of a child who, being examined by the priest in the catechism, gave the definition of Purgatory when asked to explain the sacrament of matrimony. In Asia a woman is made to feel that marriage is a state of torment into which souls enter to prepare them for another and a petter world. 'They submissively endure a hell on earth as the price of heaven.' The Hindu law giver, Menu, in his 'Institutes,' says to woman in regard to her husband, 'Though inobservant of approved usages, or enamored of another woman, or destitute of good qualities, yet a husband must constantly be reverenced as a god by a virtuous wife.'"

American Party Papers.

These papers represent and seek to promote the principles of the American Party. Four of them are now published as follows:

New England American, by E. D. Bailey, 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass.;

Illinois American, by Ezra A. Cook, 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.;

Michigan American, by Elder H. A. Day, Coldwater, Mich.;

Iowa American, by N. Bourne, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The Indiana American has been voted by the State Association; Elder I. W. Lowman, Goshen, Ind., editor.

These papers are published monthly and are uniform in size and in price as follows:

TERMS, POST-PAID:

Single copies, per year							25 cents.
5 copies to one address 1 year							$ 1.00
12	"	"	or	9 to	9 addresses 1 year		2.00
50	"	"	"	40 "	40	" "	7.00
150	"	"	"	100 "	100	" "	15.00

Most of the matter in these papers is also used in the Cynosure and the great object in starting them is to afford friends an extremely efficient and cheap way of introducing and promoting this reform. A few friends could club in together and by raising $15.00 per year, either have the paper sent directly to 100 different, persons or have one hundred and fifty copies sent monthly for distribution.

The inflence of these papers for good, when received regularly by 100 families in any neighborhood, can scarcely be overestimated.

REFORM NOTE-PAPER AND ENVELOPES.

As a needed means of spreading the truth regarding secrecy, a collection of the utterances of Scripture and various noted statesmen and ministers has been prepared and printed in tasteful form at the top of note-paper and on both sides of envelopes (the matter on the paper being entirely different from that on the envelopes.) A blank line for date is also printed in. The envelopes can be furnished either white or colored; both envelopes and paper being of the ordinary size and of good quality.

PRICES:

No. 6 Envelopes, 3x5½ inches, 24 per 100; postpaid, 30 cents per 100.
Note paper 6½x8½ " 20 " " 40 " "

The matter contained on this Stationery is pithy and forcible, and will do good work. Use it.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1882.

The Boots of Truth put on at Last.

The old adage that "a lie will run from Maine to Georgia, while Truth is putting on his boots," is signally verified in the case of Thurlow Weed. When a third coroner's jury, with a reprobate Mason, Dr. Lewis, in woman's clothes, for a witness, as Mrs. Munroe, had found Morgan three or four inches taller than he was by measure; and with black hair cut short, instead of the long, silky, auburn hair, which was Morgan's; and on such testimony had decided that Morgan was not Morgan but Munroe, a billiard player, cue in hand, said, "Well, Weed, what will you do for Morgan now?" Weed replied, nobly and forcibly, "That dead man is good enough Morgan till you bring back the one you have taken off."

An editor started the lie that he said, "Good enough Morgan till after election"—thus making Mr. Weed a conscious and confessed demagogue and deceiver, who would use a dead man for a lie to carry an election!

Mr. Weed, in Europe and America, suffered under that vile falsehood half a century; but now Truth has got his boots on and overtaken it. This is a comfort to others, who are suffering under malignant falsehoods.

The American Platform.--Art. VII.

"That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions."

Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Franklin, and all political writers of their time, insist over and again that a republic cannot stand unless bottomed on religious conviction in the minds of the people. This idea was not original with them. The world knew it by heart. There is no one nation on earth without religion and gods of some sort. All the old law-givers founded their codes on religious conviction. Numa, as did Mohammed and Loyola afterward, pretended to get his system of law and life in a cave at night, and by divine inspiration. Solon and Lycurgus went into exile, and their friends gave out that they were among the gods; and Empedocles jumped into the crater of a volcano to make the people believe the gods had taken him, and so give a superstitious authority to his moral writings. But neither our American fathers nor the ancients are necessary to prove that a government without a divine sanction is a bottomless pit of anarchy, where there is no restraint but what one wicked passion imposes on another: and an education without a standard of law or morals is an absurdity, worse than a government without sanction.

Infidels and priests combined to exclude the Bible, and even religious singing, from the schools of Cincinnati. The infidels thus showed that they had no objection to priest-craft; and the priests showed they love infidelity while it will sustain them. Several cities where the lodge controls the vote, have already followed the example set by Cincinnati; and, as there, the forces excluding the Bible are infidelity and superstition combined; though every one knows that priestism the world over is despotism, and infidelity is anarchy: and every one also knows that in excluding the Bible, as they would not dare to treat Shakespeare or Milton, they have thrown out forty centuries of authentic history, the sublimest poetry, the best Saxon English, and the only foundation of morals, to say nothing of the salvation by Christ, "the only name given under heaven whereby we must be saved."

The fear professed by these Bible excluders, of "church and State," of hanging witches, and of enforcing conscience, is utterly insincere. Christ is what they hate, not religious superstition, even though allied to despotism. Ingersoll admires and praises the gods of Asiatic paganism, though he very well knows that the tyranny of priests, and the political degradation of the Asiatic masses, is their religion, taught by those very hero-gods whom he admires. And those very Puritans who are the butt of his ridicule, are declared, in express terms, by Hume, Brougham, and Macauley, to be the authors and source of all the popular rights and liberties which the British Constitution contained; and our popular liberties are the children of theirs.

Education without religion, intellect without conscience make men devils; at once very knowing and very base. This plain, obvious fact, the seventh article of our American Platform properly assumes; and it assumes also, that it is an American fact. Jefferson (his writings abundantly show) was a religious man. His weeping over his Bible when a beloved child was dead; the books which he published in the name and doctrines of Christ; and his celebrated declaration that "The Almighty has no attribute" which could take part with despots against slaves fighting for their freedom,—these, and multitudes like these statements, show that Jefferson was a religious man; and his four distinct references to the God of the Bible in the great Declaration, which is the basis of our American Constitution, prove abundantly that the Bible, as a standard of law and morals, is an American institution, and a proper part of a political platform.

Platforms are the living politics, as laws cited in courts are the living laws. Left out of either, God and the Bible becomes obsolete. The platforms of existing parties strike law and morals with a paralysis. Every Presidential election debilitates the goodness of the nation, every four years. The American platform proposes to bring back American politics to the tombs and memories and political doctrines of the fathers; to take back the dimmed gold of American institutions to the furnace that forged out our liberties, not for senseless superstitious worship, but to have them renewed and restamped in the national mint; bearing, as they did at the first, on one side the "things of Caesar," and, on the other, "the things of God!"

As ANOTHER TIDE-MARK for the wave of popular interest in the discussion of the past evil history of the Masonic lodge, and its present capacity to reproduce the same transactions, we note that the daily Union and Advertiser of Rochester, N. Y. published on the 2nd inst. the long report on the abduction and murder of William Morgan and the attempts of the lodge to obstruct the course of justice in the courts, which was presented to the National Anti-masonic convention held in Philadelphia, September 11, 1830, by a committee of which the chairman was Frederic Whittlesey of New York, one of the Anti-masonic leaders. The other members of the committee were Bates Cooke of New York, William W. Irwin of Pennsylvania, Ellison Conger of New Jersey and Alvah Labin of Vermont. This report is clear and exhaustive and would probably cover seven or eight pages of the Cynosure. The Chicago Times and Cincinnati Commercial reprint a considerable portion of the report with an abstract of the whole.

—Secretary Stoddard started again for Washington on Monday afternoon. He hopes to return in time to attend the Kansas State meeting at Emporia on the 19th inst.

—The editor of the Cynosure expects to attend the Kansas Convention and will stop at Galva on the way thither, where he is expected to preach in the Congregational church on Sabbath next.

—We learn with regret of the death of Mr. Abel Carpenter, brother of Deacon Philo Carpenter. He died in his house in Aurora on Friday last, and was buried at Warrenville, near Wheaton. Mr. Carpenter was a prominent member of the Baptist church in Warrenville for many years; he was closely identified also with our reform work as a corporate member of the National Association, but failing health has for several years prevented his attending the annual meetings. His death is the occasion of deep sorrow to a large circle of friends and relatives.

—The New York World, of Nov. 26th, says that "Mecca Temple of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine" will commemorate the martyrdom of Hussein and Hassan on a certain day in the Masonic Temple. From which it must be understood that this formidable order is a revival, in some respect, of the "assassins" of Western Asia and Persia, who flourished in the eleventh century, and of which the two characters mentioned were founders. The characteristic doctrines of this dreaded and formidable secret order were that all positive religions were equally right and all actions morally indifferent—a creed that reads very like the Masonic.

Weed and Morgan.

The Topic of the Time.

[New York Weekly Witness, Dec. 7.]

The papers edited by Masons, which are probably pretty numerous, affect great hilarity over the testimony concerning the murder of Morgan, which the late Mr. Thurlow Weed authenticated on oath, as one of the last duties of his life. We say affect, for that the contempt and derision excited in these journals by the terrible revelations made in that affidavit are simulated, is rendered much more than probable by the well-known circumstances of the case. There was unquestionably such a man as Morgan, who had been a Mason, and who wrote a book revealing the secrets which Masons guard to the uttermost. He was threatened with death, which is said to be the Masonic punishment for revealing its secrets, and he was abducted by a party of Masons. After that he was never more seen alive or dead, and we suppose no sensible or fair-minded man has ever doubted that Morgan was foully murdered by zealous Masons for his crime against Masonry. The tale left on record by Mr. Weed, as having been communicated to him in confidence by one of the murderers, who was doubtless conscience-stricken, fits as exactly into the circumstances as a key to a lock, and the contempt expressed by the World and other papers for the affidavit is on a par with that expressed by Dorsey for the public prosecutor.

[Daily Inter Ocean, Dec. 6]

THURLOW WEED'S STATEMENTS CORROBORATED BY COLONEL C. G. HAMMOND.

The statement of Thurlow Weed regarding the disappearance of William Morgan who tried to expose the secrets of the order of Freemasonry over fifty years ago, has awakened fresh interest in that mystery, and called out denials from prominent Masons. Yesterday a reporter of the INTER OCEAN met Col. C. G. Hammond, of this city, who, at the time of the abduction of Morgan, lived at Canandaigua, N. Y., and is thoroughly conversant with all that then occurred there. Colonel Hammond said he had read the statement of Mr. Weed and knew it to be absolutely true. It agreed in almost every particular with the facts as he knew them, and in what he did not have positive personal knowledge, the death of Morgan, the statement agreed with what was generally believed, and actually known to be true in the neighborhood of Canandaigua. He was a young man at the time, and it was his first participation in politics to attend the Anti-masonic Convention held at Rochester shortly after the occurrence. He cast his first vote for that ticket. His friends were nearly all Masons, and he had no prejudices against the order until that time. He thought that was going too far, and the gave his influence to the Ani-masonic party, following Seward and Weed. He related a number of incidents of the abduction, all of which corroborate the statement of Mr. Weed. He was personally acquainted with nearly all the men taking part in the affair, and was present at the time they were tried. He most sincerely believes that Morgan was drowned in the Niagara River, and that the body found months later was that of the traitor to Masonry. It was known positively that six men went out in the boat, and but five returned. Colonel Hammond said he believed the Anti-masonic movement brought out Seward and gave him the opportunity to develop into a great man. He jumped into the movement at the right time and rode on the crest-wave to greatness. Whether his connection with the movement had anything to do with the defeat of Mr. Seward's aspirations to the Presidency he did not know, but he never heard Masons bring up the charge against him. They were too willing to hush up the matter and not give any cause for a revival of the old story of the Morgan affair.

Colonel Hammond left Canandaigua in 1834, and came West, but while he still resided there he knew there were many Masons who believed as he did concerning the end of Morgan.

The New York World of the 29th ult. in an editorial endeavors with some ingenuity to break the crushing force of Mr. Weed's letter upon the lodge. The account of the two inquests is garbled to please Masonic ears, and the article closes with an outright lie, thus:

"There is absolutely nothing in the story as told by Mr. Weed to connect the Masonic order in any way whatever with the fate of William Morgan. It is a pity that the Sun should have been deluded into making itself a vehicle to bring before the country this dismal twaddle, the only conceivable effect of which, were it well founded, would be to breed animosity and injustice towards a great and most respectable organization."

In striking and noble contrast with this statement the New York Times of the same day says in concluding a note on the controversy:

"But there is no shadow of doubt that, whatever became of Monroe, Morgan was drowned."

The Cincinnati Commercial (Murat Halstead's paper) on the 30th ult. published the denial of Mr. Weed's account by Carson, a Masonic fossil who runs an insurance affair for the presumed benefit of the lodge. But there was so loud a demand for Mr. Weed's statement that the Commercial was compelled to print it entire December 1st to meet the call, copying it from Weed's old paper, the Albany Evening Journal. So that Carson's vilification resulted excellently after all. The Commercial evidently found its Anti-masonic readers wide awake and in the majority, for on December 4th it published nearly three columns of solid fine type, reproducing most of ex-Chancellor Whittlesey's great report to the National Convention at Philadelphia on the murder and abduction of Morgan. The character of Mr. Whittlesey is represented as above reproach and the report as a document which cannot be successfully controverted. The letter from Rochester, N. Y., accompanying the Whittlesey report mentions the profound interest of all classes in that city, roused by the Weed letter and the 1830 document, which the Union Advertiser prints in full. This letter says:

" 'No one about Rochester,' said a leading member of the Masonic fraternity, 'denies that Morgan was abducted. The only mistake the order made was in furthering the action of a few hot-headed zealots, who gave men like Thurlow Weed an opportunity to arraign the whole fraternity.' "

Among the numerous other papers which have printed Mr. Weed's letter, are the Weekly Gate City of Keokuk, Iowa, which gives it entire. An amusing incident occurred in connection with the publication of the letter in the Chicago Tribune. Before it had appeared in the Cynosure in September, a proof was taken to the Tribune editor, but refused on the ground that the matter was too old and nearly forgotten to attract public notice. The Times, however, accepted it and printed a part. But when the Buffalo Express of November 27th printed the document entire, the Tribune received a dispatch from New York announcing the fact and conveying over the wires a liberal portion of the very letter which a few weeks before the Tribune editor had refused in proof. The dispatch appeared in the Tribune of the 28th and a day or two thereafter the reluctant editor admonished by the demands of his readers gave way for another striking selection from the vexatious but wonderful letter.

It is a significant fact that the statement upon which the Freemasons most depend to break the blow is a pamphlet by one Reilly, formerly of Rochester, and a jack Mason, who wrote a statement of the Morgan case to please the lodge and pay a grudge against Weed. A few years ago, Reilly came to Mr. Weed in great destitution. The noble old man, forgiving and forgetting the past, got his former enemy a position in the New York Custom House, where he remains it is said to this day. From the contradictory statements of the Masons themselves, most of whom acknowledge the murder as committed by the order, others defy justice and the public conscience and vindicate the lodge in its crime, while others have it that Morgan ran off to Smyrna, Arizona, New Zealand or the ends of the earth,—this very contradiction is the strongest evidence of the truth of Mr. Weed's statement. The Anti-masons have but one story—they need but one, and that the truth. It is understood about Washington that these entangling statements are alarming the lodge ringsters at headquarters and word has gone out that nothing more will be said by Masons until a final reply is prepared and then Freemasonry will draw back into its den and will no more appear to the public except to scratch at those who intrude into its unholy secrecy.

THE SOUTHERN FIELD.

Baltimore and Washington.

The churches of the Monument City and their disposition toward reform—False (United) Brethren—Colored churches open and their pastors preaching against the orders—Grand meeting with the Presbyterians, United and Reformed—The opening of Congress.

BALTIMORE, MD., Nov. 30, 1882.

DEAR BRO. K.—Of all the large cities of the East this has the best reputation for morality. I have seen fewer saloons and less drunkenness than in Washington, and it is said that the Sabbath is better observed.

This is a city of churches, the most numerous being Roman Catholic, next M. E. and M. E. South, then Presbyterians, Baptists, Lutherans, etc. There are quite a number of Independent or Congregational Methodist churches and also of the Evangelical Association.

There is here a large colored population and many churches, of which the Baptists are the most numerous.

Of those who might be supposed to sympathize with our reform there are: One Reformed Presbyterian, one United Presbyterian, and five United Brethren churches. Of these the Reformed Presbyterian and United Presbyterian churches are free from all complicity with secretism. Their able and excellent pastors express a warm interest in our work and have invited me to preach on it in the U. P. church on Sabbath afternoon, December 3d. There has been considerable discussion during the past year on the relation of the secret orders to the churches; but mainly in the colored congregations. But one white church took any special part, and its pastor after preaching against the lodge, concluded to humble himself before it He was not willing to have a tract left in his house. There are four colored pastors who are strongly impressed with the evils of secretism, and three of them have preached on the subject. Two of them have invited me to address their congregations as soon as their present series of meetings are concluded, and all of them were thankful for our co-operation. One of them, Rev. Harvey Johnson, is pastor of a church of more than a thousand members and many of them belong to the different orders. He preached twice last summer on the lodge, and was openly withstood by the Grand High Priest of the Chapter, who is a member of his church. He tells me that his life has been threatened and he asks the prayers of God's people that he may know and do what is right. There are more than forty different kinds of secret orders among the colored people. These colored pastors are, Rev. H. Johnson, Baptist, 352 Lombard St.; Rev. P. H. A. Braxton, 252 Park Ave.; Rev. W. H. Weaver, Presbyterian, 297 N. Eutaw St.; Rev. A. Brown, Baptist, 57 S. Green St. The Cynosure has been ordered for all of them.

Of the United Brethren churches, I think it may be said that they have a name to live and are dead. Just now they are holding a Conference S. S. Institute at their church on Scott street. I went there and found one of the leading men with a full supply of Masonic jewels. The pastor of the church, Rev. Hoffman, told me very quickly that he had no sympathy with my work. He said that "everything is now quiet and they meant to keep it so" and this seemed to be the general feeling among the ministers, though some of the laymen received my tracts gladly and manifested a better spirit. I wondered whether these ministers ever read Ezek. 13:10-16, or 33:1-10. Surely the Lord will require the blood of souls of such false and wicked watchmen. May the Lord give them a better mind.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Yesterday I had the privilege of speaking three times in the city of Baltimore. In the morning and at night in the colored Baptist church on the corner of Linden Ave. and Hoffman St. Their excellent and able pastor, Rev. P. H. A. Braxton, is in cordial sympathy with our reform. He has repeatedly preached on the subject of secret societies, and heartily endorsed my remarks. They are taking measures to build a house of worship and seem to be reasonably prosperous.

At 4:30 P. M. I preached in the United Presbyterian church on the corner of Biddle street and Madison Avenue. It a building with rather plain exterior, but a seating capacity of eight or nine hundred. The able pastor, T. W. Anderson, attended the National Convention of the N. C. A., held some years ago at Monmouth, Ill., when a student, and was glad to have me address his people. Rev. Mr. Crowe, pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian church, postponed his second service and attended with part of his congregation. The audience was quite large. I spoke from Eph. 5:11; and after the discussion the pastors and some of the congregation thanked me for the presentation of the subject. I took tea with Mr. W. K. Carson, an elder in the church, who has been a life-long reformer, a friend of Thaddeus Stevens, and familiar with the Anti-masonic struggle in Pennsylvania fifty years ago.

I left Baltimore at 9 A. M. and in an hour and ten minutes was in Washington. I was in the gallery of the House of Representatives soon after the speaker called to order, and listened to the reading of the President's message—partly, amidst the deafening confusion of the House, and the remainder in the quieter hall of the Senate. The galleries were not crowded.

The articles on exhibition at the Garfield Memorial Fair were not all removed, and occupied the attention of many. Floral decorations were beautiful and abundant, especially those laid on the desks of the Speaker of the House and president of the Senate. There was a tremendous spasm of virtue among the Republican members on the subject of civil service reform. Several resolutions were introduced and a bill (by Mr. Houk, of Tenn.) and quite a number of brief speeches made, in which the determination was expressed to attach these measures to the appropriation bills so as to ensure action. This led to a witty speech by Mr. Cox of New York, congratulating them on their recent and rapid conversion. The speech brought down the house and it took many raps of the Speaker's gavel to stop the clapping and laughter.

But little business was done in the Senate. Soon after the conclusion of the message, a Georgia Senator announced the death of his colleague, Ben. F. Hill. Appropriate resolutions were adopted and the Senate adjourned.

Of the Garfield Memorial Fair it may be said that notwithstanding all the disreputable ways, such as lotteries, raffles, voting for nice men and pretty women at so much a vote, the whole thing was a comparative failure, realizing only about $7,000. Doubtless ten times that sum could have been raised by subscription, with a tenth part of the effort which was put into the fair; but then the Knights and other Masons would have failed to make their display. But the end is not yet.

HOME CIRCLE.

At Last.

When on my day of life the night is falling,
And, in the winds from unsunned spaces blown,
I hear far voices out of darkness calling
My feet to paths unknown.

Thou who hast made my home of life so pleasant,
Leave not its tenant when its walls decay;
O Love divine! O Helper ever present,
Be Thou my strength and stay!

Be near me when all else is from me drifting,
Earth, sky, home's pictures, days of shade and shine,
And kindly faces to my own uplifting
The love which answers mine,

I have but Thee, O Father! Let thy Spirit
Be with me then, to comfort and uphold;
No gate of pearl, no branch of palm I merit,
Nor street of shining gold.

Suffice it if—my good and ill unreckoned,
And both forgiven through thy abounding grace—
I find myself, by hands familiar, beckoned
Unto my fitting place.

Some humble door among thy many mansions,
Some sheltering shade where sin and striving cease,
And flows forever through heaven's green expansions,
The river of Thy peace.

There, from the music round about me stealing,
I fain would learn the new and holy song,
And find at last, beneath Thy trees of healing,
The life for which I long.

—J. G. Whittier.

Bible Thoughts.

"For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."—Mal. 3:6.

Everything changes but God. He is without variableness or shadow of turning. The heavens above us and the earth beneath us are ever changing, but he is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

This divine unchangeableness is to us like an anchor in a stormy sea, like a tower, like a rock, like a city of refuge. In a changeable world there is unspeakable consolation in remembering an unchangeable God. Had Jehovah been a changeable God, a capricious being, we had long ere this have perished." But it is not mere "unchangeableness" that our text affirms, but unchangeableness in connection with him whose name is Jehovah, and unchangeableness in the divine dealings with frail, sinning man. "I am Jehovah," and in all that this name unfolds, I am unchangeable. Ye are the "sons of Jacob," —children of evil, and deceit, and rebellion, and vanity; yet I am the unchangeable Jehovah, and therefore ye are not consumed. Had I been a fickle being, like man, long ere this ye should have been destroyed. A sinner's security is the divine faithfulness and immutability.

1. An unchangeable Jehovah. The "I am that I am;" unaltered in character or perfections or purposes; unaltered in his treatment of the sinner; "the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious."

2. An unchangeable covenant. It is the covenant of salvation, of life, of reconciliation, of peace and truth; the one covenant, of which this is the sum, "Where sin hath abounded, grace did much more abound."

3. An unchangeable fulnes. There is no drying up or diminution of this infinite fountain, on ebbing and flowing, no alternate light and darkness; but all light, and fulness, all flowing.

4. An unchangeable cross. The ages have not altered it, nor earth's revolutions removed it. It stands the same as at the first, in its revelation of divine love and grace, in its proclamation of peace, in its promise of rest. The blood of the cross has lost none of its virtues through time. It is unchanged in its pacifying, cleansing, healing power.

5. Unchangeable grace. It was with free love that God met us at first; and it is with the same free love that he meets us every day. It is grace abounding over sin. It is grace that is never weary with receiving sinners or pardoning iniquities.

Such is the foundation on which we rest for eternity; an unchangeable Jehovah, whose love the many waters cannot quench, nor the floods drown.—Bonar.

Evolution Downward.

Ex-President Hopkins has a sharp argument in a few words against the theory of man's evolution from the savage state. "Those who hold," he says, "that man was developed from below, also hold that primeval man was a savage, and that as we recede towards the point of his origin his savage characteristics became more pronounced. But since the anomalous and destructive practices mentioned above are most prevalent among savages, and not at all among the animals from which man is supposed to have been developed, it will follow that the more nearly he should approach them the more free he would be from such practices. Since then man is by these practices degraded below the brutes, it will follow even on the supposition of his animal origin that he could not have been originally a savage."

Thus he believes with the Duke of Argyll, Archbishops Whately and Trench, with Dr. Mitchell and many others, that man in his primitive condition was not a low, cruel, brutalized, vicious, unprincipled savage, but that the savage estate in which many tribes are now found is the last result of a developement downward. The animals are better than man, the savage. They do not practice cruelty upon the females as savages do upon their women, nor do they rejoice in cannibalism and infanticide and many other iniquities of which the savage is proud. In other words, man, the savage, is far worse than the animal, his ancestors—all which shows evolution downward instead of upward, i. e., if evolution be true at all.—Christian at Work.

Cold Winters in the Past.

The following statistics of the good old winters are curious. In 408 the Black Sea was entirely frozen over. In 761, not only the Black Sea, but the Straits of the Dardanelles, were frozen over; the snow in some places rose fifty feet high. In 822 the great rivers of Europe—the Danube and Elbe, etc.—were so hard frozen as to bear heavy wagons for a month. In 860 the Adriatic was frozen. In 991 everything was frozen; the crops totally failed, and famine and pestilence closed the year. In 1067 the most of the travelers were frozen to death on the roads. In 1133 the Po was frozen from Cremona to the sea; the wine casks were burst, and even the trees split by the action of the frost with immense noise. In 1336 the Danube was frozen to the bottom, and remained long in that state. In 1836 the crops wholly failed in Germany; wheat, which some years before sold in England at six shillings the quarter, rose to 2*l*. In 1339 the crops failed in Scotland, and such a famine ensued that the poor were reduced to feed on grass and many perished miserably in the fields. The successive winters of 1432-33-34 were uncommonly severe. It once snowed forty days without interruption. In 1468 the wine distributed to the soldiers in Flanders was cut with hatchets. In 1684 the winter was excessively cold. Most of the hollies were killed. Coaches drove along the Thames, the ice of which was eleven inches thick. In 1709 occurred a cold winter. The frosts penetrated three yards into the ground. In 1715 booths were erected and fairs held on the Thames. In 1744 and 1745 the strongest ale in England, exposed to the air, was covered in less than fifteen minutes with ice an eighth of an inch thick. In 1809, and again in 1822, the winters were remarkably cold. In 1814 there was a fair on the frozen Thames.—Scientific American.

—Some time ago, Monsignor Justin, Archbishop of Besançon, had a present made him of a cask of read wine by a wine-merchant, as a sample suitable for the communion or mass. It was thought to be so good that the archbishop recommended it, without any doubt, to his clergy to such an extent that the maker received many orders. No suspicion appears to have been entertained that it was anything but the pure juice of the grape, such as the priests have to drink at the mass as enjoined by the rubric. Alas! one of the priests went to the expense of having it analysed, when it was found that it did not contain a single drop of grape juice, but was a compound fabricated by the new process, by which sham wines are made so largely at Cette. The archbishop had to announce that all masses where the spurious wine had been used must be annulled, and in over 100 churches this had been done, and the masses, whether offered for the living or the dead, have had to be said over again. In the light of such facts is it not a blessed thing for the Christian to know that he is not dependent at all upon the supposed sacramental efficacy of a human production for his salvation, but upon the sacrifice once offered for all upon Calvary, and thank God no human power can mar its efficacy or hinder its cleansing power, "for the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." Here, so long as we look only to Christ, there can never be any deception.—Ex.

American Children and Horses.

American boys are quite as brave and active as any in the world, and learned travelers tell us they know more than any boys yet discovered in the solar system. Likewise, the American girl is sweet and good and true—as bright as any girl in Europe. For all this, American boys and girls do not, as a rule, ride horseback. It is true, some country boys, east and west ride fearlessly and well, but the majority of boy and girl riders have climbed, by the aid of a rail-fence, on the back of a farm-horse, and when they were mounted the horse either laughed in his mane or ingloriously tumbled the rider over his head. It is very strange that in such a land of horses, so few boys and girls know how to ride. It is a mistake to think that, when Dobbin is brought to the fence and you have climbed on his back, this is riding. Not even the most uncommonly bright girl or the most learned boy can ride without instruction. One has to learn this art, just as one must learn to play the piano or mount a bicycle.

Let us consider the horse, see what he is like, and then, perhaps, we may learn what it means to ride. A horse is an animal with a large brain, and, though he seldom speaks, you may be sure he thinks and has a mind of his own. Besides this, he has four legs. These are important things to remember—he stands on four legs and can think for himself. He also has ears, and, though he is not given to conversation, he hears and understands much that is said to him. He also has a temper—good or bad—and may be cross and ill-natured, or sweet tempered, cheerful, patient, and kind. In approaching such a clever creature, it is clear a boy or girl must be equally patient, kind, cheerful, and good-natured. Unless you are as good as a horse, you have no right to get upon his back.

Of course, there are bad horses, but they are not fit for riding, and are used only to drag horse-cars or do other common work. All riding horses fit for the society of boys and girls are good horses, not merely for walking or galloping, but morally good—gentle, kind, patient, careful, and obedient. Any boy or girl, over seven years of age, with a brave heart and steady hand, and also sweet-tempered, gentle, kind, and thoughtful, can learn to ride. All others must sit in a box on wheels, and be dragged about.—St. Nicholas.

A Dab of Paste.

Practical jokes are a foolish sort of fun, and they often lead to consequences that are anything but funny. John B. Gough tells how unluckily one turned out with him, when he was a boy.

A young fellow at work in the same bookbinder's shop with him thought he would play John a trick. So he took a brush, thrust it into a tub of paste, and holding it beside his face, called out suddenly—

"John!"

John turned quickly, and striking the brush, got the charge full in his face and hair. The young fellow left him sputtering with paste and vexation, and ran laughing out of the shop.

"I'll pay him for that!" thought John.

He took a sheet of paper, and put about a pint of paste on it, then, holding it on the palm of his hand, placed himself in ambush at the door, in readiness to return the joke when his companion should venture back.

"If I have to wait here all day," he said to himself, "I'll come up with him!"

At last he heard footsteps on the stairs. John balanced the handful of paste and braced himself, for the deed.

"Now, my boy, you shall catch it!" thought he trembling with excitement.

A hand was on the latch; the door opened, and out flew the whole pasty mass into the comer's face.

It was a capital shot. But if John laughed, he did not laugh long. He saw, to his horror, while the face was struggling out of the paste, that he had made a terrible mistake. He had plastered the "boss" of the shop!

It could not have been a very pleasant scene that followed; and John's explanations and excuses could not have been wholly satisfactory to his exasperated employer. The little joke proved no joke to either of them, certainly, whatever the young fellow who began the pasting may have thought of it.

It cost John his place; the future orator of temperance was turned out of the shop.—Youth's Companion.

Words of Life for every Day.

SANCTIFY THEM THROUGH THY TRUTH; THY WORD IS TRUTH.

Thursday, Dec. 14.—For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.—Heb. 10:30-31.

Friday, Dec. 15.—Owe no man anything but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law.—Rom. 13:8.

Saturday, Dec. 16.—Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way.—Rom. 14:13.

Sabbath, Dec. 17.—And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature.—Mark 16:15.

Monday, Dec. 18.—Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world the love of the father is not in him.—1 John 2:15.

Tuesday, Dec., 19.—And Jesus knew their thoughts, and said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand.—Matt. 12:25.

Wednesday, Dec. 20.—Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.—Matt. 6:21.

Neither the Old Testament nor the New do we find the individual sacrificed to the community, nor the woman to the man, in pursuit of well-being.

REFORM NEWS.

Last Words to Kansas Friends.

Hoping that these lines may reach you in time I write you to say that questions of great importance will be discussed and decided at our State meeting in Emporia. If any one has any suggestion to make as to the conduct of this movement, let him now make that suggestion known, either in person or by letter, "or ever after hold his peace."

As to the State Agent we have not yet pledged $300. Shall this movement fail for lack of sufficient means?

When you read this, please sit down, if you have not done so before, and write me a card to Emporia, stating what sum you will pay during the coming year for a State Agent should one be employed. If you have any suggestion to make as to who could be secured, or who would be acceptable to you, tell us that. We want to get an able and acceptable man.

Last, but not least, pray that the Lord would guide us in all our councils.

P. S. FEEMSTER.

From Elder Rathbun's Work.

WAYNE, Iowa.

With gratitude and a feeling of increased energy in the reform work in Iowa, I report the success of D. P. Rathbun's labor in this vicinity, having lectured six times and preached four. Inquirers for the truth came many miles to listen to his conclusive arguments, presented with clearness seldom before heard. Iowa should be proud of Rev. D. P. Rathbun. Surely no one can question his mission. Surely no one who listens to his preachings can say, he cares not for my soul. The appreciation of his work here was thorough, being manifested by liberal contributions. Hiram was "duly and truly" killed here more than a year ago and he still has a few mourners. MINNIE LAIRD.

The Wisconsin State Meeting.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

This meeting was held in Gill's Hall, Oshkosh, opening Nov. 21st. The attendance was small but our trust is in Him who said "if is not by might, nor by power, (numbers,) but by my Spirit." Bro. E. Collins presided with meekness and discretion.

The convention was opened by prayer and conference meeting. Bro. Collins said that after a jury had decided in his favor a Masonic judge set that decision aside, thus swindling him out of about $500. A German Methodist minister, pastor of a church in Oshkosh, requested more light in Anti-masonry. His questions were answered and more than one prayer went up for God's blessing on the honest inquirer.

In the evening President Blanchard marshalled the opinions of eminent divines against the lodge and tracked it through some of its bloody history. A hearer who either had not used the common gavel "to divest his mind of its superfluities," or who was an instance of the utter failure of this Masonic implement for the "suppressing of our passions," arose and shaking his fist, angrily asked if the speaker ever was a Mason.

"No, sir, I never was."

"Then you know nothing about Masonry."

"By this time several were on their feet and some "jewels" were lost. President Blanchard said that Bro. Thomas Lowe, Past Master of several lodges, would work the first and third degrees and that if any Mason would swear that they were not given correctly, the convention would have that Mason arrested and sent up for perjury. This was a "settler."

The President closed with a feeling appeal in favor of approaching this all-important subject with candor and reason.

Bro. Thomas Lowe began work on the first degree amid some confusion. Cries of "You're a perjured wretch," etc., were met and turned to the injury of the lodge. The firm, kind manner of the leaders of the meeting quickly restored order, while the melting, winning spirit of the Master predominated at this and all other sittings of the convention.

In the forenoon of the second day President Blanchard had a Bible reading. The culpability of those who listened to lodge oaths "and do not utter it;" that Masonry is the "image of the beast," that the worship at lodge altars is the worship of devils, were points made and clinched by a "Thus saith the Lord."

In the afternoon a business session was held which resulted in the election of Bro. Enos Collins, president; Bro. Isaac Bancroft, State Lecturer; W. W. Warner, Recording and Corresponding Secretary.

Bro. Stoddard gave a clear analysis of the obligation "which makes the Mason." He showed it to be a covenant with death that shall be disannulled. His arraignment of lodge oaths was convincing and scathing.

W. W. Ames followed, stating among other things that as he was an anti-slavery man so he was an Anti-mason.

In the evening Bro. Lowe exemplified the degrading ceremony of lowering a candidate to the third degree. The hall was crowded with an attentive and an instructed audience.

On the 23d of November, a memorial service was held in honor of Thurlow Weed. Appropriate resolutions were adopted.

Bro. Stoddard gave an account of his conferences with this patriot just before his death. After which the convention adjourned.

Minnesota State Meeting.

According to announcement the State Convention met in the Court House at Blue Earth City. The county officers had kindly granted the use of the Court House for the meeting, and Bro. Rufus Johnson had provided for lighting and warming it. He had also secured accommodations in the families of the city for the entertainment of delegates, so that it was not necessary, as on some occasions it has been, to send delegates to hotels. The weather was extremely cold, the thermometer on the first night of our meeting registering 26 degrees below zero. Owing to the state of the weather and the fact that trains were late, no meeting was held on Wednesday evening, and the convention assembled for the first time on Thursday morning.

The first half hour was spent in devotional exercises, led by Rev. Thos. Hartley. This was a meeting of much power, the Holy Spirit being evidently poured upon us from on high. After this hour of prayer, a short address was delivered by President Charles A. Blanchard, on the need of faith for the success of our work. At the close of this address the President, Prof. E. G. Paine, announced the various committees.

In the afternoon there was an address by Prof. E. G. Paine, of Wasioja Seminary, on the fundamental principles of our reform. A report was then made on the state of the work in various parts of the State. Messrs. Morrill, Paine, Johnson and Hartley speaking for Winona, Dodge, Fairibault and Waseca counties.

In the evening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. A. C. Hand, after which President Blanchard addressed a good audience on the objections to Anti-masonry and the objections to Freemasonry.

Friday morning the convention met, and after devotional exercises the committee on work reported as follows:

1. There should be a State agent appointed and paid for his labor.
2. Volunteer agents should be appointed in all counties where there are men who are able and willing to do the work.
3. All our local associations should be animated, encouraged and enthused, while new ones should be organized as rapidly as possible.
4. A subscription should now be taken for the support of our State lecturer.

After the adoption of this report Rev. Robt. J. Williams was elected State lecturer and for supervision of labor in counties the following named persons were appointed: Dodge county, Prof. E. G. Paine; Fairibault county, Rufus Johnson; Waseca county, Rev. Thos. Hartley; Winona county, W. H. Morrill; Martin county, Rev. W. H. McChesney.

The committee on finance then reported on the expenses of the convention, showing that provision for them was already made, and that there was a small balance in the treasury. After announcements and the singing of the doxology the convention adjourned to 1:30 P. M.

In the afternoon there were devotional exercises led by the State lecturer elect, Rev. Robt. J. Williams, and then addresses by Rev. Thos. Hartley and Rufus Johnson, and in the evening another address by President C. A. Blanchard.

The Gospel and Masonry in Sauk County, Wis.

DEAR BRO. K.:—On Sabbath, the 19th November, I preached at a place called Peck's Corners, at 11 A. M., from 1st Timothy 1:5: "Now the end of the commandment is charity; out of a pure heart and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned."

In speaking of faith as a fundamental grace, without which we can neither be justified nor cleansed from all unrighteousness, nor filled with the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, I said I feared that there were many in the churches who feign faith, and many others in the world who believe what is written about the Lord Jesus Christ who have no saving faith in Christ. Of Jesus it is written, "He shall save his people from their sins." The salvation of the Gospel, then, is primarily a salvation from sin. But how can a person trust in the Lord Jesus Christ as his personal Saviour from sin who is conscious of clinging to sin, and refusing to do what God in his Word commands? What! believe in your heart that Jesus does save you from sin, while, at the same time, you are conscious of clinging to sin; and refusing obedience to God? Impossible! What is it, then, that such people have which they call faith. It is the desire and expectation that Jesus will save them, and not the confidence that he does save them.

The apostle James teaches us that we deceive ourselves, if we hope for heaven, and are not doers of the known will of God. The apostle John exhorts us not to let any man deceive us. "He that doeth righteousness is righteous; he that committeth sin is of the devil." This is the doctrine of the beloved disciple.

It is manifest, then, that Christ does not accept and save any that live in known sin.

No one can be said to be saved from sin who still clings to and continues to commit sin. It could not be said that Christ saves a man from drunkenness who still gets drunk; or that he saves a man from licentiousness who continues to commit adultery. How is it, then, that so many profess faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and still are Freemasons or Odd-fellows, or members of some other carnal brotherhood. Do they not know that God commands believers in Christ not to be unequally yoked together with unbelievers? Do they not know that Christ-rejecting Jews, Mohammedans, pagans, spiritualists, deists and unbelievers, of every grade, who acknowledge the existence of some God and a future state, are just as freely made Masons as Christians are? How, then, can they yoke themselves up in covenant relations with unbelievers, if they know that God has forbidden it? Does not God forbid believers to yoke themselves with unbelievers; just as plainly as he forbids swearing or stealing, or lying or adultery? Can a man have unfeigned faith in Christ who continues to swear or steal or lie, or who lives in adultery? If he can not, neither can the man have unfeigned faith in Jesus Christ who is yoked with unbelievers in Freemasonry or some other carnal brotherhood.

He who teaches either by precept or example that we can have unfeigned faith in Christ and yet refuse obedience to the known will of God teaches a damnable heresy, and ought to be cast out of the church, for it is manifest that he can have no place in the spiritual body of Christ. Why, then, should such a moral excrescence be permitted to adhere to the visible church?

The light which was in these Masonic ministers and laymen has become darkness, and the darkness has become so great that when the Lord Jesus comes to judge them by the word that He has spoken, and it becomes manifest in the light of the judgment that they have built for eternity upon the sand, they will be astonished, and will cry out "Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name?" But it will be too late to correct the fatal error of their lives—that of calling Jesus Lord while refusing to do as he commands. Alas, that so many in the visible church should go in the beaten way to hell, instead of searching out the straight gate and walking in the narrow way that leads to heaven.

In the conference meeting that followed the sermon at Peck's Corners, a Mason violently assailed the wholesome doctrines preached. He said Masons were just as good and better than Anti-masons.

I replied it was not a question of who were the best fellows; but a question of loyalty to Christ. I read the Divine command, not to be yoked with unbelievers; and, if they were yoked, to come out and be separate; to so totally renounce their covenant obligations, as never again to touch the unclean thing. "Now," said I, "do you think you can refuse to do as Christ, by the Holy Ghost, commands you, and yet thrust yourself upon Jesus, and believe in your heart that he does receive and save you, when you know that you are unreconciled to God; that you are flatly refusing to do what he commands you? Impossible! You merely feign faith. What you call faith is merely a false hope which you can never realize. It will perish in the judgment; just as the house built upon the sand fell when the flood came."

There was quite a breeze of excitement. Some rejoiced in the truth and in the faith of Jesus; but one man, especially, seemed madly bent on rejecting the truth, and building for eternity upon the sand. But I quietly and firmly maintained the truth as it is in Jesus, that Masonry must be renounced, or Jesus cannot be received by faith. I speak now of those who know the truth, that in Masonry the believer is yoked with unbelievers, and that God forbids it, and commands the believer to come out. Faith in Christ to that man is impossible if he refuses to obey.

Let us warn and entreat and persuade these erring brethren "with all long-suffering and doctrine,' if, peradventure, some may be reclaimed from their apostacy, and "garfted in" again to Christ; and be found at last fruit-bearing branches of the vine. C. F. Hawley.

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

Nominations for 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
of Illinois.

For Vice-President.
JOHN A. CONANT.
of Connecticut.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

Empty professions are depraving, and Democratic and Republican professions are empty. This Pres. C. A. Blanchard, shows with great clearness in his Thanksgiving sermon published in this number. Thousands of Democrats voted for Van Buren (Free Soil) in 1848, who never went back, but became Republicans. Senator Logan, General Grant, and many other men who now run the Republican party were Democrats twenty years ago. The Republicans are for tariff for revenue, with discrimination for protection; the Democrats for the very same; and both are on record for saving the results of the war. What is the difference between them that one should boast against the other?

—W. H. Ross of Allegan, Mich., reports 27 American votes cast in Allegan county, the largest number (8) being in the town of Hopkins. The Prohibition vote in the same county was 38 straight tickets.

—When Thurlow Weed undertook the management of the Albany Evening Journal in 1830, there were 211 newspapers published in New York State. Of these thirty-two were radically Anti-masonic and the Journal was the thirty-third.

The Home Ballot.

A very sensible and forcible letter from the pastor of the Congregational church, Galva, Ill., says:

I am sorry that the American Party has omitted the equal political rights of men and women from its platform. Pres. Blanchard reflects on the platform drawn up by the New York Weekly Witness because it omits the lodge; but on the other hand it recognizes the equal political rights of women. It seems to me so short-sighted to work to Christianize the politics of our country, and at the same time give one's influence to disfranchise the women who make up at least two-thirds of the membership of the churches of the country. This country can only be purified and saved when the homes are more perfectly represented in the government, and that will be when those most deeply interested in the homes—the mothers, wives and sisters—have the ballot. The lodge is essentially a male institution, and it will not flourish as a "secret ring" in politics when the home, by ballot, can protect itself. There are many advantages that are coming to the country, besides the destruction of the liquor traffic, by giving the ballot to women. The party that most directly works to this great end is the one I will hereafter work with. Why should Bro. Feemster in his battle with the lodge turn aside to gratify the whiskyites, and all other bad people and elements in the country, by declaring that this great reform is dead? It will not die while God lives and Christianity exists to bless and exalt the home. I thank Pres. Blanchard for reminding Bro. Feemster that "women suffrage is not dead" in his Oshkosh letter. Faithfully yours,

C. C. Harrah.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

—The West Nebraska United Brethren conference lately met near Aurora, Hamilton county, passed a vote of condemnation against the lodge, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, etc.

—The cable reports of Mr. D. L. Moody's serious illness, published by the daily journals, of which mention was made in these columns lately, happily proved to have been unfounded. Mr. Moody has, in reply to the sympathetic inquiries of his friends, sent word by cable that there is no foundation for the reports that he is suffering from nervous prostration. He is, he says, perfectly well. This is intelligence which will be very welcome to the many friends of the evangelist here, who, knowing the arduous labors he is performing in England, were prepared to credit the report of his breakdown.

—It is reported that an organ for the liberal wing of the Congregational church is to be established in Boston. One hundred thousand dollars were offered to give it a start, and it is understood that a corporation has been formed to control it. It will be a powerful rival of the Congregationalist. This movement explains why some of the Congregational papers have become suddenly wary while not long since their editors were earnestly combatting the Smyth-Beecher theories.

—The "General Council" branch of the Lutheran church has a rule forbidding church members from belonging to secret societies; but in the church at Rockville, Conn., the pastor attempted to enforce the law against members of secret societies within the congregation, but failed in the attempt. He was obliged to vacate his office, and, in withdrawing, took with him a part of the congregation, and organized a new church. The majority retained posession of the church property and called a new pastor, who was duly installed by order of the president of the New York Ministerium!

—Elder J. H. Austin writes that on the evening of the 3d inst. at the Mennonite Hall, in Goshen, Ind., Elder Breneman, the traveling missionary of the denomination, while expounding the doctrines of the church and its Bible views of Christian obligations, gave full and explicit testimony against the lodge and all its allied secret societies. Some looked morose and sour, but most looked a "thank-God" from their bright and appreciative countenances. They held a series of meetings for one week; seven were received to membership. So it is evident that God will bless and save souls even if in preaching the whole truth. Baal worship is rebuked from the pulpit. O! that there were more such living testimony.

—A missionary steamer, whose hull and machinery weigh only six tons; is now moored in the Thames in London. The name of the vessel is "Peace," and it has been built for the Baptist Missionary Society, who destine it for the service of the mission in the upper reaches of the Congo River. The boat can be taken to pieces readily for transport purposes.

—A memorial church to David Livingstone has been erected at Blantyre, where he was reared. Dr. Blaikie relates of old Neil Livingstone, the father, that he was the founder of a missionary society and also of a missionary prayer-meeting in Blantyre. He bought or borrowed as many missionary books as he could lay his hands on. The heroes of the household were Martyn, Judson, Carey, and Zinzendorff; so that from his earliest years David Livingstone was steeped in the literature of Christian missions.

—A graphic picture of the present "liberal" movement in theology is penned by Dr. Cunningham Geike, of London, who, in speaking of Wellhausen and his school says: "In the new volume of the Encyclopedia Brittanica, Dr. Wellhausen, of all men, has been entrusted with the article on Israel. Abraham or Isaac are not named in it; and the story of Moses is diminished to a thread. He does not mention Joseph. In fact, the Bible is a mere trickle of history through a meadow of fable."

Wm. Taylor.

Albany, Mo. Nov. 27, 1882.

Editor Cynosure:—I see inqniry made with regard to the probable connection of William Taylor, of the "India Mission" with Freemasonry. I made the acquaintance of two of his brothers, one a farmer living in the north part of Mercer county, Mo.; the other a minister who had been sometime also in California. The one who is a farmer was trustee of a church in his vicinity, and gave me liberty to lecture in the church, which I did, and thus hastened the persecutions against Bro. Orr for it was on his circuit. Mr. Taylor professed to be anti-secret, but when trouble came lacked back-bone from head to heel. The minister acknowledged himself both a Mason and an Odd-fellow, and said he was convinced of the sin and had no, affiliation with the orders. He told Bro. Orr, if my memory is correct, that his brother William was both a Mason and Odd-fellow, but said he had not affiliated with the fraternities for years. This I believe to be the truth in the case. The minister above refered to made some concessions to Bro. Orr, which he no doubt recanted when the persecution arose against that brother. He was a witness against Bro. Orr. E. G. Cooper.

HOME AND FARM.

Why Some are Poor.

Cream is allowed to mold and spoil. Silver spoons are used to scrape kettles. The scrubbing-brush is left in the water. Nice handled knives are thrown into hot water. Brooms are never hung up. Dish-cloths are thrown were mice can destroy them. Tubs and barrels are left in the sun to dry and fall apart. Clothes are left on the line to whip to pieces in the wind. Pie-crust is left to sour, instead of making a few tarts for tea. Dried fruit is not taken care of in season and becomes wormy. Vegetables are thrown away that would make a good dinner. The cork is left out of the syrup jug and the flies take possession. Bits of the meat are thrown out that would make excellent hash for breakfast. Coffee, tea and spices are left to stand open and lose their strength. Pork spoils for the want of salt and because the brine wants scalding.

The above why's, which we clip from an exchange, apply to the household. Now let us look out doors: Wagons, implements, etc, are unpainted and uncovered, and hence rapidly decay. Crops are destroyed for lack of good fences. Domestic animals become carcasses or die because not propelry fed and protected. Many animals are ruined or die because they are not promptly cared for when ailing from accident or disease. Many a crop is a partial or total failure because it was not planted, cultivated or harvested in season. The lack of good sheds, stables, etc., often causes great waste of forage and other losses. The use of poor seed often loses a crop, and the lack of good implements is frequently very damaging. Failure to exercise brains in planning and management is very expensive; and the excessive use of stimulants and narcotics, and the loss of time spent where they are purchased and consumed, often leads to both poverty and disgrace. These are among the cogent reasons why some, aye, many, do not accumulate sufficient property to render themselves comparatively independent.

PACKING EGGS FOR WINTER.—Take a box of sufficient size, sprinkle oats on the bottom, stand the eggs on the little end and so close together that they will not tip over, sprinkle oats between each layer and on top. Cover tightly and set in a cool place. They will keep seven months and be clean and fresh.

FEEDING FLAXSEED.—Flaxseed has a very important feeding value, and can be ground by mixing it with other grain—1 of flaxseed to 12 or 15 of corn, or corn and oats, peas and oats, barley and oats, etc. There being about 37 per cent. of oil in flaxseed, it cannot be ground in an ordinary mill without mixing it with other grain, to absorb the oil: but this oil of the flaxseed improves the feeding value of the other grain very much. Besides, flaxseed is rich in aluminoide, or muscle-forming food, and this improves Indian corn materially. During the winter season, when cattle get a diet of dry food, and especially in the West, where the dry stalks of the corn fields furnish the largest share of coarse fodder, this mixture of flaxseed in the grain ration will have the most beneficial effect. This extra proportion of oil will have a slightly laxative effect upon the bowels, and prevent impaction of the manifolds, and other diseases arising from constipation. The proportion of 1 of flaxseed to 12 or 15 of corn and oats will produce marked effect upon the coat of cattle and horses, rendering it as glossy as when on good grass. We have fed it with great satisfaction to calves and colts. It is also in the right proportion for milch cows, keeping them in good health, preventing indigestion, and garget, but a little less should be given to cows shortly before coming in.—National Live Stock Journal.

FARMING PROSPEROUS.—The fame of our agricultural lands has reached every hamlet in Europe, and, coupled with the knowledge of the great prosperity existing here among all classes, is bringing to our farms and workshops thousands of foreigners every day. Nothing could more forcibly illustrate the prosperous condition of affairs throughout the country than the unusual demand for both skilled and unskilled labor. Notwithstanding the arrival of at least three thousand emigrants a day, yet the movement for higher wages has been general and successful in a large number of trades. The demand for agriculturists seems greater than the supply, tending in some sections of the country to higher wages.

APPLES FOR HEALTH.—Apples in addition to being a delicious fruit, make a pleasant medicine. A raw mellow apple is digested in an hour and a half, while boiled cabbage requires five hours. The most healthy desert that can be placed on the table is a baked apple. If eaten frequently at breakfast, with coarse bread and butter, without meat or flesh of any kind, it has an admirable effect on the general system, often removing constipation, correcting acidities, and cooling off febrile conditions more effectually than the most improved medicines. If families could be induced to substitute apples, ripe and sound, for pies, cakes and sweetmeats, with which their children are frequently stuffed, there would be a diminution of doctor's bills in a single year sufficient to lay in a stock of this delicious fruit for the whole season's use.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Hollsnd, Mich , and oth rs. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00: $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen. $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers. 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen. $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each: per dozen $1.25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Erust," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Oddfellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen

MISCELLANEOUS.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. Table of Contents: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each: per dozen. $2 00.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. Each of these able writers in clear, forcible language treats the subject in one or more of its varied phases. Rev. David McDill in six chapters treats of 1. "Their Antiquity; 2 Their Secrecy; 3. "Oaths and Promises;" 4 "Profaneness" 5. "Their Exclusiveness;" 6. "False Claims." Prest. Blanchard handles the topic: "Shall Christians join Secret Societies?" in a masterly way, showing clearly that they are all opposed to the genius of Christianity; and Dr. Beecher closes with his Report on Secret Societies, which was adopted by the Congregational Association of Illinois at Ottawa in 1866. In cloth, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.25. Paper cover, 15 cents; per dozen, $1.25

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 25 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin, objects, what it has done and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the end sought; the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and By-laws of the Association. condition of the Carpenter donation, with engraving of building donated by Mr. Carpenter; tables showing the number of pastors and communicants in churches that exclude members of secret societies, tabular view of local, county, state and national conventions, and list of organizations auxiliary to the National Christian Association; brief opinions of eminent men on secret societies, and testimonies of religious bodies against them. 25 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Minutes of the Syracuse Convention. Containing addresses by Rev. B. T. Roberts, Chas. W. Greene, Esq., Prof. C. A. Blanchard, Rev. D. P. Rachhun, Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Mrs. M. E. Gage, Elder J. R. Baird and others. Unpublished Reminiscences of the Morgan Times, by Elder David Bernard; Recollections of the Morgan Trials, as related by Victory Birdseye, Esq., and presented by his daughter, Mrs. C. B. Miller; Secretary's Report; Roll of Delegates; Songs of Mr. G. W. Clark; Paper by Enoch Honeywell; Constitution N. C. A.; Reports of Committees and a Report of the Political Meeting. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Proceedings of Pittsburgh Convention. Containing Official Reports; Addresses by Rev. D. R. Kerr, D. D., Rev. B. T. Roberts, Rev. G. T. R. Melser, Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., Prest. J. Blanchard, Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., Rev. Woodruff Post, Rev. Henry Cogswell, Prof. C. A. Blanchard and Rev. W. E. Coquilette; also Report of the Political Mass Convention, with Platform and Candidates for the Presidential Campaign of 1876. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Anti-Mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 31 Cynosure tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies; and the dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized secrecy are shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public. Those who wish to circulate anti-Masonic Tracts ought to have the book to select from. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen. 75 cents.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

FOR SALE BY

EZRA A. COOK,

No. 7 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

In the Coils; or the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historial sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of every-day life, and showing how individual, domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. Parents who wish, not only to keep their children out of these night-schools of Satan, but to give them arguments against them in the most attractive dress, will do well to purchase this book. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen. $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Stearns' Review of Two Masonic Addresses. In this scathing review the lying pretensions of the order are clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Letters on Masonry. Showing the antagonism between Freemasonry and the Christian religion. Paper cover, 30 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers; price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen, $7.50

Freemasonry and the M. E. Church. Let every lover of truth and justice read this report of the trial of Rev. J. T. Michael, showing how he was driven out of the M. E. church for opposing Masonry and loving Methodism. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate, and afterward in pamphlet form. The Evangelical Repository, reviewing it, says: "This pamphlet consists of a series of articles originally published in the Church Advocate, Lancaster, Pa. Elder M. S. Newcomer opposes secret societies, and especially Freemasonry and Elder G. W. Wilson defends the system. We are free to say that Mr. Newcomer has thoroughly routed his opponent at every point. Mr. Wilson speaks by the book, as he is a Royal Arch Mason." 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Lonisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The propeller Morning Star, plying between New Orleans and Magnolia Plantation exploded its boiler near Bellair plantation Wednesday morning, killing three persons instantly, blowing into the river and drowning a fireman and seven roustabouts, and probably fatally scalded six others. The boat was racing.

—A special from Chihauhua, Mexico, states that the recent massacre in Casa Grande by Indians proves to have been a horrible affair. A band of Apaches numbering 500 crossed the border, descended upon the little town, and began an indiscriminate massacre, fully seventy-five persons falling victims. Several girls and women were carried off by the savages.

—The reported resignation of Secretary Folger was a Wall street canard.

—The voluminous report of the Tariff Commission recommends a reduction of from 15 to 25 per cent. on many articles of general consumption and of 40 to 50 per cent. on sugar, with a liberal addition to the free list.

—In his annual report the Secretary of the Navy recommends the appropriation of three and one half million dollars for the construction of a steel ram, steel cruisers, and an iron dispatch boat. He deplores the disappearance of the American commercial marine from the seas, and recommends that a large compensation be given to American ships carrying the mails.

—The corner stone of the new Chamber of Commerce in this city is to be laid with appropriate ceremonies on Wednesday of this week—if the weather permits. The tower and spire of this building will rise over 300 feet in the air.

—The police raided five gambling hells in Chicago last week Tuesday evening, arresting over one hundred inmates and destroying the furniture of the rooms. Another dealer was raided Friday afternoon.

—The United States Rolling Stock Co., manufacturers of locomotives and cars, are about to remove to the southern borders of Chicago and erect immense shops and a small city for their workmen.

—The cold wave which swept over the Northern States last Wednesday brought down the mercury 10 to 18 degrees below zero in this city. At LaCrosse 25 below was reported; at Dubuque 18 to 20; Omaha 20 to 21; Galesburg 20; Mattoon, Ill., 12 below.

—Many mayors of Illinois cities assembled at Springfield Thursday to take into consideration the needed improvement of country roads. Carter Harrison of Chicago, was chairman of the meeting.

—The Apache leader Ju, and his band, surrounded and butchered a party of thirty-five men near Casa Grande, Chihauhau, Mexico. Five of the victims were Americans. The posse had followed the Indians for the purpose of recovering stolen stock.

—Judge Hilton, who not very long ago excluded Jews from his hotel at Saratoga, offered ten thousand dollars for the relief of the Russian-Jewish refugees in America.

—It is reported that with the new year great changes are to be made in the British Cabinet, Earl Derby and Sir Hugh Childers to accept office and Mr. Gladstone to retire with the understanding that the Marquis of Hartington shall succeed to the Premiership.

—The loss of property by the great fire on Thursday in London, England—the largest which has occurred in that city for over twenty years—is estimated at over fifteen millions. A whole square of buildings, covering more than two acres of ground, was destroyed, and as the property was amongst the most valuable in London, the loss will probably be even greater than it is now estimated. A fireman was killed and several citizens injured by falling walls.

—The Hungarian Government, surprised at the great tide of immigration to America from the mountain districts, has requested the Austrian authorities to stop all persons unprovided with passports.

—The snowstorm of Wednesday night and Thursday in Great Britain was the severest known for years. Numerous shipwrecks occurred on the coast, and the loss to all descriptions of property is very great.

—Very serious floods are reported in Paris, the water standing a foot deep in some of the principal streets. The island on which the Cathedral of Notre Dame is situated swarms with rats driven out of the sewers by the high water, and the people are suffering severely from their depredations.

—The French Government has asked the Chambers for an appropriation of one million francs to relieve sufferers by the floods. The Seine continues to rise.

—Protests have been received by the German Government from the Chambers of Commerce of all the seaport towns against the proposed ironclad law prohibiting the importation of American meats.

—The result of the trial of Arabi Bey which has been progressing in Cairo, was that he at length plead guilty to the charge of rebellion. He was at once sentenced to be hung, but the Khedive promptly commuted the sentence to banishment for life. It is thought that the culprit may make his abode in England. If he should return to Egypt the death sentence would take effect.

PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.

SCOTCH RITE MASONRY ILLUSTRATED,

Is the title selected for the complete Illustrated Ritual of all the Scotch Rite Degrees. The Ineffable or Scotch Rite Degrees begin with the 4th degree, as the first three, called Blue Lodge or Ancient Craft Masonry, are common to the Scotch, York and all other Masonic Rites. This Rite consists of 29 degrees (4th to 33d,) and the manuscript with drawings for profusely illustrating the work are all ready and will make two volumes of 400 pages or more. The expense of getting out the first edition will be very heavy but as soon as the cash is secured for 1,500 copies of each volume work will be commenced. Prices per volume will be as follows: In cloth $1.00 per vol. $9.00 per doz. In paper covers 50 cts. per vol. $4.00 per doz.

All cash orders received before publication will be filled at 20 per cent discount.

TOPICS OF THE TIME.

The laying of the corner-stone of the new Chamber of Commerce by the Chicago Board of Trade, took place last Wednesday. A short march with bands of music in the sharp winter air and brisk west wind brought the procession of two thousand to the southwest corner of the Grand Pacific Hotel—a procession finely contrasting with the frequent lodge parades in our streets. They were the true architects of Chicago's greatness, while the others though bearing the name of builders, are only destroyers of honor and fair fame. The exercises announced for the corner-stone laying were simple, and honorably represented the concentrated business of a great city, which is nominally, at least, Christian. They were cut short by the cold wind, but were thus arranged: Opening prayer by one of the Chicago pastors; the singing of "America" by the assemblage; the laying of the stone, and reading of the documents placed therein; an address by the president of the Board of Trade; an oration by its secretary; and singing of the "Doxology," accompanied by the band. The resemblance of this programme to that used at a similar occasion a few months since by the business men of New York, encourages us to believe that conscience, and a sense of obligation to that God who gives the power to get wealth, are not yet eliminated from the great business interests of our country.

In the debate on the Postal Appropriation bill in the House last week there were some facts of great interest to the public, and especially to students of political and social science. The number of letters mailed in 1880 have been tabulated from the official count, and show some remarkable figures. New York leads the list, her post-offices receiving 211,435,640 letters that year. Pennsylvania is next, with 105,237,340; Massachusetts third, with 69,010,604; and Illinois a close fourth, with 68,643,328. At the other end of the list Alaska begins with but 6,812 letters or only an average of .22 for each person. The Southern States bring up a solid phalanx of low marks, three, seven and eight millions. Texas stands first with 18,723,016. South Carolina and Rhode Island have nearly the same record, while Connecticut with 23,789,376 surpasses Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas combined. But the average column is most instructive. The District of Columbia shows the greatest activity with the pen, the dwellers therein averaging 85.31 letters each. The far West makes a higher average than any other region, thus: Colorado, 55.22; Arizona, 31.61; Dakota, 29.76; Montana, 40.25. New York, with all its metropolitan interests, shows 41.58, and New England hardly averages 28. In the South again the figures run low to 6, 7 and 8, Texas again leading at 11.70. The intellectual stimulus of the Rocky Mountain region is thus seen to be equal to the fomentation of Wall street, and is decidedly healthier. But the chief problem is that presented by the illiteracy among the poor whites and blacks at the South. One ill effect of the late elections has been to thrust aside the discussions of two years ago, led by Edmunds, Logan and Tourjee, which made us hope that a noble scheme would result for the general education of these classes. Civil service reform is insignificant in comparison.

The reckless competition which has forced upon the country a number of needless railway lines is aptly illustrated by Jay Gould's yacht building. Gould lives up the Hudson and likes to come down to Wall street in his own steamer. But he has no peace even here, for a Mordecai of a silk-dealer named Jarrett has a yacht too, and tantalizes the great broker by firing a gun when he passes Gould's landing, and mocks him when he runs by him on the river with his faster boat. So Gould is building a yacht 212 feet long and nearly all boilers and engines, which he is determined shall be the fastest vessel ever built. His boat may follow the Mississippi plan and heave to with a big explosion, but his railroads blow up the country and wreck business with a panic.

The investigation at Washington of the fated Jeannette exploring expedition to the Arctic seas is revealing little not before known of the perils, the battle with the ice and then with death itself, who was the final and terrible victor. Dr. Collins, who accompanied the expedition as a civilian scientist, has left some records which show that Lieut. DeLong, the commander, was at times not above the manners of a martinet; but the testimony of Capt. Niebaum, a Russian and the last man from whom DeLong received provisions off the north coast of Alaska, goes to prove him too obstinate to profit by the experience of men familiar with Arctic life. Niebaum supplied him with a large number of dogs and says that the killing of these dogs lost the party. They are, he says, a necessity in these northern regions, as they are sure to find bear meat left in caches in the ice by hunters. DeLong's diary tells of the killing of these animals. When they were gone no hope was left. The late discovery of this mistake will not go far to remove the fearful dread of these inaccessible regions, which the pitiful story of DeLong's wretched death has impressed upon ambitious explorers. It will be years before any follow in his track.

Two boiler explosions in Illinois, one of a sawmill at Shawneetown, the other in a manufactory of agricultural machinery at Canton, were sufficiently fatal in their effects to demand a careful investigation. The Canton disaster occured on Saturday, in an establishment employing 300 men, of whom nine were killed. Three boilers exploded, all of them in fine condition and one new; the engineer was a careful and competent man, and the reason of the disaster seems inexplicable, since the engineer was one of the victims. The theory supported by a Pittsburg mechanic, and demonstrated by him in several actual experiments, may yet have to be received as a more important fact in running an engine than low water, namely, that a sudden exhaustion of steam from a strong boiler, by starting the engine or otherwise, allows the water which has been held, as it were in compression, to expand into steam in an instant with a force no ordinary boiler can withstand. With all the appliances for the safe management of this useful but terrible agent, the world may be thankful when one less cruel shall take its place.

In the discussion of Sabbath desecration in the Chicago Methodist minister's meeting not long ago, Mr. Fawcett, pastor of a North Side church, was prominent. That his views were radical may be understood from the fact that it was he who proposed a new party with reform principles and name "American," just after the election. He has been watched by the Sabbath-breaking sheets, and especially the Tribune, that "some occasion might be found against him." He gave a lecture entitled "Great Blunders;" forthwith some of its lines were compared with a lecture by Talmage of Brooklyn on "Big Blunders." Two or three ideas were culled out which were treated in a similar manner and Mr. Fawcett was loudly trumpeted as a plagiarist. Talmage was interviewed, and the wily reporter got from him some expressions which, in print, had the bitterness of condemnation, whether Mr. Talmage so expressed himself or no. This cunning and contemptible attack Mr. Fawcett has met manfully in a challenge to the Tribune and Mr. Talmage, to print the two lectures entire and together, since in no other way could he meet an enemy who, seems to have lost, with his regard for the Sabbath, most of his scruples about other moral questions.

—New testimony and of great importance and interest, confirming the account of Mr. Weed, has come to the Cynosure, and will be spread before our readers next week.

The Testimony of an Odd-fellow.

BY REV. WM. JOHNSTON.

I have lately received some testimony in reference to the order of Odd-fellows which I must needs divulge, that it may no longer lie under uncharitable suspicion.

Not many days since, in passing through a town in south-western Iowa, and stopping at a hotel for dinner, I had an opportunity of listening to a conversation that may serve to throw some light on the morality of the order. The parties engaged in the conversation were a young man whom I took to be a travelling salesman, and a citizen of the place, who was addressed as doctor, and who seemed to have some pretty high aspirations in his profession. The young man seemed to have a preference for the Masons, and intimated that they were more benevolent than the Odd-fellows. The doctor replied, "That's just where you are left."

After some further conversation the young man said he supposed they were a pretty good thing. "Yes," said the Esculapian warming up in his zeal, "If a man lives up to Odd-fellowship I'll be"——here supply a cognate of condemned—"if he can help but be a good man." Again he swore by the name of his God, that Odd-fellowship was a good thing. In the space of about five minutes, three times he swore by the name of his God, and three times he invoked damnation if these things were not so.

Several times before I have heard similar testimonies, similarly attested by fearful oaths. Now if it be so "that an oath for confirmation is an end of all strife," and if "at the mouths of two or three witnesses every word shall be established," does not the excellence of the order seem to be almost indicated: When so many Odd-fellows can swear at all times, before private citizens as well as before magistrates and by all conceivable oaths that the order is a good thing, how can there be any further controversy?

After the excellency of the order had been attested by oaths, the parties turned to the discussion of its benevolent workings. I was busily reading a paper at the time, yet so as not to interfere with my hearing or prevent a sharp outlook for fresh information. But the dinner bell sounded just where I wanted to hear, and I had to forego the pleasure of being further edified. But what I heard gave me food for reflection over my "roast beef," and I will give you some of my thoughts.

Odd-fellows tell us they are required to believe in a God; and the question came up in my mind, Is it the more honorable to deny the existence of a God, or to admit there is a God and then blaspheme his name in ordinary conversation, in an attempt to bolster up the goodness of a Christless institution! I would certainly have as much confidence in a man who denies God, as in a man who profanes his holy name from day to day. I would have as much confidence in a man who denies there is a home of everlasting sorrow into which the wicked shall at length be turned, as in the man who admits the doctrine, and yet profanely invokes damnation, if he has mistaken the character of a silly institution with which he is connected. Then I thought still farther, if a man must necessarily be good who lives up to the regulations of Odd-fellowship, how comes it that there are so many Odd-fellows whose throats are an open sepulcher, and who, in hotels, on the streets, in depots and railroad trains are giving vent to poisonous exultations from a putrefying corpse in the heart. As we listen to their profanity and often their vulgarity as well, we must say with the Psalmist—"Their inward part is very wickedness, their throat is an open sepulchre."

And now if these lines should fall under the eye of any professed follower of Christ, I wish to call his attention to a lie of the devil, to which he is giving currency and, so far as he can, giving the sanction of Christianity. The profane, evil doer and devil-server swears by the great and dreadful name of God, that if a man lives up to the principles of Odd-fellowship he must be a good man, some Sabbath-school superintendent says Amen, and a minister of the Gospel pats him on the shoulder and exclaims, "Well said, my brother. Be a good Odd-fellow and thou shalt be saved." But down in yonder underworld of the damned the devil dances in hellish glee as he sees that even professed followers of Jesus have swallowed the hook that he has baited. For verily the devil understands the terms of salvation better than some who call themselves Christians. The devil knows full well that the faith of Jesus is the foundation of all real goodness, and that while men deny or ignore the faith of Jesus, the kingdom of darkness stands secure. The religion of Masonry and Odd-fellowship would give the Redeemer a starless crown, while the eyes of a sinful, dying race would be left to stream with everlasting sorrow.

Ye who say, that if a man lives up to Odd-fellowship he must be a good man, and especially ye Christian professors who endorse the devil's falsehood, I beseech you turn your eyes to the cross of Christ, which "will serve as a cynosure to direct you in this unknown navigation." Believe in Jesus as the son of God and the Saviour of men, and then you have laid the foundation, and the only foundation, on which men can build for eternity. On this foundation you may stand secure, though the heavens were on fire above, and the earth were reeling beneath you. Odd-fellowship builds on drifting sand, and when the voice of the Lord comes over the waters and it shall be called to stand the crucial test, both the order and its blinded devotees shall go down in the "red roaring flood."

The Church of Christ One.

BY REV. WARREN TAYLOR.

The unity of the church of Christ is an existing fact that ought to be everywhere recognized and acknowledged. By whatever name they are called, in whatever organization they are gathered, or though they were known by no name and gathered in no organization, the disciples of Christ are one body and one bread; and on a credible profession of him, are entitled to the privileges of the household of faith. Is it asked where is their unity, since they are divided into different denominations or "sects," called by different names, and have differences in their creeds, their forms of government, their terms of fellowship and modes of worship. Where is their unity, whilst they harbor jealousies among themselves and are sometimes found disputing and wrangling over these various points of difference? This is the question that I desire to answer. And—

1. The disciples of Christ are one in their relation to him. They have all believed in him, and been justified by his blood; they are all engrafted into him and receive their new life from him; they have all submitted to his authority, and given themselves to him and to his service, and they have all been embraced by him as his redeemed and his friends.

2. They are one in a common faith. Whatever in doctrine is essential to the character of a Christian or the salvation of the soul, that they all believe. They all believe in the eternity and the sovereignty of God, and in the trinity of the Godhead. They all believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures and the depravity of man. They all believe in the doctrine of regeneration by the Holy Spirit, and in the atonement of Christ. They all believe in a future judgment and in endless rewards and punishments. These doctrines are the fundamentals of the Christian system, and like the stones of an arch they are bound together, and must stand or fall together. If any one intelligently and sincerely embrace and confess these he is a Christian and ought to be regarded and treated as such, or if he wilfully denies these or any of these or fails to embrace them he puts himself outside of the communion of saints. But as all Christians hold to these essentials of the Christian system, however they may differ on questions of baptism or church order, I repeat it, they are one in the common faith.

3. Christians are one in the prevailing spirit by which they are animated in their labors and their struggles here. In spite of their infirmities and short-comings, in spite of their jealousies and strifes, things which we all ought long since to have put away, the strong prevailing spirit of every Christian is that of love to God, and to the souls of his fellow men. And in this they are all one.

4. Christians are all one in their hopes. They are all looking forward to the time when through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, they shall see his face and serve him without weakness and without interruption.

"This glorious hope revives our courage by the way."

It seems to me that these facts will naturally awaken some very practical reflections. But I leave these for the reader to make for himself.

The Saviour in his prayer That they all may be one, undoubtedly had his mind on the development or manifestation of the real existing unity of his church: And I confess it did my heart good to see how nearly the fulfillment of his prayer was being realized in a single town as shown in the Cynosure of Nov. 23, under the head of "Christian Union," where different churches, without renouncing their identity were all sweetly united in relieving the wants of the poor, comforting those who were in sorrow, and leading souls to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world.

REFORM STORY.

Holden with Cords.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LITTLE PEOPLE," "A SUNNY LIFE," ETC.

Chapter XXXII—The Mystery of Iniquity.

Rachel finished shelling her pan of peas and carried them into the kitchen. Then in obedience to a certain thrifty custom nearly obsolete now, but very common with industrious housewives of a former generation who did not choose to allow Satan even so small a vantage ground as a few idle moments between sundown and dark, she took out a half-finished sock on which her needles flew briskly till she had knit about six times around, when her inward musings took shape in this terse sentence:

"I don't see into it."

"Don't see into what, mother?" I asked. For we had now reached that comfortable stage in our matrimonial journey when to address each other by the parental title seems the most natural thing in the world.

"How Anson Lovejoy can be a Mason. Now I really like the man, and always have liked him from the very first. But when I find that he can take part in such ridiculous, blasphemous folly, and be himself actually master of a lodge initiating others into it, I—well, really I don't know what to think except that there is one more fool in the world than I had supposed."

And Rachel knit vigorously several more rounds while I pondered the subject in silence. I too liked Anson Lovejoy in spite of the fact that he was not only a Mason, but held the office of Worshipful Master of Fidelity Lodge, located in the flourishing village of Granby, Ohio; said lodge numbering among its membera one or two ministers, a saloon-keeper, one deacon, several notorious gamblers, and a general sprinkling of the lowest characters in the place, all "meeting on the level" in felicitous union and fellowship.

"Well, mother;" I said finally, "a man isn't always a fool because he does foolish things. The fact is I've had a little talk with him on the subject of Masonry, and I have come to the conclusion that it isn't the system as it really is that he admires, but an ideal existing only in his own imagination of something it might, could, would or should be if it was only properly understood, and more care exercised in admitting candidates; such delightfully impossible conditions in short, that I was strongly reminded of the old couplet,

'If wishes were horses beggars would ride;
If I was a sword it would hang by your side.'"

"Now father"—and Rachel laid down her knitting in her earnestness—"why don't you put it right to him about the oaths and obligations and ceremonies. You have been through them yourself and know all about it, so you are just the one. What if this man's soul should be required at your hands?"

"I did 'put it right to him.' I told him he had sworn to conceal the criminal acts of brother Masons, to warn them of approaching danger and help them out of all difficulties no matter what wrong-doing might be the cause. But he had one answer for every objection, and that was that he did not so understand Masonry, and only considered its obligations binding when they failed to conflict with any superior duty that he owed to God or to Government. I asked him if that was the way he explained them to candidates. He assured me it was. I told him flat that such teaching of Masonic obligations was a mistake and a contradiction; that Masonry owns no law and no authority outside of or superior to herself; that when she ceases to be a complete despotism, when she allows her members to put their own interpretation on the oaths and penalties; above all, when she elevates the Bible from a mere piece of lodge furniture on a level with the square and compass to be what the old Westminster divines called it, 'the only sufficient rule of faith and practice,' her power has fled. She simply cannot exist under such conditions."

"And what did he say to that?" asked Rachel.

"Well, that fellow Jervish came in just then and broke up our talk. I suppose he thinks me a fool and a fanatic. I consider him an honest, well-meaning man, whose chief mistake is in thinking that he can do what the Scriptures declare impossible, 'bring a clean thing out of an unclean.' "

"Well, I don't nnderstand it;" repeated Rachel, decidedly. "There must be something wrong somewhere, when a man can't see the plain trnth put right before him."

For Rachel was like most practical, matter-of-fact people, not subject to glamours of any sort. When she saw a truth she saw it clearly—a snn-illumined mount of God piercing heaven unclouded by bewildering fogs and mists, and conld not understand why any honest mind should fail to perceive it too. But I knew better how men like Anson Lovejoy can be made the apologists and defenders of a lie; how they naturally seek, the first disappointment over, to reconcile the teachings of Masonry with their own standard of human duty, and only succeed by an ingenious system of interpretations that, carried into practical effect, wonld annul the whole thing. My grandfather so reasoned till the murder of Morgan opened his eyes. But a man like Anson Lovejoy, who belonged to a generation that knew not Morgan—must another tragedy as fearful shock the public mind, and rouse in even the dullest that indignation so terrible because it is a dim shadow of the divine wrath against evil doers, before he could be made to see!

This question I silently asked myself, while Rachel rolled up her knitting, and called to Grace, our youngest, to light a lamp.

"Yes, mother;" answered Grace, and rose promptly from her seat on the back steps, where she was giving his first lesson in astronomy to a favorite nephew named Joe, of whom I can only say that he had already begun to develop a talent for mischief that bade fair in time to cast all the yonthful exploits of the original Joe quite into the shade. At the same moment the gate swung open and admitted a female figure with a tin pail.

"Mother, there is Mary Lyman come to borrow some yeast."

"Well, Grace, you can get it for her." And Rachel drew up her chair within the circle of the light and took her sewing, while she invited the new-comer with a kindly smile to sit down.

She was a girl of not more than seventeen—hardly that. Her large blue eyes, regular features, and heavy braids of tawny gold hair made her face one of singular beauty. But there was a sad, depressed look about her mouth, and a lack of youthful elasticity in her motions that made her seem older than she really was.

She took her pail of yeast and departed with a mnrmured word of thanks. Rachel sewed very fast for several minutes till she snapped her thread. Then she broke out,

"I say, it is a shame."

"What now, mother?"

"To keep that girl as they do. I know how it is, just as well as if I saw it; drudge, drudge from morning till night. Not a minute in the twenty-four she can call her own. No chance for improvement, but plenty of chances for everything else. It is too bad, poor orphan child!" added Rachel, who had all the large-hearted instincts of true motherhood, and its capabilities of indignation also.

"Well, I know it is too bad; but she'll be free in a year or so. That's one comfort."

"I wish her time was out now," responded Rachel. "Grace can't keep school and help me mnch. And I believe if I could have the training of Mary for awhile I might make something of her yet."

"What! at eighteen?" I asked with natural incredulity.

"Yes; at eighteen," answered Rachel, biting her thread with an air of decision. "It is a mistake to think the die for good or evil must be cast at a particular age. It all depends on circumstances. Now this girl makes me think of some tiger-lilies I remember grew behind the barn when I was a child. I don't know how they ever come there, in that sunless corner, but there they were, growing and blossoming in about the same fashion that she is ripening into womanhood. All she wants is a chance to develop herself. If I conld give her that I should feel that I had done one good work in the world before I leave it."

"Why, mother; your life has been nothing but giving and doing for forty years."

"Well, I don't know about that, father;" answered Rachel with a little shake of her head. But I conld see that her husband's praise was very sweet to her, nevertheless.

The girl of whom we had been speaking was, as Rachel said, an orphan whom fate, personified by the selectmen of Granby had delivered over to be the victim of a species of white slavery in the family of a Mr. Simon Peck. To scrub floors, feed the hogs, fetch the water, and lug a heavy baby about when there was nothing else for her to do, was the routine of her daily life varied by such small tyrannies and exactions from the younger Pecks as the ingenuity of their own minds or the example of their elders might suggest.

It was not strange that all Rachel's womanly feelings had been roused in behalf of the girl. But a natural refinement had kept her from assimilating with her rough and coarse surroundings, and she was now growing up to a dower of singular beauty. Who should say whether it would prove a blessing or a curse?

Rachel sewed away in silence for a few moments, and when she again spoke it was to recur to our former subject of talk.

"Well, I don't see, as I said before, how such men as Anson Lovejoy can defend Masonry, but I think I understand the reason why I don't understand it."

"What do yon mean, mother?"

"Why, it is the 'mystery of iniquity.' We talk about 'the mystery of godliness' that cannot be known except by Christians, but we forget there is something corresponding it on the other side. There are depths of Satanic craft just as there are depths of Redeeming Wisdom. We can't understand either. They are beyond us. It is the 'deceivableness of unrighteousness,' 'the strong delusion.' Mystery; that is just what it is, the mystery of iniquity."

And Rachel resumed the work which she had let fall in her earnestness, while I pondered over her words, and concluded that she was about right.

The Follies and Dangers of fashion were well illustrated last summer at Saratoga by an incident given in the Albany Evening Journal. The picture of a woman covered with jewels attended by a grim detective is a striking comment on the hollow hypocrisy of fashionable society: "The most conspicuous feature of the evening scene was a lady from Philadelphia, fair, and yonng, and petite, a Mrs. Moore, whose sleeveless dress of rare point-lace is said to have cost $20,000; and in whose hair and ears, and on whose shoulders, bosom, neck, wrists, and hands were displayed diamonds that must have run up into hundreds of thousands in value, in solitaires, crescents, horizontal bands, and graceful pendants, that flashed and gleamed whenever there was a shadow of an excuse for them. Her husband, a gentlemanly, middle-aged man in appearance, supported her on his arm; and a little in their rear, solemn-visaged and absorbed in intense watchfulness of her, a private detective in citizen's dress wound his way in and out amid the brilliant scene. It was a strange spectacle. People held their breath and called her the 'Diamond Qneen.' "

—The United Presbyterian keeps up the mnsic controversy in the church of which it is the organ, by securing and publishing opinions from Hon. Daniel Agnew, late Chief Justice of Pennsylvania, Wm. Murray of the New York Supreme Court, and A. M. Brown, a Pittsburgh lawyer, all affirming the validity of the late action of the General Assembly at Monmouth.

The Sermon.

The Sympathy of Christ with Man.

PREACHED FOR THE UNION PARK CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, BY THE PASTOR, REV. FREDERICK A. NOBLE, SUNDAY MORNING. DEC. 3, 1882.

"For we have not an High Priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities." Heb. 4:15.

Human sorrow is many sided. So there are many aspects in which sorrow can be viewed. The methods and purposes of its coming; the proper attitude to be assumed when its smiting tides are sweeping in against the soul; the consolations and snpports which are to be found under it, the lessons of resignation and trust that are in it, these are all qnestions having their roots in the one common fact of suffering; but standing out from it like so many branches from the stem of a single tree.

This morning we will try to look at the infirmities and diseases and losses and pangs of one sort and another which we are called npon to meet and endure as events that awaken a divine interest in onr behalf, as channels opened for the inflowing of holy influences upon the heart; as golden gates swnng back of Providence to let our sonls into closer companionship with God; or, to throw it all into a sentence, as special opportunities for Christ to show his sympathy to men.

"For we have not an High Priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities." How the heart kindles at the thought! What strength, what joy, what hope it pnts into the life to realize that in the midst of onr distresses, and when darkness is over us, and the whole horizon of our life is cloud-bonnd, and only woe is voicing itself in the soul, there is a love like the love of our Divine Lord, to throb down to us—an arm like the arm of him who came to litt up the bowed down, to reach out under us—a voice like the voice of him who called the dead ont of their graves to whisper to us of peace and safety!

But our object just now is not so much to dwell directly on the blessedness of this divine tenderness which is exercised toward us in our sorrows, as to separate it into its elements and look at them one by one, that thns the way may be prepared for each to see and know for himself, as otherwise might not be possible, how rich and sacred and helpfnl this sympathy of Jesus is.

With this end in view I remark:

1. That the sympathy of Christ with man is an intelligent sympathy. Christ has such a perfect understanding of us that he can sympathize with us fully. He knows us through and throngh. Nothing essential to a right knowledge is hidden or can be from his eyes. His regard for ns is not a mere spasm of affection—a simple emotional caprice resulting from partial information; but this regard is based on a complete comprehension of all the facts of our condition. Every secret of the heart, and every circnmstance which would in any way modify judgement is open to his thought. No man is so low, so high, so remote; no temperament is so peculiar, no emotion so intense, that Christ cannot search out all and enter into all the experiences of which he may be capable.

Now, at first thought, this may seem of little conseqnence. It is of great conseqnence. For of all bars to sympathy between man and man there is none so strong and general as this of our ignorance one of another. We do not understand each other. To say nothing of our multiplied misnnderstandings in which there is more or less of willful perversion, there is any number of defective and partial understandings such as resnlt from imperfect knowledge. How hard it always is to get men to change places, even in imagination, so as to look at things from each other's stand-point. What warrings there are between man and man—between nation and nation—between race and race; between the different orders and classes and sects; between the varions trades; and how impossible it seems to hush these warrings down, for the simple reason that each party to the conflict refuses to see facts in their broad and general aspects, but will insist on looking at them in the light of narrow and selfish interests.

Mere seeing eye to eye would not heal all the strifes and settle all the world's difficulties; for there is often a malignity behind our ignorance, or existing in spite of our knowledge, which must be corrected before there can be the calm of perfect oneness. But a great many of our controversies would certainly yield to a little more of the light which would come if each antagonist would put himself in the other's place. Class hates and prejudices, the hostilities of parties and factions, sectional jealousies, the disputings of the schools, would all be modified and softened by the diffusion of a common intelligence.

Perhaps, under our human limitations, it would be impossible for any man to become so cosmopolitan in understanding and so catholic in spirit as to be able to take the attitude in which he might see and hear and feel just as the man in whose place he supposes himself to be standing for the time being sees and hears and feels. But whether it be possible or not it is painfully manifest that thousands upon thousands do not even approximate to this attitude. The mutual generosity of opinion and treatment which would follow from a mutual appreciation of positions exist as yet only in germ.

How often, for instance, parents and children stand at a distance from each other, and harbor discontent and foster alienations, because in some respects they do not see eye to eye. The boys and girls have not had the experience to enable them to enter into the anxiety and care with which they must be watched over and followed. All too frequently it is the case that fathers and mothers have wholly lost the faculty, or have ceased to exercise it at any rate, of recalling how things used to look and how they must still look to the young. This is one of the pathetic facts disclosed in the life of Macaulay --the utter lack of sympathy between this distinguished son and his distinguished father. Employers and working men are constantly drifting into disputes, and getting further and further away from each other, largely for the reason that they refuse to study duties and obligations in the broad way which takes in the interests of both alike. The clerk who chafes and frets under the least constraint does not pause and say to himself, "Now if I were the head of this establishment, how should I want my book-keeper and salesmen and watchman and errand boy severally to acquit themselves?" and so try to look at his work from the other side. Neither does the merchant, in turn, say to himself, "If I were a young man in a store, shut up all day, far away from home, perhaps, working on a small salary, obliged constantly to struggle with temptations to excess and over-reaching, almost all the time weary, ambitious of promotion but forced to wait and still to wait, how would the outlook appear to me?" Albeit these two simple questions, put by each to his own heart would bridge over many a gulf, and soften many an asperity and turn away much bickering and wrath. How rarely, too, does it seem to occur to the mistress in the parlor, as she comes in fresh from her complaining because so many things go wrong in the kitchen, to stop and say, "How should I like it? how would that sort of destiny affect me? what kind of temper would it be likely to develop? how much of serenity and deference be likely to beget? to stand always in the presence of such tasks; and how much care and economy should I feel called upon to exercise? how many of the cardinal virtues to exemplify, to what lofty heights of womanhood to ascend, if every day of my life had to be spent in this way?" Quite as often the maid is at fault, and does not pause to reflect and say, "True, this is hard, and I get but little for it, and many times am found fault with when there is no just ground for it, and not unfrequently am burdened and urged beyond my strength, but I am here under contract to be faithful, and I must do as I would be done by—do as I would have a servant do for me were this household mine, and I responsible for its neatness and safety and general direction."

Neither party looks at life and duty from the stand-point of the other. Yet how much more sympathy and consequent harmony there would be between the two if in thought their places could be occasionally changed, and parents and children, and capitalists and laborers, and mistresses and maids, could see eye to eye and feel heart to heart.

This runs through all departments and orders. The poor and the rich, the weak and the strong, the high and the low, the rulers and the ruled, come often into hostile attitudes, and are liable to break out into disastrous open ruptures, because they have no adequate knowledge and appreciation of each other's burdens and trials and obligations.

Nor is this the whole of it. We all have experiences into which we feel that no other human soul can enter; as we are also sure that others have experiences into which we cannot enter. The heart is a mighty mystery. Having much in common all hearts have much that is personal and private to each. No man, no generation, is cast in precisely the same mould in which others are cast. A simple difference of temperament, or of education, or of some habit, often makes men utterly incomprehensible to each other. As I have been implying we might see into each other's hearts better than we do, and we ought to do so. Some time we shall. Then men will not make so many and such fatal mistakes along this line of mis-conceiving and mis-judging as now. For how frequently it happens that towards the very men from whom we have been shut out by the prejudices which have sprung out of an imperfect information, we have been drawn warmly and tenderly when we chanced to get some new insight into their motives, and some fresh glimpse into their characters. Who knows how many times the cry of the mis-judged and mal-treated has gone up to heaven, "Oh, if those who slander and stone and persecute me only knew the spirit which animates me, and what the ends are that I seek, and what motives constrain me, they would not mock and scourge—they would not hunt me down with their cruel ostracism, and grind me so between the upper and nether mill-stones of their fierce hate!" Thousands whose martyr-blood has been the seed of the church might have said that. At the same time it is impossible for one man to fathom another man, or to duplicate his experience altogether in his own life. Men cannot be sure that they interpret each other with absolute accuracy.

But the Divine Christ knows us. No bar of ignorance shuts him out. No intervening cloud obscures his clear seeing of our hearts and of all that is inmost in them. No art can baffle his penetration. Words cannot mislead him. Silence cannot deceive him. No man has ever to go to Jesus and say, "If you only understood my motives and my desires your heart would beat out responsively to mine." All our motives and desires are an open book to him. No man is ever obliged to go to Jesus and say, "You have given me your sympathy, and I feel it—feel all the blessed influence of the divine one; but if you had only known me as I know myself you could not have done it." No. There is no necessity of this sort. All the sympathy he gives us we may be sure is on the basis of a complete understanding of us—our thoughts and lives.

Having this perfect knowledge of us, Jesus is supplied with the essential conditions of a right sympathy. Under such conditions he can sympathize to the utmost. Is a man poor? No man knows poverty as he knew it. Is a man rich? So was he once, though he gave up his riches that sinners, wretched and miserable, through his poverty might be made rich; and he sees and feels all the temptations and burdens of wealth. Is a man ignorant? He knows what it is to be limited in understanding and to reach wisdom through the stern method of increase. Is a man learned? He knows how thought kindles thought, and how attainment awakens aspiration, and how unsolved problems press the soul. Is one young? Is one old? Is one weighed down with responsibilities and trials? Is one worn with wearisome cares and anxieties and watchings? Is one in robust health and liable to go astray through the very over-plus of life; or an invalid, wearied and worn, sick in body, and sick too, it may be, in heart? Has one peculiar distresses and besetments? Has one sorrows in which there are elements it seems utterly out of the question to get anybody else to comprehend? Christ is master of all that belongs to all these stages and conditions and experiences. He ranges at will through each man's mood. He can sound the notes of all needs. He can be touched with a feeling of every infirmity. In assuming our humanity he assumed it in such way that his experience might be brother to every other experience, however peculiar or severe. Every pulsation of our being, every yearning, every pang of body and mind and heart, every struggle under disadvantage and limitation, every loss, every outside encounter, every inward wrestle—he knows it all. We may have no words in which to express our feelings; but he knows them—knows all. He stands by us and appreciates the consuming heats of our unseen furnaces, walks with us in all the way of our hidden lives, and gives right meaning to every cry.

II. The sympathy of Christ with man is a helpful sympathy. All true sympathy, indeed, is helpful. But much that has expression never takes any valuable practical turn. The world is no better for it. The lives of men are made no brighter and easier. It is a mere effusion of emotion, and out of it there comes no relief to anybody. It is beautiful for the moment; but it is only foam, and it passes away like foam. It says, "I am sorry for your coldness and hunger," but it never takes the form of fuel and food. It says, "I am sorry for the burdens you bear," but it never goes out as a hand to make the burden less heavy. It says, "I am sorry for the darkness in which you walk," but it never kindles into a clear light to guide erring feet. The sympathy of Christ is just the opposite. It is helpful, practical, and it amounts to something. It cheers; it heals; it strengthens; it elevates.

1. In the first place Christ is willing to help. This is much. Especially is this much when it is taken in connection with Christ,s perfect understanding of us in all our needs. There are some who are disposed to be kindly and loving just as far as they have appreciation of what is required and suitable. They may blunder in the method of their benevolence, and tear open afresh the wound into which they would pour the healing oil; but they do the best they know how and have capacity for. Not many are there however, whose hands keep at even pace with their hearts, and whose feet are as quick to run as their eyes are to see, and who are willing to be to the trouble of showing sympathy in the shape of practical beneficence.

Here is a man who knows just what it is to wrestle with poverty, and who has abundant means to relieve the distresses of some one or more of those who are passing through the bitter experiences with which early necessity made him familiar; but not a dollar goes out from his palm. He knows what to do, but he is not willing. Here is a man who knows just what it is to suffer through the long days and nights of a painful illness, and who knows, too, how much even words may be worth to such an one, and of what value are little attentions and courtesies, and how sweet is thoughtful patience; but now that he is well he passes by on the other side, and neglects to render the little services which are so comforting and precious. He knows what to do, but he is not willing. Here is a man who knows what it is to be a stranger in the midst of strangers; to be lonely and desolate with homesickness; to be easily tempted to fall into the despondency incident to such a life in such circumstances, for he has felt it all; but he speaks no word of comfort to those he discovers to be in the same straits—lets them struggle on and struggle through as best they may. He knows what to do, but he is not willing.

It is the same with a great many. It is not from lack of knowledge, but for want of a willing mind and the loving heart that there is not more bearing of one another's burdens.

But Christ is willing. The clearness with which he sees our needs is not more marked than the readiness with which he hurries to bear relief. Recall how it was when he was here—he who is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. How quick his response to all appeals for aid! How he went about doing good! How patient he was with the blindness and stupidity he met! How compassionate, how forgiving, how helpful, wherever he went! More willing than the sun to pour out light; more willing than the drops to fall out of the over-charged clouds; more willing than the buds to come and the flowers to open in spring-time, is Christ to lend his help to men. Does not all this, and more, have expression in the one measureless fact of Calvary?

2. Christ, in the second place, is able to help. He has the resources of helpfulness. Here again we see how sharp is the contrast between Christ and even good men. Many a man who really feels for the distresses of others, who weeps over them, mingling his tears with their tears, and who makes their wants his wants, and their disgrace his disgrace, and their agony his agony, is nevertheless shut out from the doing of much which he would be glad to do by the limitations under which he labors. Money is needed, but he is without means. Counsel is needed, but he is sure he is not wise enough to meet the exigencies of the case. Encouragement is needed, but he is not familiar enough with the intimate windings in and out of the human heart to minister the subtle stimulus required. Whatever the direction, he soon finds himself at the end of his resources. He may have the tenderest heart but he cannot help. He feels deeply and genuinely for the tempted and dissipated, but all the restraints of which he has command are too feeble for the work. He pities the ignorant and would gladly aid them by putting letters within their reach and encouraging them to learn, but it is only little he can do. Even Mr. Slayton, with his million for education, as Mr. Peabody before him, must see thousands of ends he would promote if he could, but cannot. For doubtless he would endow institutions for culture in every city in the land, would build up academies and colleges and seminaries, and found libraries and establish technical schools and galleries of art all up and down our broad domain; but how unequal to an enterprise so vast would even many millions be! With the warmest heart, and clearest head, and the best intentions in the world there is no man who is not forced to say "No" many times, when all his impulses would lead him to say "Yes."

But he who when here on earth was the image of the invisible God, and by whom and for whom all things were created, and in whom through the pleasure of the Father, all fulness dwelt, is not hedged in by any such limiting necessity. All resources of help are in his hands. If any man is straitened it is not in the Son of God, but in himself. Is any man tempted? He is able to succor the tempted. Is any man ignorant and out of the way? He can have compassion on all such. Is any man in trouble? He is a very present help in time of trouble. Is any man ever led to doubt the issue of his faith? He is able to save unto the uttermost all who come unto God by him. Does he sometimes seem afar off and out of reach? He is ever nigh: for though he has passed into the heavens and is exalted above the heavens, his glorious priesthood remains unchanged and unchangeable, and he ever liveth to make intercession. In all our distresses, in all our darkness, with all our tears we may come boldly, with petitions, that is, in which nothing is kept back, but every desire is poured out freely and fully, to the throne of his grace. It is both in his heart and in his hand to bestow mercies.

Would that we could realize this! Would that they who have sorrows they do not utter; that children whose loving parents have been called on high; that mothers whose dear, sweet babes have been taken out of their arms; that wives whose strong ones have fallen at their sides, leaving them like tender vines widowed of their support, could only fashion to their hearts what fulness of sympathy there is for them in the Divine Son!

"No fable old, nor mythic lore,
Nor dream of bards and seers,
No dead fact stranded on the shore
Of the oblivious years;
But warm, sweet, tender, even yet
A present help is He:
And faith has still its Olivet;
And love, its Galilee.
The healing of His seamless dress
Is by our beds of pain;
We touch Him in life's throng and press,
And we are whole again."

III. The sympathy of Christ with man is a purifying and ennobling sympathy. Few considerations could be more important. Much of the sympathy of the world is not purifying and ennobling; it is mis-leading and degrading and hurtful. It does not aid—it hinders. It does not improve men—it makes them worse. It does not strengthen, but weakens rather in the direction of moral force; so that often the sympathy which has expression from man to man is not a blessing but a curse. Perhaps this may be fixed in mind by an illustration or two.

Not long since a young man of my acquaintance thought he had been grossly wronged by parties with whom he stood in intimate relation. He had not received the recognition and the recompense to which he felt he was freely entitled. Like most men in such circumstances he hastened to tell the story of his grievances to a friend. The friend was one whom he knew loved him and in whose judgment he placed implicit confidence. Of course a statement made in such circumstances would be one-sided and colored through and through with prejudice. The man who heard the statement ought to have bethought him of this at once. But he did not. He allowed his sympathy to be kindled to a white heat at the first word, and in a moment more he had endorsed the complaint and added fuel to the fire. In this way the ill-temper, which ought to have been soothed, was aggravated—every evil passion was inflamed, and it was only through the interposition of wiser counsels that grave disaster was averted. Here was sympathy; but it was a mischievous sympathy. Instead of guiding, it perverted. Instead of allaying selfish discontent and hushing down unwise ambition, it aroused every bad impulse, and turned a soul for the time-being into dark and satanic channels. It was sympathy, but such a sympathy as a man better never have.

Here is another instance. A young man had been insulted, not directly, but indirectly in the person of his father. The wound inflicted was so sharp and inexcusable that it aroused all the anger of the young man's soul. He saw in it an invasion of private rights. He saw in it a misrepresentation of motives which he knew to be honorable and above suspicion. He saw in it the arraignment of his own manhood; and the only thing it occured to him to do was to wipe out the indignity with a blow. Well, what did men say to him? The whole community was stirred, and everybody was hurrying to express sympathy. What was the tone and character of this sympathy? Just this. Hundreds said: "You are indignant; so are we. You feel that you have been outraged; so do we. You think some sharp expression ought to be given to your sense of wrong; so do we. Now strike, and we will back you. Push to your heart's content, and we will see that no harm comes to you." That was the form the sympathy took. It was not good and wholesome. It had the spirit of the pit in it. It was lurid with vengeance. It could only belittle and blind. Whereas true sympathy would have lifted him above the exploded sentiment of eye for eye, and tooth for tooth, and railing for railing, and pointed out to him some worthier method of voicing a righteous indignation. True sympathy, while appreciating his feelings under the wrong, would have reminded him that the Perfect Man, when reviled reviled not again, and so would have made his wrong the occasion of moral triumph.

So it is often, and in many spheres. Sympathy is made an instrument of tearing down rather than building up, and of diverting from the right path rather than leading straight on in the way everlasting. When men are suffering from loss of property by fire or accident or villainy, how common a thing it is to see them falling into despondency or envy or discontent under the dealings of Providence through the influence of the sympathy conveyed to them by friends. How much more harm than good is often done in sick rooms by words dropped only with kindliest interest. When bitter afflictions come, and dear ones are taken, how frequently it happens that the words which are spoken, and spoken only with the purpose of consoling, are so indiscreet as to bring shadows between the struggling soul and God. In fact unless one has given special thought to the subject I doubt if it be possible for him to realize how absolutely disastrous and degrading in their effects on the soul are many of the forms and methods of human sympathy. It is made to whet bad passions; to kindle devouring flames; to exasperate rather than to calm; to burden rather than to relieve; to intensify discontent and hate; and to take men down lower than it finds them instead of conducting to higher planes. Not always is it so, for if it were we could not live; but many times and in many spheres where sympathy is brought into play it is so.

Exactly the opposite is Christ's sympathy. The sympathy of Christ always purifies. It cheers; it helps to right-seeing; it heals; it strengthens; it exalts and brings one nearer to God; it puts evil passions to sleep and awakens holy emotions; it quickens not the worst things but the best things in a man; it has in it always a pulse of heavenly one; it never aggravates a bad symptom; it never accelerates a wicked course; it stills the troubled waters; it rests and soothes the aching heart; it makes a man hate the mean and low, and love the good and high; it takes one forward into companionships which are above the stars; it is more palatable than food; it is more refreshing than light; it is more fragrant than flowers; it is sweeter than song. For this sympathy of Christ is a Divine heart touching a human heart, and informing it with heavenly love.

Are any afflicted, then? are any in darkness and distress and sorrow? are any standing face to face with calamities they dread? Here is one who knows all needs, and who is willing and able to help in every extremity, and whose ministries of comfort are always cleansing and exalting. There is no infirmity he does not understand, and we can have no feeling with which he cannot be touched. He follows sinners down into the depths of their deepest sinfulness, for he came to seek and to save that which was lost. No man sinks so low down; no man drifts so far away in alienation and wrong-doing that there is not a ready and helpful compassion for him in the heart of Jesus if he wants it and will accept it. If we only knew it there is no yearning to which he will respond so quick and so lovingly as to the yearning for deliverance from the guilt and defilement and dominion of sin.

"By his hour of dire despair,
By his agony of prayer,
By his wounds and pangs and cries,
By the Perfect Sacrifice;
Bending from his throne on high,
He will hear the sinner's cry."

Does this little story throw any light on the growing faithlessness and irreligion of the age?

"A little girl, not far from Chicago, who has believed implicitly up to date in the person and mission of the sweet Christmas saint who slides down the chimney on Christmas eve and fills the stockings hanging there, was thought by her parents old enough this year to be undeceived. They proceeded to tell her as kindly and carefully as possible who were her real benefactors, and that Santa Claus is a myth, made beautiful by long tradition and the faith of many little people like herself.

"The child fell into uncontrolled grief and refused to be comforted. Finally, as the storm of sorrow was nearly spent, between the dry sobs the child turned upon her father and mother with the astounding observation—"Well, I hope you haven't been deceiving me about Christ all these years."

CORRESPONDENCE.

Facts About Morgan.

From a letter to the Batavia Convention.

FREEPORT, Ill.

Concerning the abduction of Wm. Morgan, of course I have no personal knowledge, being at the time a mere infant. My dear father, who came to Freeport in 1854, was a personal friend of Morgan and an ardent and devoted Anti-mason. His "Morgan expose of Masonry," a small pamphlet, I have known nothing of for forty years. He preserved for many years several volumes of the Republican Advocate, published at the time of Morgan's abduction, what became of them I know not.

I know of no persons in the world who could, in my judgment, furnish more information on the subject than Judge Taggart and Miss Sarah K. Stevens of Batavia. It may be well for me to refer you to the Utica, N. Y., Observer, or Observer and Herald, published at that time. Some time during the past year one Mr. Pitkin, dealer in rags and old iron, etc., in this city, called my attention to two bound volumes of the Observer and Herald which he said he purchased of the family of the late S. W. Guiteau, (father of Charles Julius Guiteau the assassin) and which volumes he sold for from $10 to $20 to the New York Historical Society (Horatio Seymour, Pres.) Utica, N. Y. These volumes were published I think during 1826-8, and contained many able and interesting articles on the subject of the abduction of Morgan and Anti-masonry. I am inclined to the opinion you may obtain valuable information from the Historical Society of New York. I have the honor to be very truly, CHAS. BETTS.

Letter from Bro. A. A. Phelps.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.

I cannot tell you how deeply I regretted my inability to attend your Anti-secret Association at Batavia. I was the secretary of the first one ever held—in Pittsburg, 1868—and offered the resolution that resulted in starting the Christian Cynosure; and though I have not been able to meet with you often, I have had but one unvarying conviction in regard to secret societies in general, namely: That they are not needed for any good cause, that they are capable of being used for great mischief, that they often become selfish monopolies, that they generally stand in the way of progress, and the world would be better off if there was not a secret order of any description. In regard to Freemasonry in particular—against which your batteries are mainly turned—I regard it as a strange mixture of silliness and sacrilege, combining about as much deception, selfishness, and barbarism as you could well incorporate into a single system, and worthy of the reprehension of all good men. The wonder is that any one should try to marry such an institution to the church of God.

For a dozen years I have labored as an independent evangelist, going from Maine to Texas, and entering whatever doors were providentially opened. I have found good sheep in the various folds, and a growing number who were in favor of shaking off sectarian shackles and fellowshiping all true Christians. But I have found also tons of shriveling bigotry—a disposition to worship the church more than its Founder—any amount of churchianity mingled with very small quantities of Christianity.

I believe in churches—organized churches—but I would have them organized scripturally, and with as little machinery as possible. I would have the church very strict in regard to character, but very tolerant in regard to differing opinions. I would make a character-test rather than a creed-test. The door of the church should be wide enough to let all true Christians pass through it. The church is God's institution, and therefore all his children are in it in fact and have a right to be in it in form. You have well said that the only justifiable division is that which separates "the children of God and the children of the wicked one." There is no reason, (that can stand the test of divine or even human scrutiny,) for cutting God's organized church into a multitude of jangling fragments. Such a scene of disruption is enough to make sinners scoff and angels weep.

Such is the creed-bound sectarianism of most of the churches, that many magnanimous souls are in honest doubt whether to formally join any of them, or stand and fight alone. As a rule, it is probably better that Christians should unite with some church, even if they cannot find everything to their liking; especially if they are not obliged to swallow various unscriptural pills which the creed-makers have prepared, but, on the contrary, are allowed to exercise their liberty of conscience and speech. But, alas! how often such liberty has been promised at the door, and denied after the candidate has entered the room! O, there is such an everlasting tendency to selfishness, rivalry, and sectarianism!

Even those denominations that started out with a scriptural name, and promised to make Christian character the only test of fellowship, are this very day making various doctrinal, sacramental, and other tests, and thus trampling their own consistency under foot. I know a people who solemnly promised to make only a character-test, and to take the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice; and yet it was not long before there was a clamoring for denominational distinction, which led first to the adoption of an unscriptural name, and finally to the adoption of a creed with sixteen articles of faith! And I never saw a more intense spirit of sectarianism than I have seen and felt among some of those very churches.

I have also been intimately associated with those who laid great stress upon plainness and self-denial, and made loud professions of personal holiness, and yet were so narrow that they could not tolerate a minister—however pious, intelligent, and useful—who diverged a hair's breadth from their accepted "creed." He must stifle all advanced convictions, and blockade the way to any further progress in religious thought, or, like the poor Chinaman, "he must go." It really seems too bad to compel all good men to leave the churches of their choice as a condition of growing "in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ." They do not intend it, but the churches often act upon the assumption of their own infallibility. O for a chance to breathe, without the danger of being hung for heresy! With much brotherly love, A. A. PHELPS.

H. W. Beecher and Evolution.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

DEAR BRO. K:—On the evening of December 5th, Mr. Beecher lectured in Lincoln Hall of this city on Evolution as related to Christianity. He was introduced by Rev. W. W. Hicks, who is only a smaller specimen of the same kind of a man. Of course such men draw a certain class, and elicit a great amount of applause. He alluded to the present as an era of doubt; of breaking away from the old and reaching out after the new. This change is most important in character and results. He regarded the doctrine of evolution as being the most momentous step in science that has been taken in modern or indeed in any day. "It touches institutions—laws—religion—everything."

He said that the idea that God stood supreme and sovereign and commanded things to spring into existence came from poetic passages in the Scriptures, and that we are coming to learn that this world has been "a gradual unfolding from simple to complex," etc. Perhaps there is some truth in the doctrine of evolution as applied to science, but it is also true that "the carnal mind is enmity against God," and is especially hostile to the sovereignty and supremacy of God, and that Mr. B. but voices this enmity when he attempts to use some truth and more conjectures of science to set aside the Word of God by calling it "poetical."

Again he says, "I incline to the belief that not in the far future it will be understood that man himself is the last and greatest evolution, and that his ancestors were the under class of animals." I will not ridicule this theory, though it is ridiculous. I think Satan showed great skill in its devising, for in no way can you so effectually get rid of the idea of moral responsibility to God and all that is involved in it, as by persuading men that they are but a derivation from the brutes. It is in vain that science has abundantly refuted this theory and shown that between the highest order of animals, and the lowest order of men there is an immense and insurmountable distance. It is lost on the men who want to get rid of God and history. Anciently "the fool said in his heart, There is no God." The modern fool has added to this, "there is no man." What we call man is only "an evolution from the under class of animals;" of course himself an animal. This is simply advanced blasphemy.

Again he said, "The Bible was not inspired. It was mankind who was being inspired and the Bible only records the progress of it." Without stopping to argue about the inspiration of the Bible I must say that I quite agree with him that, in a certain sense, men have been inspired by the wicked one, and that the Bible records the progress of this inspiration, as well as that which is of God. Paul says, "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times, some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron. 1 Tim. 4:12.

Mr. B. says that this doctrine of evolution is only an hypothesis, but he says also that God is a hypothesis. This is the height of blasphemy, for, in all ages all mankind have recognized God as the most absolute fact of which we can have any conception. "Perhaps," says Mr. B., "There is a God, and if so, we must take that matter into account." I am reminded of the poor wretch who was about to go down into the sea, who cried, "O God! (if there be any God) save my soul, (if I have any soul)."

Mr. B. concluded his remarkable discourse by framing a caricature of the doctrines of original sin, depravity, future punishment, etc., and then holding it up to ridicule. He said that his reason taught him to reject these doctrines and that those who taught them did not believe them. At the close there was immense applause. This lecture, from a professed Christian minister and its reception by a Washington audience shows how great is the departure of the people from God, and the immense need of a general reformation. H. H. HINMAN.

Our Mail.

Mrs. Margaret Stubbs, Vermillion, Ill., writes of the sudden death of her husband, our friend and co-worker, Jesse Stubbs. He was walking on the railroad track and was instantly killed by a passing train. The bereaved have our sympathy.

Wm. Matthews, Ambrose, Pa:

"I think the move on Washington City a good one."

Richard McClelland, Cannonsburg, Pa.:

"I will endeavor to secure a few subscribers. I am in for the downfall of the curse of Masonry and all other secret combinations. No one in the United States wishes more ardently the success of the Anti-masonic cause. There are few men who can say as I can that I had two brothers-in-law murdered by Masons. Of one you published a very correct account in the Cynosure a few years since, namely, David Brownlee, of Warren county, Ill. Of the other, I forbear for the present to give any of the details."

Thos. R. Griffin, Springfield, Ill.:

"Our dear Bro. Hinman, in my humble judgment, is the right man in the right place. His well-timed visits to Hampton University and other institutions of learning are as precious seed sown in good ground; rich and plenteous fruitage is sure to follow. May the mighty arm of Jehovah and the resistless energy of the Holy Ghost give such an impetus to the heart, brain and work of the Cynosure as shall constitute it a giant among its foes."

Joseph B. Lyon, Mt. Gilead, O.:

"I like the high stand the Cynosure takes and feel satisfied that those great principles will finally prevail. I never had a very favorable opinion of secret societies and never joined them and have wondered how so many men are fooled into them. After reading the papers I save them for three months and then stitch them together in a volume with a waxed thread in the clamps which makes them very durable. Then I lend them around with judgment."

This is an excellent way to use the paper, and at least one friend who read the above adopts it with his papers.

"Masonic editors are publishing lies about Thurlow Weed before his body is hardly cold. Such is Freemasonry."

God will sweep away the "refuge of lies."

Christmas in Syria.

Miss Wylie, one of the missionaries of the Reformed Presbyterian church in Syria writes of the regard shown toward this day among the superstitious and priest-ridden people with whom she is laboring:

"I was talking with one of the girls, who was formerly a pupil here, about what she thought of Christmas. She said she did not know that it was the birthday of Christ, but the world over kept Christmas, and she thought that they, living as they do among Mohammedans who did not believe in Christ at all, might recognize the day to let them see they were not ashamed of their prophet, who is greater than the Mahommedan prophet. I asked if she did not think it would be better if they would pay more attention to the dav Christ had himself set apart and commanded us to keep. She said she did; that she wished they could have quiet Sabbaths as we have. She said for herself she did not consider Christmas a holy-day, or that it was wrong to work, but she acknowledged that some of her people considered it more sacred than the Sabbath. She said neither did she consider there was any virtue in the wearing of a cross; that the ignorant among them did think God would be pleased with that mark of respect to his Son, and favor them; that she did not believe that, but she wore a cross because she was a Christian, and for ages that had been an ensign that the wearer believed in Christ; that a Moslem would not wear one; that he would curse it if he saw it. I have had talks with a great number of the girls in regard to the cross. Many of them say that they wear it that they may think of the Saviour when they see it. I tell them that he should be in their hearts all the time, so that they would not need to look at anything else; and that all their words and actions should be of that character that the people would know they were Christians. The girls who have been here for some time do not like at all to acknowledge their superstitions, and will deny that they exist, but the older ones will unconsciously let drop remarks about the evil eye, &c. Not long ago our teachers went to call on a family who had lost a little boy. They said they had taken him to an evening party and the people all remarked, how happy they were to have such a beautiful baby. That night the mother was taken sick and then the child. There was no doubt that the envious one had caused the sickness. They would never for a moment reflect that perhaps the mother had taken cold from having exposed herself."

—The growth of last year in the work of the American Board of Foreign Missions is thus effectively summarized:

"So far as figures can represent the progress of the year, it may be gathered from the following statements: net increase of twenty-six in the number of missionaries; a gain of twenty-three churches, and an addition of 1,700 members on profession of faith; an increase of eighty in the number of native pastors and preachers; an addition of seventeen high schools and seminaries of different grades, and 1,000 youths in them; besides 1,500 more pupils in common schools. Nor should we omit in this summary the efforts of the native Christians to help themselves, as expressed by funds raised and expended for their own schools, churches, and religious literature to the amount the past year of over $80,000. But figures can give no just conception of the leavening processes effected by the agencies thus detailed, or by the circulation of over thirty millions of pages of educational and religious literature, by the personal labors of over one hundred women specially devoted to the welfare of their sex in schools and in the homes of the people, or by the example of the changed lives and character in so many lands of so many, once strangers and foreigners, now fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God."

—The New York World very appropriately puts its Masonic department into its Sunday edition, the kind of religion taught in one fitting well the practice shown by the other.

—The late Trumbull Cary of this village was during his lifetime an intimate friend of Thurlow Weed, to whom he presented a curiously-formed walking stick. This cane now comes before the public through Mr. Weed's will, in the eighth clause of which the following appears: "In affectionate remembrance of a warm friendship which commenced over half a century ago with the late William H. Seward, lasting uninterruptedly to his death, I give and bequeath to his son, Frederick W. Seward, to whom I am as affectionately attached, the cane presented to me by our mutual and valued friend, the late Trumbull Cary."—Batavia, N. Y., Advocate.

Words of Life for Every Day.

SANCTIFY THEM THROUGH THY TRUTH; THY WORD IS TRUTH.

Thursday, Dec. 21.—Wherefore laying aside all malice, and all guile and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as new born babes desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby. 1st Peter 2:1 2.

Friday, Dec. 22.—For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. Rom. 10:12.

Saturday, Dec 23.—Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart, fervently. 1st Peter 1:22.

Sabbath, Dec. 24.—Every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant, even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer; their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people. Isa. 6:6-7.

Monday, Dec. 25.—For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God. 1st Peter 2:20.

Tuesday, Dec. 26.—And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful creator. 1st Peter 4:18-19.

Wednesday, Dec. 27.—But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and forever. Amen.

American Party Papers.

These papers represent and seek to promote the principles of the American Party. Four of them are now published as follows:

New England American, by E. D. Bailey, 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass.;

Illinois American, by Ezra A. Cook, 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.;

Michigan American, by Elder H. A. Day, Coldwater, Mich.;

Iowa American, by N. Bourne, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The Indiana American has been voted by the State Association; Elder I. W. Lowman, Goshen, Ind., editor.

These papers are published monthly and are uniform in size and in price as follows:

TERMS, POST-PAID:

Single copies, per year							25 cents
5 copies to one address 1 year							$ 1.00
12	"	"	or 9 to	9 addresses 1 year			2.00
50	"	"	" 40 "	40	"	"	7.00
150	"	"	" 100 "	100	"	"	15.00

Most of the matter in these papers is also used in the Cynosure and the great object in starting them is to afford friends an extremely efficient and cheap way of introducing and promoting this reform. A few friends could club in together and by raising $15.00 per year, either have the paper sent directly to 100 different, persons or have one hundred and fifty copies sent monthly for distribution.

The influence of these papers for good, when received regularly by 100 families in any neighborhood, can scarcely be overestimated.

FIVE THOUSAND IN ONE YEAR.—These are the figures that represent the net profit of one saloon in Michigan during last year. The keeper of the saloon had formerly been a clown in some of the shows of the country. Abandoning the show business, he betook himself to drunk-making, and settled in Michigan. The patrons of this drunk-maker were largely laboring men. These men, without exception, were poor men who were entirely dependent on their daily labor for a subsistence for themselves and their families. Their wages were not large at the best, yet from these men this one saloon made a profit of $5,000 in one season.

—Faith's eye can see through a frown of God, and under it read God's thoughts of love and peace.

—Faint not; the miles to heaven are few and short. There are many heads lying in Christ's bosom, but there is room for yours among the rest.—Rutherford.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1882.

MR. HINMAN, in his hasty sketch of H. W. Beecher's Washington lecture on Evolution, has really, though unconsciously, outdone himself. Its simplicity, directness, Christian temper, and force of logic, are admirable. Read it.

Transmigration and Evolution.

"Man, on the dubious waves of error tossed,
His ship half-foundered and his compass lost,
Sees, far as human optics can command,
A sleeping fog and fancies it dry land:
Spreads all his canvass; every sinew plies;
Pants for it; aims at it; enters it, AND DIES."

COWPER.

The Bible affirms that God made man out of dust, and said that "to dust he should return." The last half of the proposition is true, as we daily see. Transmigration and evolution flatly deny the first half.

Transmigration, which has made Egypt the basest of the kingdoms, and has held the swarming millions of Asia under it spell for ages, and accounts for their degradation, is simply this:—It holds the soul to be, and to have been, eternal, and that it has run, and will run an eternal round of transmigratious, entering and re-enter other bodies at death, forever; and the change of its body will be more or less degrading according to its merits or demerits in the previous state. This puerile and stupid invention has been held by some modern philosophers, as Scotus and Leibnitz. It answers the end of all fundamental error; viz., to relieve sinners from being contronted with an observant God, who is Love and ready to forgive; but who will by no means clear the guilty.

Evolution answers the same end; but it is adapted to deceive a higher order of civilization; It holds, "That the universe, as it now exists, is the result of an immense series of changes." This is an explicit denial that God, by Jesus Christ, made the world.

One may count in a single article on evolution, in a modern cyclopedia, more than ninety names of different authors who have written on evolution; each with a theory or modification of his own? But each theory and modification exonerates man from responsibility for his sins to a just and Holy God.

Mr. Hinman states Mr. Beecher correctly from the Washington reporter, who gives verbatim paragraphs like these: "It (evolution) is simply a suostitute for the former idea of creation." "That man himself is the last and greatest evolution, and that his ancestors were the under class of animals." It follows that we are but a higher order of brutes.

"The Bible, he went on to say, was not inspired; it was man who was inspired, and the Bible records the progress of it. He then went on to say that God was an hypothesis: that he (Beecher) took that ground." He then scouted and derided the Bible account of the fall of Adam and Eve, thus: "He did not believe that God created two inexperienced persons, put them into a garden without any previous knowledge of life, and then suffered them to be tempted by an alert, sagacious, cunning spirit, whatever that spirit may have been; and then, when they fell, myriad posterity would be punished for their sin." With much more to the same or similar effect.

And yet this man, while contradicting the Bible in terms, and saying that evolution is a "substitute" for its account of creation, has the hardihood and effrontery to say in the same speech, these words, "he believed in Christianity," and, "I believe in the Scriptures as given by the inspiration of God!"

Wayward, superficial, and shallow from his youth; without scholarship, and always capable of denying one moment and affirming the same thing in the next, he possesses a genius, which like the French infidel Rousseau, knows

"How to make madness beautiful, and cast
O'er erring deeds and thoughts, a heavenly hue
Of words, like sunbeams, dazzling as they past
The eyes that o'er them shed tears feelingly and fast."

"Sirs, Ye are Brethren."--Acts 7:26.

My first knowledge of ex-Bishop Milton Wright, was when the General Conference elected him elder of the Telescope at the meeting in Lebanon, Pa., now many years ago. He was the candidate of the anti-secret majority, and good Bishop Edwards announced his election as a great triumph of truth and right. The first time I saw him was in 1870, more than twelve years ago. From my first acquaintance with him, to the last issue of his paper, the Richmond Star, he has been a steady and able foe of the false worships of the lodge; and the naked fact that he has started and sustains a paper against secret societies, is proof of his bravery and sincerity. The further fact that he was omitted from the Board of Bishops by the General Conference at the Iowa meeting was due, in part, to certain "false brethren," who fell into sin while opposing the lodge; but that opposition was local and would not have prevented his re-election if Glossbrenner, Weaver and others had ardently desired his aid in a fixed purpose to divorce the lodge from their church.

Prof. W. O. Tobey was eight years, we believe, assistant editor of the Telescope. He was dropped by the Conference at the ill-starred Iowa meeting; and the Itinerant lifted up its head with joy at the omission of these two men from posts of influence where the lodge dreaded to see them. A multitude of preachers, who—seeing that the lodge-sympathizers held for the time the winning card, fell from their stedfastness. and lowered their tone for reform, or were silent altogether. Meantime certain brethren in and around Chambersburg, Pa., had been persecuted by lodge influence acting through their local conference, and the Iowa General Conference snubbed them; and they are now outside of the Brethren church, yet praying for its welfare, holding its principles and laboring to save souls. Prof. Tobey is their pastor, and edits their paper, The United Brethren in Christ, with signal honesty and ability.

"Ride the current wheresoever it flows;"

These two excellent brethren are criticising each other in their respective papers. The Cynosure has not done so. It praised Mr. Levington's paper and wished it success against the lodge, even while it was particularly savage on us; and it has given its hearty God-speed to every print which has stood firmly on the fundamental question of the age, against lodgery. So Paul rejoiced that Christ was preached, "whether of contention or otherwise."

Reformers, who take a stand against a corrupt age, too often take a stand against each other. The Reformation from Popery had not yet escaped the terrors of a thirty years' war, when its leaders, Luther, Zwingle, Œcolampadius, and the rest, met and held a long and bitter conference, with much acrimony and contention. And, since the middle of the 16th century, the Reformation has not advanced one step in Europe. Bishop Wright hopes to reclaim the Brethren Church from the jaws of the lodge-dragon. He therefore keeps or strives to " in harmony with the constituted authorities." The Chambersburgh brethren would be glad to do so; but they will not be in "concord" with Belial. And if the Board of Bishops had stood squarely with them, they would have saved all of their church which is worth saving. They did not, and "It is a day of trouble and rebuke and blasphemy."

THE FAIRFIELD, IOWA, local association, formed during a visit of Bro. C. A. Blanchard some months ago, will hold a meeting in the Free Methodist Hall in that place on the evening of Jan. 8, 1883. All friends in the vicinity should take pains to be present with all their ideas awake for the promotion of the reform.

THE KANSAS STATE MEETING held at Emporia on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week ought to be the best attended convention ever held in the State. Bro. Feemster's work will sooner or later give back an abundant harvest. His plans for this meeting seem to have been well drawn. It is held in the Congregational church, and will be addressed by President J. Blanchard and M. N. Butler of the American Freeman. Secretary Stoddard, who hoped to have been present is yet in the East attending to important business which seemed imperative. He may not return before next week. The convention will be ably addressed, though his absence will be felt. The programme to which the convention will work is thus drawn out in the neat handbill prepared by Bro. Feemster:

1.—Reports of work done during the year.
2.—DISCUSSION—Subject: Should all Secret Societies be Opposed?
Testimony of seceding members.
3.—ADDRESS: The Secret of Power in Secret Organizations.
4.—DISCUSSION: Secretism as Related to the Family; the State; the Church.
Experience Meeting.
5.—ADDRESS—Subject: Secretism and Temperance.
6—Business Meeting.
How shall we best oppose the Lodge Power?

BRO. R. A. STEWART of Molino, Lincoln county, Tenn., some seventy-five miles west of Chattanooga, writes of severe trials and losses. Too many of the dear brethren who have testified against the dark lodge cabal have suffered its revenge to permit much doubt that this burning of his buildings was the work of Freemasons. At this season of the year, when all are remembering their friends in New Year's gifts, and when piercing winter keeps us in mind of the suffering of the poor, it will be a good deed to send Bro. Stewart such help as we may be able. He has been for years a supporter of the reform in his section, and deserves now our sympathy and substantial aid. The Cynosure will forward anything that may be sent in for this purpose.

—The Kansas Chief, of Troy, Kansas, edited by the Past Grand Master of Kansas Odd-fellows, published Thurlow Weed's letter in full, also the Messenger of Glenn's Falls, N. Y.

—The sermon which we have the great pleasure of publishing in this number will be read and re-read in a thousand homes; and none who read will doubt that the eloquent speaker is beloved as a pastor and popular with the sincere men and women who delight in spiritual instruction drawn from the Word.

—Bro. I. Bancroft, the new State agent in Wisconsin, is pushing out into the new districts in a way to produce some effect and do thorough work. Travelling with his own conveyance he visits from house to house and gets the people out to school-house meetings and to village churches. During the first week he spoke six times and travelled 80 miles, though the thermometer ranged to 16 degrees below zero.

—Bro. Hinman's indisposition has delayed his visiting Philadelphia, where he is soon expecting to present the cause for which we pray in five of the city churches.

—The Chicago Christian Association heldan interesting meeting in the Free Methodist church on Morgan St. last week Wednesday evening. Addresses were made by brethren Joseph Travis of the Free Methodist, D. P. Baker, and H. L. Kellogg of the Cynosure.

—The following is a comment from the Advance on a paper read at the last meeting of the American Missionary Association by Dr. Noble, whose sermon appears in our columns to-day:

"The paper on 'God's Way of vindicating Brotherhood,' by Dr. F.A. Noble, was a most graphic and terrific display of the injustice and oppression which through all the ages the weak and helpless of mankind have received from the hands of the strong and powerful. His chief thought was that God has been wont to place the hand of the weak in the hand of the strong and say Hold him! Hold him! The great drift of God's life and thought has been toward the brotherhood of men, and his great wish is that men shall accept the unity of the race, and fall into line with the privileges and responsibility of it. Sweeping through the historic past, he showed that we had ever until now been far removed from the Spirit in our intercourse with these dusky races that have homes and interests in America. In all this we have suffered under the administration of retributive justice, and the end is not yet. This address was both grand and powerful, and lifted the hearers to a very high pitch of enthusiasm from which it is to be hoped that none will ever fall to any act of wrong or injustice to any of God's creatures, however strong the promise of secrecy may be—for in God's economy wrong will not go long unrequited."

Washington Letters.

FROM THE GENERAL SECRETARY

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 13, 1883.

I reached this city at 2 P. M. to-day about five hours late, occasioned by the wrecking of one of the baggage cars on our train four miles west of Altoona, Pa., last night. I have seen a few of the friends here and from all I can learn the interest is steadily increasing. One good "omen" is, that, as Bro. Hinman tells me, it is now impossible to hire or obtain by any means a hall in which to discuss the lodge question. I am going with interested parties to look at some property tomorrow, and see what may be done about securing a place that the Masons cannot control, as they apparently do every public building in the city. Calling at the office of a legal gentleman to day, after alluding to Mr. Weed's statements, he remarked, "I am amused to see how perplexed the Masons are to find some way of getting rid of that testimony. It staggers them and they are at their wit's end. Its a bitter pill and they have to swallow it." Another gentleman remarked, "The papers are afraid to touch this thing, and yet they can't let it alone." There is deep feeling on the subject here, especially on the part of the Masons. Bro. Hinman has done most excellent work in lecturing, preaching, visiting and tract distributing. He is looking unusually well, though he has for a few days been troubled with a lame foot. J. P. STODDARD.

Turn on the Light — How the People of Washington are "Protected."

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13, 1382.

The Evening Star of this city of the 12th inst., has a three column article giving the testimony of certain criminals who affirm that for many months past government detectives have been in collusion with gamblers, thieves and robbers; that they have planned, invited, and stimulated crime, and have received from ten to twenty per cent of the large amounts of money and goods stolen and otherwise fraudulently obtained. These statements are not legal evidence, but particulars are given which are confirmed by honest men, and so exactly accord with well-known facts that the committee of investigation do, and the public generally are, likely to believe them to be true. The conviction of an ex-policeman for receiving stolen goods tends to confirm this belief.

The question arises, are the people of this and neighboring cities sleeping over a volcano? Has the protection of property been committed to thieves who steal with immunity, because the only ones who can give evidence against them are also thieves and robbers? It would seem so.

Strange as it may seem this is not the most wonderful thing, nor is it the most deplorable. If men in high official positions commit crime with impunity, surely we may expect nothing better of subordinates. We need not be surprised if the means of protection for one class of criminals avails also for others.

A high United States official here in Washington spent about 150,000 dollars of the people's money in harlotry and riotous living. He is admitted to bail and disappears, and no further notice seems to be taken of the matter. An ex-Senator is charged with conspiracy by which the national treasury is robbed of some millions of dollars. He defies the government, and fights all investigation with a persistence that makes the trial interminable. Under pretense of physical disability he refuses to come into court, and insists that a trial cannot take place without his presence, and yet he meanwhile manifests the most wonderful energy in his endeavors to pervert public sentiment through the press.

Another U. S. Senator, whose testimony is needed, disappears for months, and when at last he is found, he carefully denies what he had previously stated and removes to Canada to be beyond the reach of a civil process. When United States Senators do this, it is relatively a small matter for detectives and policemen to trade in silk and diamond stealings and bank robberies.

What is the secret of all this? Simply that Captain Howgate is a high Mason; ex-Senators Dorsey and Spencer are doubtless Masons; while nearly all the policemen and detectives are known to be such. Each of these officials, high and low, legislative and executive, swore to obey the Constitution and laws, but each also swore to keep the secrets of a Master Mason in all things except murder and treason, and some of them to espouse the cause of a companion so far as to extricate him from difficulty whether he be right or wrong.

Such is the practical working of the system of Freemasonry. Such is the malign influence that is sapping the foundations of public morals and public security. We heartily respond to the suggestion of the Star—"Turn on the light!" Let there be a full and fearless investigation, not only of the crimes of those men, but also of the covenants they have taken, and let all men who are sworn to another government and other laws, be at least discharged from the service of the United States. H. H. HINMAN.

PERDUE UNIVERSITY of Lafayette, Ind., lately passed through a severe discipline on account of some conceited and upstart college fraternity students. It is a State agricultural institution, and in spite of the bitter war made by the lodge upon its rule, President E. E. White made a good report to the trustees at their meeting on the 14th inst. The present faculty includes thirteen professors and instructors, and two assistants employed a portion of the time. The total current expenses of the university, including the farm, were $34,532.06, and the expenditures for buildings, apparatus, and other appliances were $11,423.04. The new buildings erected are Agricultural Hall and an addition to the green-house for propagating purposes. The appropriations required for the coming year, and which will be asked at the hands of the Legislature of the State, are $25,600 a year, and $10,000 for the erection of a building for the Department of Practical Mechanics. The cost value of the property of the university, including lands, buildings, apparatus, fixtures, etc., is $308,657.68. The bequests used for these purposes amounted to $230,000, which, with the United States endowment fund of $340,000, make a total munificent bequest to the State of $640,000. The total State appropriations to July 1, 1882, were $128,500, with $20,000 more received Nov. 2, 1882. The friction over the fraternity rule has all disappeared, and the utmost harmony exists between faculty, trustees, and students, and everything indicates increasing prosperity and success.

Burned Out.

MOLINO, Lincoln Co., Tenn.

DEAR EDITOR AND FRIENDS OF THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I have passed through a flood of trials, losses and tears. I feel that the devotion that I have to the Anti-masonic reform has been the procuring cause of my calamity. Since I wrote to you last I had my dwelling house, smoke house and crib all burned to ashes. We did not save anything. My loss is one thousand dollars. I have a large family of little children made homeless in a few hours. I hope God in his wise providence will raise up helpers for us. How long, O Lord, will the enemy prevail! "Arise for our help; for we are thy servants." This is a time of trouble to us. My prayer to God is that Christ's cause may prevail from the rising to the setting sun; and Masonry and all its sister evils may sink to rise no more. Yours in the reform in life and death,

R. A. STEWART.

—At the colored Grand Lodge of Ohio one of the prominent officers was particularly severe upon the numerous Masons who make a living out of the order: "The most active organizers and makers of organizations are our high Masons. These high Masons know well enough what kind of bait will catch a school of gudgeons. In some cases gill nets are sent forward and set for them, after which comes along worthy chief D. B. L. Z. and immediately we have a new set of lodges, chapters, courts, etc., Queer Fellow, Knights of the Ring, Brethren of the M. L's., etc."

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited. E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec.

—From Connecticnt comes this note: "The general preaching of to-day is not to teach that the Bible is one complete system of reform. I see the great need of different preaching and am considering how I can help to bring it about. The people in the churches seem to feel secure in their organizations. Like the Republican party, because they have the power to control, no one has a right to question their fitness. * * * There is great need of a preparation to receive the truth, I know that God only can do it, but I believe he will honor some means, which are according to his will."

—Elder Hezekiah Davis, who has recently moved to Southington, sends a word of cheer. "We are now well settled in our new home and fast becoming acquainted with the people. Our work will be quite largely among drinking men. The Mission Chapel will be quite a place for that class to gather. Two have requested prayers since we came. Others are interested.

—A Vermont correspondent, commenting on the defeat of Seward for the Presidency through the Vermont vote, says: All the world has known nothing of the subterranean work going on in Vermont in favor of the lodge. The world has supposed that Vermont was free from lodge rule, while the facts are that her political counsels have been wholly under lodge trickery and management. All who have represented the State as office-holders during the last twenty years have done lodge work for lodge pay and this is the reason why the State has degenerated so rapidly of late years."

—Many years ago a seceding Odd-fellow in Massachusetts organized a company, which traveled over the State, publicly working the degrees. We have heard from old residents of the company and the excitement it produced, but lately Mr. Spaulding found the man who did the work. He is now an old man, a physician, and was exceedingly glad to hear of this modern movement. He has retained some of the pictures and other articles made use of then. He was bitterly opposed by the secret orders and suffered relentless persecution."

Grand Rally for Temperance in Worcester.

WORCESTER, Mass., Dec. 12th, 1882.

Four or five weeks ago the mass temperance meetings in Mechanics Hall were commenced by Rev. H. T. Cheever, to prepare the people for a No-license vote at the annual city election. From the first, great interest was manifested in the movement and very soon a political agitation and organization was inaugurated. After preliminary meetings of friends of prohibition had been held a mass convention of all temperance people was called in Horticultural Hall to take steps for procuring a no-license vote at the coming election.

Wm. H. Earl presided at the meeting, which was large and enthusiastic. It was noticeable that the leaders of this movement were not men who play with secret societies. A committee of 100 was chosen to nominate a full ticket. This committee nominated Mr. E. S. Hildreth for Mayor. The nominee is one of the most successful business men in the city, a man of piety and strict integrity, of large business experience and without political aspirations to turn his head. He publicly announced before the committee that he was a member of no secret society and it elected he would be trammelled by no obligations which would necessitate favoritism to any class. The committee were careful in their selections and the rest of the ticket is supposed to be equally free.

The movement, although suffering from the unfriendliness of the daily press, was popular, and the Republican convention met and endorsed the entire ticket with one minor excep-

HOME CIRCLE.

A Child's Dream.

BY MRS. L. B. BACON.

This exquisite poem, which has been widely published and read, is revised and finish d by the lady authoress, for the Cynosure. It is sent us by her husband, Rev. S. F. Bacon, pastor of a prominent orthodox church in Oshkosh, Wisconsin. If any person, of average taste, can read the poem through without tears coming in his eyes, he is made of "sterner stuff" than we are.—ED. CYNOSURE.

Two bright little boys were sitting one day,
On a green meadow bank, just over the way
From the old county poor-house, as shabby and mean
A home for the paupers as ever was seen.

Some blue-birds were building a nest in a tree;
The robins were busy as busy could be,
While a brown coated sparrow and twittering wren
Hopped about in the grass near these two little men.

Bright shone the sun in the blue summer sky.
A brook running near, sang a low lullaby,
And the wind, stirring gently the tops of the trees,
Was a quiet refrain to the hum of the bees.

These two little boys played at mumble-te-peg.
So glad that to-night they'd no supper to beg;
For the God of the ravens and sparrows had led
To the poor-house, these little ones now to be fed.

Their mother was dead, and their father, alas!
Was a poor wretched drunkard; so came it to pass,
That these children were paupers. Though shabby and old
The poor-house was better than hunger and cold.

And now they had never a thought or a care,
But to play on this bank in the soft summer air.
Or tired of their play, to lie down 'neath the trees,
And be lulled to sweet sleep by the murmuring breeze.

So it chanced on this day of all days in the year,
That these poor little waifs, without ever a fear,
Fell asleep with their faces turned up to the sky,
Watched over by none but the All-seeing eye.

A pale haggard man just out of a prison,
In whose heart not a beam of bright hope had arisen
For many long years, for some cause passed that way.
And paused near the spot where the little ones lay.

One glance at their faces turned up to the sky,
And this vile, wretched man with a bound and a cry,
Stood beside them one moment, and then kneeling down,
He kissed these poor children—for they were his own.

By and by they awoke. With glad light in his eyes
Little Will said, "Our mother's come back from the skies;
She kissed me just now, so I'm sure it is true,
Nobody would kiss me but mamma, you know."

But Jamie the elder, more wise than his brother,
Said, "Oh no, little Willie, it wasn't our mother;
May be 'twas an angel, though—'cause mamma said
The angels would care for us when she was dead."

The father though hidden from sight, lingered near,
So these pitiful tones were distinct to his ear,
And re-called what the heart-broken mother had said,
For he knew Jamie's words were the words of the dead.

"An angel! An angel! Oh merciful God!"
The man in his anguish is crying aloud.
"An angel of evil—a devil am I,
Too wretched to live and too sinful to die."

Will he stifle the voice that is pleading within,
To forsake the vile haunts of debauch and of sin?
Or give heed to the lure of the tempter again
Who is glad of the chance to make devils of men.

Oh, this man, with the heart of a father, o'er-grown
With thorns and rank words which his own sins have sown.
Had heard the sweet weeds of his children in vain,
He returned like a dog to his vomit again.

The bell of the poor-house rang out on the air,
The children climed up the old rickety stair
To their bed, where the angels watch over them still,
Though none ever comes to kiss poor little Will.

Dangerous Reading.

A story is told of a resident of Lexington, Ky., who, being importuned to subscribe for one of the daily papers of that city, consented to take it if the publisher would send him the sheet blank. They agreed, and it goes to him regularly unprinted. He as regularly keeps it on file, and pays for it with punctilious exactness. This is amusing, and at the same time seriously suggestive. It may well be questioned whether most of the secular papers, which come into our homes, would not "pay" better if they came in the unprinted form preferred by the eccentric Kentuckian.

We begin to think that some of the most dangerous reading is to be found in the daily newspapers. With flaming head-lines and detailed particulars, these relate stories of crime with every accompanying horror sensationally told. Nothing worse, or more depraving, than some portions of our leading and influential journals can possibly be set before the eyes of boys and girls. And, as if there were not enough of this filth to be dragged out of our own gutters, one of these papers—which professes to be par excellence the champion of morality, and is accepted as such by a very large proportion of our religious families—is accustomed to regale its readers from time to time with letters from Paris, devoted mainly to cynical and minute detail of the worst social and domestic scandals of that city.

The fastidious parent, who would not suffer a questionable story-paper or novel to enter his swelling, is not alarmed when he sees his young people absorbed in the sheet which brings them the news of the day. Indeed, he probably feels pleased when he observes them thus engaged. Yet there is need of espionage, since—conducted as journalism now is—those newspapers have the largest sale which tell in the most entertaining way the stories of evil. Reading aloud in the evening to the assembled group, a father can select those parts of the newspaper which are profitable; and can lead the conversation to the great things which are going on in the world. If this be too much trouble, he can at least be guarded in his choice of a daily, and avoid those which revel in the literature of the police court. —Intelligencer.

Men's Rights.

No man knows the value of money who has never been compelled to earn it by his own hard labor.

No man is loyal to Christ who neglects duty because he thinks he can be saved without doing it.

No man is perfect who boasts of his goodness.

No man is honest who buys what he has no assurance that he can pay for.

No man is fit to preach who absents himself from church when his salary ceases.

No man is worthy of confidence who is pledged to be partial to others.

No man has a right to be generous with other people's property.

No man sells rum for the good of the community.

No man has a right to lie, not even a lawyer.

No man has a right, by smoking or drinking, to waste or endanger life or property.

No man has a right to change the Word of God to suit his own purposes.

No man can wilfully injure another and be honest.

No man has a right to spend his time in idleness, or injure himself or others.—N. Summerbell.

There is not a Christian beneath the scope of God's heaven from whom I am separated. At the Lord's table I always invite all Christians to come and sit down with us. If any man were to tell me that I am separated from the Episcopalian, the Presbyterian, or the Methodist, I would tell him that he did not know me, for I love them with a pure heart, fervently, and I am not separated from them. The pulse of Christ is communion; and woe to the church that seeks to cure the ills of Christ's church by stopping its pulse. I think it is a sin to refuse to commune with any one who is a member of the church of our Lord Jesus Christ. I should think myself grossly in fault, if at the foot of these stairs I should meet a truly converted child of God, who called himself a Primitive Methodist, or a Wesleyan, or a Churchman, or an Independent, and I should say "No sir; you do not agree with me on certain points; I believe you are a child of God, but I will have nothing to do with you." I should then think the text would bear very hard on me, "These are they who separate themselves, sensual, not having the Spirit."—Charles H. Spurgeon.

When I look to my guiltiness, I see that my salvation is one of our Saviour's greatest miracles. Either in heaven or earth, I am sure I may defy any man to show me a greater wonder.—Rutherford.

What Johnny Found.

"Mother," said a little lad of some eight years of age, as he gathered together his school books, "do you think I'll be able to have some new boots and warm coat this winter?"

"I can't tell, child," his mother replied, with a sigh. "There is no chance for it as yet, anyhow. It is all I can do to find food and firing this bitter weather."

Little Johnny gave an inquiring glance at his feet, as if asking the old boots which covered them how much longer they would consent to hold together. As he wound his old threadbare comforter round his neck, he said, plaintively, "It's all waitin' and waitin', ain't it, mother? and I can't earn nothin' for ever so many years. Now, if I was only in luck like Stevey Dobbs, to find a crown piece!"

"You never forget Stevey's find," said his mother, with a faint smile on her care-worn face. "But, Johnny, if Steve had been my boy I should like to have seen him try to find the owner of that five shillings, instead of going and spending it, and asking no questions."

"But, mother, he found it!" said Johnny, with wide open eyes, "and findin's keepin' always!"

"O, no, 'tisn't, my lad," his mother replied. "That's a dishonest saying, that's what that is. If you find anything, you're right to seek the owner, and not keep it, mind that, Johnny. If you ever kept anything you found I'd call you a little thief, and that's what I hope my boy'll never be."

As Johnny trudged along to school he kept pondering on his mother's words, and thinking how very strange it was to be so particular. But he came to the conclusion that what she said must be right, for the little fellow was intelligent enough to know that his mother was a good woman, and that she never told even a little story. Johnny had often noticed grown-up people tell little stories, and he very quickly drew a comparison between them and his own mother.

"I never found nothin', and don't suppose I ever shall, so it don't matter after all," was the conclusion Johnny arrived at.

Weeks passed away, and the winter was very cold; still Johnny's old boots were doing duty. They had been patched up by a kindly-disposed cobbler once or twice, but even then were in a deplorable condition, and his great coat was still a thing to be dreamed of on a cold winter's night. Running home as fast as he could from school one mid-day, he noticed a little folded paper whirling over and over and over along the pavement. Of course Johnny chased it, and clutched hold of it after a pretty good run, and then when he unfolded it he saw written on it (for he could read quite well) something about "Five Pounds," in large, black, queer letters.

Those two words had a strange fascination for him, and with his eyes fixed upon them he carried the paper into his mother.

"Why, child!" she exclaimed, in a faint, gaping way, "where on earth did you get this? it's a five-pound note"!

"What's that, mother?" asked Bob, eyeing her in amazement.

"Why, it's five pounds, child," she replied.

"Five pounds!" echoed Johnny. "Oh, mother, how much does great coats, and frocks and jackets, and boots and shoes—" Then suddenly he stopped short, for he guessed what his mother was thinking about.

"It's a temptation; God forgive me, it is!" she said to herself in a low voice. Then sitting down, she questioned Johnny.

"We must find the owner of this money," she said, firmly. "It isn't ours, you know, Johnny, no more than if it was in the person's pocket that lost it. We might just as well put our hands in and take it out, as to spend it. Tisn't ours at all, d'ye see, child?"

"Yes mother," the little fellow replied, wistfully.

Johnny's mother folded it up and locked it in her workbox. Then she went to one or two of the shop people who knew her, and asked them to put in their windows that a bank-note had been found, and might be had by any one who could describe the number written in the corner of it.

Although Johnny told no one, it somehow leaked out, and he was tormented out of his life by his school fellows. "If it's true, Johnny, as you've found five pounds, why don't you get some boots," some one would say; and when Johnny replied that it wasn't his to spend, and his mother was going to give it back to the to the person who had lost it, there would be a shout of derisive laughter, and many taunting remarks, intimating that the story was all a make up and so on.

But somebow these unkind remarks made Johnny the more disposed to uphold his mother; and whereas before he had felt rather doubtful whether God expected poor folks like them to be so very particular, now he felt that he would not spend that money on any account whatever.

Now, strange to say, no one claimed the bank-note; the papers tumbled out of the windows and were not replaced, for the shop people had grown tired of seeing them there, but no inquiries were made, and the magical piece of paper with "Five Pounds" printed on it, lay in Mrs. Goodman's work-box doing no good to anybody

Toward the winter Johnny's mother fell ill, and that was a terrible to-do, for she was a widow, poor thing, and had no one but herself to keep her three little children. It went to Johnny's young heart to see her lying there so sick and ill, with no tempting food and no one to wait upon her except himself when he was ome from school, for the other two were younger than he was. It was no wonder she did not get better, but it was very sad, for the rent was getting behind, and their landlord was a threatening sort of man.

One Saturday evening when things were very bad indeed, there came into Johnn's mind what he had quite forgotten—the five-pound note. That would buy his mother all sorts of nice things and pay the rent, and clothe and feed them all, Johnny firmly believed. It was stupid for his mother to keep it all this time, he thought, for the owner couldn't want it, he'd have come to fetch it. If he spent it his mother would not know it until it was done, and how thankful she'd be for the nice things.

He knew where she kept her keys, and he had a very great mind to open the box and take out the precious little piece of paper.

He went and fetched the key, and even put it in the lock, but when it came to that Johnny could go no further. His mother had brought him up so strictly never to do a deceitful thing, that somehow Johnny couldn't open that box. He had what he called such a strong "Don't like" come over him that the key fell from his fingers, and he quite trembled at what he was doing. So Johnny's mother didn't have the nice things after all. The landlord came and made a noise, and the little boy cried himself to sleep, thinking what a bad world it was.

Next morning he dressed Bob and Liz very carefully and took them to church, having first done what he could for his mother. There was no dinner but bread-and-butter, so there was no need for anyone to stay at home about that.

Johnny was very fond of church, and he soon forgot his troubles with the service and looking after the children. Bob was just learning to read, and of course he must have all his places found, and little Liz must have a book because her brothers did.

Now just behind them sat a lady, who watched with much interest the three shabby little children. And it chanced that outside the church door she came upon them again.

"There goes Five Pound Jack!' cried out a boy who went to school with Johnny, and had come that morning to church with another boy.

Johnny fired up, and told the boy to mind his own business; then the other boy burst out laughing in Johnny's face, and scampered away, leaving Johnny crimson with anger and shame, for several ladies and gentlemen were looking very hard and suspiciously at the children.

"What did he mean?" asked the lady who had sat behind them.

"He means that I pretended I'd found five pounds; and that I'd told stories about it, and I ain't, for I never said nothing about it; but it's quite true, for mother's got it now takin' care of it," stammered Johnny, between his shyness of the lady and anger at Joe Scott's rude behavior.

"Do you mean to say you found five pounds?" the lady asked in astonishment.

"Yes, ma'am," Johnny replied, casting his eyes up and down her fur jacket, and wondering what it must feel like to be inside that.

"Well, how strange! When did you find it?" the lady asked.

"Near the 'ginnin' of the Winter," Johnny replied.

"Well, I do believe that was mine," said the lady.

"It is all right then; mother's got it safe at home," said Johnny, delightedly. "Wont you come and see her, ma'am?"

The lady readily accompanied the children, and found Johnny's mother very weak and ill. Mrs. Goodman was soon satisfied that the lady was really the owner of the money, for she had got written down in a little book some figures which were exactly the same as those in the corner of the paper Johnny had found. She had been going about to a great many different parts of London on the day when she lost it, so that when she found it was gone she had not any idea whereabouts she had dropped it. She quite concluded that it must have been in one of the shops in the city where she had been making purchases, and had never even thought of inquiring so near home.

All the while his mother and the lady were talking Johnny looked solemn and miserable, and when presently the lady praised him for his honesty he could stand it no longer.

"I nearly was taking it last night," he said, in a broken, miserable voice; and then he told them all the temptation that had come to him.

When he saw his mother's delight that he had not touched it, how pleased he was, and how sorry to think he should ever have thought to do such a thing. His simple story showed the lady a great deal that Mrs. Goodman would never have told her of the sad condition of the poor family, and as she was kind and good, she made up her mind that they should not suffer for their honesty.

"Look here, Johnny, my boy," she said kindly. "I am going to take away that five-pound note because it belongs to me, and if I were to give it to you, it would be like paying you for being honest. But I very much want a little boy to come and clean knives and boots, and if your mother will let you come directly after school you can have some tea at my house and then do your work, and you shall have two shillings a week to begin. I know I shall be able to trust you after this five-pound note."

Johnny's mother gladly consented, and the next day the litle fellow went to his work. How happy he felt at being actually able to earn something every week!

When he sat down to his comfortable meal he wished his mother could have some of the plenty he saw round him, and this thought made him rather sad over his work. But when he was going, the lady of the house came down to him and put a basket in his hands, which he guessed directly had something nice in it. And so it had; nor was that the last that Johnny carried home.

At first he got on only poorly with his work, but by degrees he grew quick and clever, and then his kind mistress gave him more money.

She found him a warm coat too, and some boots, besides things for the other children, so that altogether, which ever way he looked at it, Johnny could never feel thankful enough that his mother had made him a really honest boy.—The Quiver.

TEMPERANCE.

—The temperance people of Rutland, Vt., are triumphant over the sentence of a liquor-seller to imprisonment for thirty-five years. There were two hundred counts for as many different offences. The liquor-seller is a woman.

—The young ladies of Topeka, Kan., have organized Red Ribbon Clubs, the members of which pledge themselves to reject all attention from young men who use intoxicating beverages. This is practical prohibition.—Inter Ocean.

—The Rev. Charles Spurgeon, son of the famous London preecher told a Boston audience the other day that nobody had set wine before him since his arrival in this country, several weeks ago, and that he had seen none on private tables. He expressed his gladness thereat.

—The proposed prohibitory amendment was passed by the Senate of Oregon by a vote of 18 to 10, and by the House by a vote of 52 to 6, two members being absent from each house. The measure will come before the next Legislature, two years hence, and if agreed to then will be submitted to the vote of the people.

—Holland has passed a new law restricting the sale of ardent spirits by prohibiting its sale to any person holding a public appointment, and several other proscription. What would these advanced people say to our Congressmen?

—A circular and a notice issued by Superintendent Watts, of the Pan-Handle Road, declares that any employe of the road who frequents a saloon or gambling-house, either while on or off duty, will be promptly dismissed from the service of the company. The order, if carried out, will prove a heavy blow to saloon men in Logansport, Ind., and as a consequence, they are boiling over with indignation at the blow thus given to "personal liberty."

—A Detroit saloon-keeper advertises that he has paid three hundred dollars for a year's license to sell liquors, but that he means to voluntarily restrict his business within certain moral bounds. "To the wife who has a drunkard for a husband," he says in an advertisement, "or a friend who is dissipated, I say emphatically, give me notice of such cases, and all such shall be excluded from my place. Let fathers, mothers, sisters do like-wise, and their requests shall be regarded. I pay a heavy tax for the privilege of selling whiskey and other liquors, and I want it distinctly understood that I have no desire to sell to drunkards or minors, or to the poor or destitute. I much prefer that they save their money and put it where it will do the most good to their families."

Decisions of the Illinois Supreme Court.

"The power of the several States to regulate, or even to prohibit the retail of spirituous liquors within their limits, is expressly sanctioned by the Supreme Court of the United States in the license cases (5th How, 504), and there is nothing in the constitution of Illinois to prevent the exercise of that power. * * A government that did not possess power to protect itself against such and similar evils, would scarcely be worth preserving."—Jones vs. the people, 14th Ill., 196.

"By virtue of its police power, every State must have the right to enact such laws as may be necessary for the restraint and punishment of crime, and for the preservation of the public peace, health and morals of its citizens."—[Ibid.

"Dram-selling is not a pursuit which is entitled to the same degree of protection given to avocations which advance human happiness and trade and commerce, and neither produce immorality, suffering or want. It is a business which is on principle within the police power of the State, and restrictions may rightfully be imposed upon it, which would be obnoxious as an illegal restraint of trade, if applied to other pursuits. No one can obtain such a vested right in it that it may not be rescinded, when the interests of society require it."—[Schwuchow vs. Chicago, 68th Ill., 443.

tion. The liquor men, Democrats, disaffected Republicans and aristocrats have renominated the present Mayor. The whole issue is now over the question of licensing the saloons and the contest is heated and will be close.

Prominent among the leaders of the temperance movement are such men as Mr. S. P. Goddard, Mr. S. A. Pratt, Mr. C. B. Knight, Mr. D. Manning and sons, and others, who understand and oppose the whole secret society system. The "others" in the above enumeration includes a large number of equally good men and zealous reformers who oppose the secret empire. This city is full of men who understand the working of secret societies and who are quietly encouraging our movement and by means and influence ready to aid more publicly when our hosts are in battle array.

The last Sunday afternoon rally was enthusiastic. On the platform were representative pastors and laymen of nearly all denominations and the speaking was of a high order of extempore argument and appeal. I was most impressed by a brief, concise and clear address given by Rev. H. A. Stimson, pastor of the Union church. Knowing as I do the private opinion of Mr. Stimson concerning secret societies, there was no doubt that he intended, though in political language, to lift the voice of warning concerning the resort of the liquor dealers to secret society defence of their business. Figures were given to show that the revenue to liquor dealers from the sale of intoxicants is about eight hundred million dollars, while the estimated annual cost of our entire governmental system from the district school to the Executive Mansion, is seven hundred million dollars, leaving the revenues of the liquor traffic a round hundred millions better than that of the entire governmental system. It will be seen that we have a mighty power to contend against. But now, said Mr. Stimson, add to these alarming facts the other fact that all this capital is secretly organized to resist adverse legislation and protect its interests, and the power against which we are contending becomes simply appalling. We could face an open foe, but a secret power entrenched in all our legislatures controls all our laws and resists every reform.

This line of argument derives new force when it comes from a man who is not bent on making an argument in behalf of the anti secrecy reform, but who is simply compelled candidly to recognize this potent factor in the temperance reform.

The license system has prevailed in Worcester during the past season and 175 saloons were legalized. Under this system of "regulation" it has been reliably ascertained that three or four times as many saloons without license have run without let or hinderance. Many have therefore concluded that since "regulation does not regulate" we may as well have prohibition, even if it does not wholly prohibit.

Some most touching scenes have recently occurred, appalling to our tenderest sympathies. Recently a family was ejected from their tenement for the non-payment of rent. In the evening the policemen found the father and mother in neighboring saloons drunk, the furniture on the sidewalk and three little houseless children, worse than orphaned, had wrapped themselves in an old quilt and fallen asleep on the sidewalk. We may well exclaim "How long, O Lord, how long." Another sad case was described to me by one who saw it. A policeman brought a young girl, only 12 or 14 years old into the police headquarters dead drunk and rudely thrust her into a cell to sleep off her stupor. Still another case. A drunken woman was found in a stupor on the open stairs of a block here, with a bright-eyed little boy pulling at her clothes vainly trying to arouse her and begging her to come home, "Cause the children are crying."

While I write the issue here is being settled at the polls. It is election day. I shall endeavor to send word of the result tomorrow, in time for publication.

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
of Illinois.

For Vice-President.
JOHN A. CONANT.
of Connecticut.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—Bro. Heaton reports a good vote from Fairfield, Iowa: The American State ticket received nineteen votes, against eight votes last year, nearly two and one half times as many. This does pretty well. The only way to put down secret orders is to vote them down. Let us poll at least one hundred votes next year in Jefferson county for the American ticket.

—Wm. B. Poplin, Somonauk, Ill., reports one American party vote.

I. Daboll, North Hampton, Ill., reports one American party vote (his own) at Hallock.

Wm. D. Lowrey, Senecaville, Gurnsey Co., O. "I wish that some means might be devised by which the temperance elements in the American and prohibition parties might be consolidated without a sacrifice of principle on the part of the American party."

The Des Moines Register says that the words "or to be used," upon which the adverse decision of Judge Hayes upon the prohibitory amendment to the Iowa constitution was principally based, can be proved to be a forgery. If this is so, the Supreme Court will make short work reversing the Hayes' decision and sustaining the amendment. The other points made by Judge Hayes are technical and will not be allowed to contravene the evident intent of of the Legislature and of the large majority of Iowa voters.

Thurlow Weed wrote a letter the other day in which he said: "Many governors and several Presidents have voluntarily assigned to me the selection of large numbers of public officers of every degree. I have chosen men always for their fitness for the place." For any other man to speak thus of himself would be disgusting egotism. For Thurlow Weed, it is literal truth. No other man in our history has been so thoroughly the power behind the throne as he. Through a period of twenty or thirty years he was the great political boss of America. But the second sentence quoted from him suggests the difference between him and modern bosses, and shows how he retained his power.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Boycotting Prohibitionists.—A circular distributed in Indiana just before the late election is a testimony to the desperation of the liquor sellers and is one of the items of which we must count the cost in reform politics:

"Coal dealers, insurance agents, printers, grocerymen, dairymen, merchants and all others not members of the Anti-Prohibition association, are invited to read the following boycotting manifesto;

"'New Albany, Ind., Oct. 27th, 1882.—Mr.——: You are hereby notified that a resolution was adopted at our last meeting that all saloon-keepers who are active members of our association, upon the honor of gentlemen, will not patronize any one who is not a member of this or some other Anti-Prohibition association of the United States of America.

"'The above resolution was adopted at the last regular meeting, Friday, October 26, 1882. All members are notified accordingly.'"

The American Party.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED BY REV C. C. FOOTE BEFORE THE MINISTERIAL UNION OF DETROIT.

The American party aims at the restoration and perpetuation of American ideas of civil government. These ideas are that governments, whether civil, religious, or domestic, are ordained of God; that is, he requires men to be under government in these relations. That this requirement has its necessity in lapsed human nature. That government should proceed from the people and be administered by the people, for the highest good of all the people. That it is the duty of the people so to frame governments as will most effectually secure this end, to place in official position those who, unbiased by sinister motives, will see to it that these ends are faithfully secured.

The principles were enunciated by our Pilgrim Fathers in the cabin of the Mayflower, and they have a home in the Declaration of Independence. The God of the Bible was from the beginning the God of the Anglo-Saxon American people, who came to this western world that they might enjoy such a government as they found revealed in the Bible.

Now I propose to prove to you that there are organic forces at work in this nation whose aim and tendency is the overthrow of the principles on which the nation was originally established by our fathers. In passing, let me say here, that the American party is organized to forestall these treasonable aims and tendencies. What, then, are these inimical forces? I do not say that a political economy or party that aims at the control of government for spoils and partisan considerations necessarily aims at the overthrow of the government it seeks to control; but that such is the tendency all intelligent persons know. Now there is the most abundant evidence that the two great national parties are largely controlled by purely partisan considerations. Here then is

1. The need of a radical reform party.

2. I do not need to prove to you that papal Rome has tens of thousands of sacerdotal functionaries in this country, sworn to secure papal ascendency over every institution in this land. And that such an achievement would be hailed as the world's millenium by hundreds of thousands. Was Rome ever indifferent to her own aggrandisement, and did she ever fail to impose her demands with the sword where she had the power?

3. The spirit and purpose of Mormondom are too well known by the American public to demand a rehearsal by me; they knew its pretensions and the wickedness of its ambition. But that this conspiracy should have been allowed by the powers that be to attain its present alarming proportions, and to flaunt the flag of treason in the very face of the nation, decade after decade, is among the wonders of the age.

4. The National Liquor Dealers' Association would fain convert the American people into a nation of drunkards. And this they will do if their infamous traffic is not arrested and put down.

5. Beneath the conflict between capital and labor there lies a hidden rock that must be discovered and removed, or on it the ship of state will yet be wrecked. The American party is the only party that has the remedy for reconciling this conflict.

6. The American party recognizes the spiritual nature that exalts men above the brute creation. Hence it demands that the great army of foreigners coming to this country without a Sabbath or a Bible, shall not do violence to the Sabbath nor drive the Bible from the school. And this for the safety of the nation and their own good as well. Blot out the Sabbath and the laboring man will be compelled to perform the labor of seven days for the wages of six. Expel the Bible from the schools and you sap the very foundation of national virtue and stability.

7. We come now last, but not least, to an organization bound together by fetters of brass and chains of adamant. An organization that formulates its plans where no eye but its own can see, that teaches its lessons where no ear but its own can hear, and works its machinery where no sunlight ever shines. An organization into whose penetralia none of woman kind, or of penury or infirmity, or youth or age are ever initiated. An organization composed only of able-bodied men, who can pay, claiming to be six hundred thousand strong, and bound with oaths and penalties and maledictions that fill one with amazement and horror. An organization whose principles are as antagonistic to American ideas as darkness to light, or bitter to sweet; that shuns the light as men shun pestilence; that denies to men the right to know its nature or character or doings; that teaches its votaries that a SILENT TONGUE is among its crowning virtues and brightest jewels. An organization that laughs at opposition and defies its enemies; that draws annually from the industry of the country scores of millions of dollars to be consumed upon itself; whose chief concern is to see that its infamous secrets shall remain unknown—secret, because they are infamous. An organization that boasts of its prowess in the following startling language: "It has the force of cement through the civilized world, with the means of co-operating in the pulpit, in the legislative hall and on the bench. So powerful is it that it fears nothing, for it has the means to counteract, defeat and punish:"†

An organization that professes one thing and practices another; that calls itself light but is gross darkness; that "wages war with opposition with the cunning and stealth of the serpent and the savage;" that having once secured its victim allows no escape save through the gates of death. An organization that throws the shield of protection over the chastity of the mothers and wives of its own sort, but leaves all the rest of womankind to unguarded plunder; that cares only for the needy of its own craft, but not until they have well paid for it, leaving the care of the rest of the world's sick and suffering, insane and idiotic, blind and deaf, orphans and widows, to outsiders. An organization that swears to conceal each others crimes; that drinks wine in the fifth libation from a human skull, invoking double damnation upon the revealer of its secrets; that uses the Bible as an article of furniture, but blots the name of its author from its ritual as too sectarian; that promises to make heaven sure to all within its fold, whether they be priest or traitor, deacons or debauchees, class-leaders or gamblers, drunkards or sober men, the only condition being to "belong," obey orders and pay dues; that has no law against rebellion and treason, but cherishes both in equal fellowship with loyalty and patriotism. An organization that promises to interfere with neither the religion nor the politics of its dupes, but crushes both under its cloven foot in the incipient rights of its initiation; that calls itself the "handmaid" of religion, but by its deeds proves itself the head mistress of Satan's harem.

It is of such an organization that the American people voluntarily remain in "blissful ignorance," and glory in knowing nothing about it, forgetting that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."* Now, therefore, as one stationed by Providence upon the watch-tower to give timely warning of coming danger, it becomes my duty to make known the name and character of the organization thus faintly outlined.

Does the institution of Freemasonry answer to this description? We shall see, I summon to the stand as witnesses, recognized and accredited standard Masonic authors of highest authority, whose vocation is to teach Masonry and whose words are law. With these I summon men of national renown and of highest wisdom and probity who have made the study of Masonry a specialty, and also men who by initiation have mastered its character and revealed the same to the world. If this testimony of these witnesses establish these charges or their equivalent for unrighteousness, you will render your verdict accordingly.

"The candidate entering the lodge is on the point of binding himself voluntarily, absolutely and without reservation forever." "It is irrevocable, no law of the land can affect it, no anathema of the church can weaken it." "Right or wrong the one unpardonable crime in a Mason is disobedience." "Freemasonry is an institution subject to no other law than that which it makes itself." "The government is completely despotic, its edicts must be obeyed without examination." "The Master's authority is as despotic as the sun in the firmament." "The majority does not govern." "To every government save that of Masonry and to all the world beside, we are foreigners." "Masonry is a religious institution." "Initiation is, as it were, a death to the world and a resurrection to a new life." The candidate "having been wandering amid the errors and covered with the pollutions of the outer and profane world, comes to our doors seeking the new birth. The shock of enlightenment is the symbol of the agonies of the first death, and of the throes of the new birth." In the third degree, "We now find man complete in morality and intelligence, with the stay of religion added, to insure him of the protection of the Deity, and to guard him against ever going astray. Nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more which the soul of man requires."

Utterances as treasonable and as blasphemous as the above can be gathered from Masonic authors by the volume, but these are enough to convict Masonry of running an independent and therefore a treasonable government, and of propogating "another gospel" and therefore in rank rebellion against the author of the Gospel of the Son of God.

NOTE.—A single sentence from several of the many responses of those who heard the address:

1. "I know the institution is evil and only evil."
2. "I would have all secret societies abolished."
3. "I hold the whole thing in contempt."
4. "I advise all to keep out."
5. "I go against all secretism as wholly anti-Christ, and only dangerous."
6. "I never had the least sympathy with the institution."
7. "I am opposed from experience."
8. "I am opposed in toto."
9. "It weakens the power of the Christian ministry."
10. "Ministers that are silent stultify themselves; most ministers do."

The sentence of condemnation was unanimous.

Obituary.

FATHER A. S. WELLS, an earnest friend of our reform and a seceding Mason of seven degrees, died last month. For fifty years he was a minister of the Congregational church. He was secretary of our Association here in Fairfield, Iowa, and his last active work was given in its behalf. GEO. HEATON.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

—On the 4th of September the Baptist church was organized at Esmen, Livingston county, Ill., with eight members. The number is now doubled. The little company began right with respect to the lodge worships—keeping clear of any fellowship with them.

—Rev. D K. Flickinger, D. D., United Brethren missionary secretary, is again on his way to Africa. After spending a day or two at Willoughby, N. Y. with his family, he went to New York, from which place he sailed on the 9th for Glascow. After a few weeks there, he goes to west Africa. He will remain in Africa several months, and return by way of Germany next spring, reaching America in May.

—At the late meeting of the United Brethren Book Committee, Dr. L. Davis presented the manuscript of the biography of bishop Edwards, except the two closing chapters, which are in an advanced state of preparation. After careful examination the book was unanimously approved and ordered published. Dr. Davis has done a work, says the Telescope, of neatness, beauty, simplicity, and truthfulness.

—There are indications of a renewed anti-missionary onslaught. The opium interest of Great Britain is lifting its venemous fangs, like some Indian cobra, to strike the heel of what it feels is yet to crush its head. The London Times allows a correspondent from India to charge the missionaries with trying to cover their own failure by an attack upon the opium trade, and this is echoed by the N. Y. Herald and a largep art of the press.—Intelligencer.

—The various Bible Societies now represented in Japan, make it a rule never to give away the Scriptures. They have sold together 115,000 copies during the past year. It is stated that at Kioto a single copy of St. John's Gospel led sixty families to renounce idolatry; and that mass-meetings for prayer have been held in Japan, when in one case more than 3,500 and in another 7,000 persons were present.

—Church order, according to the usages of American Baptists, does not seem to trouble Mr. Spurgeon. He is now at Mentone, and a correspondent of the Freeman writes of a Lord's day there: "In the afternoon, in accordance with Mr. Spurgeon's regular practice when away from home, we observed the ordinance of the Lord's supper in his sitting-room. Five ministers and six other believers completed the assembly; but, as of old the risen Redeemer came to the disciples who had met in Jerusalem on the first day of the week, so did he appear in our midst, and we enjoyed sweet fellowship with the father, and with one another, through him." —Babtist Weekly.

—The deadly mountain fever is said by physicians in the Rocky Mountain mining regions to be caused by extreme nervous exhaustion. The Sunday work in the mines is the chief cause of it. Did any secular work on Sunday ever pay?—Exchange.

—The New York Presbytery has undertaken to establish an Italian Presbyterian church in that city, and Drs. Hastings and Crosby and Warren Carpenter are appointed a committee to conduct the enterprise.

—The striking feature of the Romish Church Congress in England was the appearance on the platform of the Ritualist, Father Ignatius, in a monastic garb, with shaven head and wearing a crucifix. He said that not more than one in twenty of the clergy had really received the Holy Spirit, and said he would rather listen to a Methodist minister who had been in the Holy Ghost's school and possessed the Holy Ghost in his heart than to all the college dons who had ever yet sought religion and Christianity. The Church which brushed away the rubbish from the rock and exposed the rock to the miner was the Church which would be uppermost in the Day of the Lord. If the Church of Rome did it, up with the Church of Rome; if the Church of England did it, up with the Church of England; if the Salvation Army did it, up with the Salvation Army.

* "You retain the form of freedom, but as far as I can gather there has been a considerable loss of the substance."—Herbert Spencer's speech in New York.

HOME AND FARM.

Diphtheria.

Rules Suggested by the Philadelphia Board of Health for Dealing with the Disease.

In order to prevent the spread of diphtheria and to inform the public of the best means of checking the spread of the disease and to provide the people with rules for treating the distemper, the Philadelphia board of health last week appointed a special committee to prepare a report on the subject. The committee Tuesday, through Dr. Richardson, the chairman, laid before the board its report:

"Recent investigations having proved that the poison of diphtheria is portable, communicable by infection, and capable of reproducing itself outside of the human body," says the committee; "Diphtheria must now be ranked as both a contagious and infectious disease. The following rules are therefore more imperative than ever before.

"When a child or young person has a sore throat, a bad odor to its breath, and especially if it has fever, it should immediately be separated and kept secluded from all other persons except necessary attendants until it be ascertained or not whether it has diphtheria or some other communicable disease.

"Every person known to be sick with diphtheria should be promptly and effectually isolated from the public. Only those persons who are actually necessary should have charge of or visit the patient, and these persons should be restricted in their intercourse with other individuals. Children residing in a house where there is a case of diphtheria should not be permitted to attend school.

"When a case of diphtheria is fully developed the same precautions in regard to free ventilation, disposal and disinfection of discharges, bed or body linen and so forth, isolation during convalescence (or management of the corpse should death unfortunately occur) ought to be enforced as follows: Have the patient placed in one of the upper rooms of the house, the furthest removed from the rest of the family where is to be had the best ventilation and isolation. The room should be instantly cleared of all curtains, carpets, woolen goods, and all unnecessary furniture. Keep the room constantly well ventilated by means of open windows and fires if necessary. Maintain the utmost cleanliness both with regard to the patient and in the room. A basin charged with chloride or carbolate of lime or some other convenient disinfectant, should be kept constantly on the bed for the patient to spit in. Change the clothing of the patient as often as needful, but do not carry it while dry through the house. A large vessel (a tub) containing water impregnated with a solution of carbolic acid in the proportion of four fluid ounces (Calvert's No. 4 or No. 5) to the gallon of water should always stand in the room for the reception of all bed and body linen immediately on removal from the person or contact with the patient. Pocket handkerchiefs should not be used, but small pieces of rag should be employed instead for wiping the mouth and nose, and each piece after being once used should be immediately burned. Two basins, one containing water impregnated with a solution of carbolic acid or permanganate of potassa and the other containing plain water and a good supply of towels, must always be ready and convenient, so that the hands of the nurse may be at once washed after they have been soiled by contact with the patient. All glasses, cups, and other vessels used by or about the patient should be scrupulously cleansed before being used by others. The discharges from the bowels and kidneys are to be received, on their very issue from the body, into vessels containing some disinfectant, as a solution of two pounds of sulphate of iron in a gallon of water, or four fluid ounces of carbolic acid (Calvert's No. 5) to a gallon of water, and immediately removed. No person should be allowed to enter the room except those who are attending upon the sick. Boiling is one of the surest ways of disinfecting all contaminated clothing. A solution of carbolic acid should first be added to the water. Any material which cannot be washed without injury should be exposed to a dry heat of about 240 degrees Fahrenheit, or fumigated in a closed chamber as directed below. A hot-air disinfecting chamber has been provided on the hospital grounds, where beds, woolen goods, etc., may be disinfected under the direction of officers appointed by the board. All articles which can be spared should be destroyed by fire. When persons have had the diphtheria, whether they get well or die, the room which they have occupied should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected. The furniture should be washed with a strong solution of chloralum, three or four ounces to the gallon of water, or preferably, with carbolic acid soap. Afterward the floor and woodwork should be washed with carbolic acid soap or with chloride of lime and water, and the paper should be removed by moistening with chloralum or carbonate acid solution. Then, after closing the doors, windows, and all other openings, the room should be fumigated by burning sulphur in an iron dish and kept closed for several hours. Chlorine gas may be used instead, and may be generated by pouring strong sulphuric acid upon equal parts of common salt and binoxide of manganese, to which some water has been added. After this the room should be well aired for several days by throwing open the doors and windows, and then the ceiling should be whitewashed and the walls repapered or whitewashed.

"It is particularly important that persons whose throats are tender or sore from any cause should avoid possible exposure to the contagion of diphtheria. Children under 10 years of age are in much greater danger of taking the disease, and after they do take it of dying from it than are grown persons. But adults are not exempt, and mild cases in them may cause whole series of fatal attacks among children.

"Numerous instances are recorded where the contagion of diphtheria has retained its virulence for weeks or months in cesspools, heaps of decaying vegetable matter, damp walls, etc., and been carried for long distances in clothing, in sewers, in waste pipes, from stationary wash-stands, and in other conduits. Hence all sewer connections and other carriers of filth should be well-ventilated and disinfected, and children particularly should not be allowed to breathe the air of any water-closet, cesspool, or sewer into which discharges from patients sick with diphtheria have entered, nor drink water or milk which has been exposed to such air.

"Beware of any person who has a sore throat; do not kiss such a person or take his or her breath; do not drink from the same cup, blow the same whistle, nor put his pencil or pen into your mouth.

"Do not wear or handle clothing which has been worn by a person during sickness or convalescence from diphtheria."

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich , and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers. 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow'a Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can donbt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers. 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry 15 cents each: per dozen. $1 25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author,

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. Each of these able writers in clear, forcible language treats the subject in one or more of its varied phases. Rev. David McDill in six chapters treats of 1. "Their Antiquity; 2 Their Secrecy; 3. "Oaths and Promises;" 4 "Profaneness" 5. "Their Exclusiveness;" 6. "False Claims." Prest. Blanchard handles the topic: "Shall Christians join Secret Societies?" in a masterly way, showing clearly that they are all opposed to the genius of Christianity; and Dr. Beecher closes with his Report on Secret Societies, which was adopted by the Congregational Association of Illinois at Ottawa in 1866. In cloth, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.25. Paper cover, 15 cents; per dozen, $1.25

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin, objects, what it has done and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the end sought; the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and By-laws of the Association, condition of the Carpenter donation, with engraving of building donated by Mr. Carpenter; tables showing the number of pastors and communicants in churches that exclude members of secret societies, tabular view of local, county, state and national conventions, and list of organizations auxiliary to the National Christian Association; brief opinions of eminent men on secret societies, and testimonies of religious bodies against them. 25 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Minutes of the Syracuse Convention. Containing addresses by Rev. B. T. Roberts, Chas. W. Greene, Esq., Prof. C. A. Blanchard, Rev. D. P. Rathbun, Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Mrs. M. E. Gage, Elder J R. Baird and others. Unpublished Reminiscences of the Morgan Times, by Elder David Bernard; Recollections of the Morgan Trials, as related by Victory Birdseye, Esq., and prescuted by his daughter, Mrs. C. B. Miller; Secretary's Report; Roll of Delegates; Songs of Mr. G. W. Clark; Paper by Enoch Honeywell; Constitution N. C. A.; Reports of Committees and a Report of the Political Meeting. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Blanchard, Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., Rev. Woodruff Post, Rev. Henry Cogswell, Prof. C. A. Blanchard and Rev. W. E. Coquilette; also Report of the Political Mass Convention, with Platform and Candidates for the Presidential Campaign of 1876. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Anti-Mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 31 Cynosure tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies; and the dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized secrecy are shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public. Those who wish to circulate anti-Masonic Tracts ought to have the book to select from. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Lecchburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

No. 7 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

In the Coils; or the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of every-day life, and showing how individual, domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. Parents who wish, not only to keep their children out of these night-schools of Satan, but to give them arguments against them in the most attractive dress, will do well to purchase this book. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Stearns' Review of Two Masonic Addresses. In this scathing review the lying pretensions of the order are clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Letters on Masonry. Showing the antagonism between Freemasonry and the Christian religion. Paper cover, 30 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages. 75 cents each; per dozen. $7.50

Freemasonry and the M. E. Church. Let every lover of truth and justice read this report of the trial of Rev. J. T. Michael, showing how he was driven out of the M. E. church for opposing Masonry and loving Methodism. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elders M. S. Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate, and afterward in pamphlet form. The Evangelical Repository, reviewing it, says: "This pamphlet consists of a series of articles originally published in the Church Advocate, Lancaster, Pa. Elder M. S. Newcomer opposes secret societies, and especially Freemasonry and Elder G. W. Wilson defends the system. We are free to say that Mr. Newcomer has thoroughly routed his opponent at every point. Mr. Wilson speaks by the book, as he is a Royal Arch Mason." 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Lonisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—In the House the question of erecting a new building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library was discussed at length. The maximum amount to be expended was fixed by vote at $2,000,000 and it was provided that the building should be erected on one of the vacant Government reservations.

—If the stories told to the Citizens' Committee of Washington are true, the detective force of that city should be behind the bars. It is said that detectives "stood in" with the thieves who robbed the Government Printing Office and who carried off Minister Christiancy's diamonds, and shared in the results of these and other thefts.

—The steel-rail mills at South Chicago have shut down. It is alleged that this course was forced upon the company by low prices.

—It is stated on good authority that the West Side Street Railway Company of Chicago intends within a very short time to run its cars by electricity, and that it is now considering an invention for that purpose.

—A destructive fire took place in a distillery at Gibsontown, Fayette county, Pa. Over two million gallons of whisky were stored on the premises, a large proportion of which was destroyed. Loss estimated at $500,000.

—Friday's fires included a river-front blaze at New Orleans with a loss of $400-000 and the destruction of the finest business block in Toledo, O., which is valued at $700,000.

—A new oil well yielding 1,000 barrels per day having been struck in Forest county, Pennsylvania, the bottom dropped out of the market at Bradford and Pittsburg again.

—A horrible fatality occurred at Shawneetown, Ill., on the 11th, where a boiler explosion in a sawmill caused the death of eight men.

—An Opelika, La., special says the two factions, the old and the new City Councils which have been quarreling for several days, raised a riot in which the mayor and police were involved. Nine white men and one negro were shot down, seven of whom will die. The legislature has passed an act vacating the town charter and authorizing the Governor to appoint a local government until a new one can be elected.

—Mr. Gladstone on Wednesday celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his entry upon public life. The English papers generally reviewed his life and services at length and in complimentary terms, and he was the recipient of numerous addresses from political associations and other bodies.

—The Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland has commuted the sentence of death imposed on the five murderers of the Joyce family to imprisonment for life.

—Patrick Joyce, Myles Joyce and Patrick Casey, the three men convicted of participation in the murder of the Joyce family at Maamtrasna, were hanged on the 15th.

—The entire business section of Kingston, Jamaica, has been destroyed by fire, the loss of property being estimated at thirty million dollars. Warehouses, wharves, banks and stores were all swept away, nearly all the food supply was lost, and hundreds of persons were rendered homeless and destitute.

—A large volume of water suddenly burst into the Australian mine at Dreswick, Talbot county, Victoria, while a large number of miners were at work. Twenty-two bodies had already been brought to the surface, and the search was still being actively prosecuted, as it is known that a large number of others are still in the mine.

—The Sultan of Turkey has had built for his use an armored carriage, bullet and grenade proof. His palace is practically in a state of siege. Nobody is allowed to enter unless summoned The Sultan's alarm is owing to sedition among the troops, who are angry at the way the palace guards are paid, while they are in rags.

—What is believed to be a case of genuine leprosy has been developed in the almshouse at Salem, Mass. The victim, Charles Derby, arrived in Salem from San Francisco a week ago, and was for some years employed as a botanist in the royal gardens at Honolulu.

A PLACE FOR YOUR PERIODICALS,
And an ornament for your house, all in one,
THE NOYES DICTIONARY HOLDER.

A thousand dictionaries in out-of-the-way-places will not instruct, while a single dictionary, mounted in a Noyes Dictionary Holder, will instruct thousands. In fact, the Holder is the great helper of the great lexicons, and in making these vast stores of learning available, is second only in importance to the Learned Authors themselves. Five styles. Holder is nickel, and has much the appearance of silver. This finish consists of a heavy metal plating, is exceedingly attractive, and will withstand any amount of rough usage. The Tilting Top Holder is meeting with great favor wherever seen. A neat attachment is now made for holding newspapers and magazines, thus bringing together the publications most constantly referred to—the Paper, the Periodical and the Dictionary. Holders sent express prepaid on receipt of price. Circulars free. Send for them now. Address L. W. NOYES, 99 & 101 W. Monroe St., Chicago.

TOPICS OF THE TIME.

A measure is before the Senate to make stock gambling odious. It provides that the fact that any person is engaged in dealing in futures in stocks, provisions, or grain, or in corners, shall of itself be sufficient ground for filing a petition in bankruptcy against such person. The proposition came up in the form of an amendment to the Bankruptcy bill, and was adopted dy a considerable majority. Just now the New York legislature is investigating the same business, and its committee has been taking evidence in New York city. The purpose of the committee may be all well and good, but when it calls in Dr. Crosby and H. W. Beecher a sinister purpose is detected, either to make these gentlemen ridiculous before the public by getting from them opinions on a subject of which they know little, or to make the investigation itself a sham. Jay Gould told the committee that legal restriction would not cure the evil The only check necessary in his view is the fact that nine-tenths of those who gamble in stocks lose by it. A legal restriction has this merit, however, if no other; it fastens upon the busiuess the fact of its immorality, and backs up a score of court decisions which make this no better than any other gambling.

General Curtis an officer of the government in New York was indicted some time since for assisting Congressman Hubbell in collecting "voluntary assessments" from government employes for the support of the Republican party. The case passed through the State courts against Curtis and the Supreme Court has just given its decision. The Court not only affirms the constitutionality of the law which prohibits certain classes of officers and employes from receiving or soliciting money from one another for political purposes, but says further: "If persons in public employ may be called on by those in authority to contribute from their personal income to the expenses of political campaigns, and a refusal may lead to putting good men out of the service, liberal payments may be made the ground for keeping poor ones in." And if the evil is allowed it will result in demanding increase of salary from the government, which may thus be made an instrument indirectly of keeping a corrupt party in power. This clear and forcible decision is a vindication of the people's protest on the 7th of November which the political leaders will not forget.

From Oregon papers of the last week in November, it is learned that Mrs. Captain John Smith, the only daughter of William Morgan, died at her home on the Santiam river, near Mehama, Marion county, Oregon, on the 20th November. She had reached the age of 60 years, and had long lived at this place. It is said that she never threw any light on the great tragedy that befell her family, though it is believed she must have heard much about it from her mother and other relations. She had been frequently interrogated, but spoke of the matter with the greatest reluctance. Being but a child of some three years when her home was invaded by the fearful power of Freemasonry, her testimony as to the transaction could not, of course, be very complete. She may yet have been able to give some additional facts which would have been of deep interest.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has approved, through its national officers, of the proposition of the United Presbyterian brethren, that Tuesday of the Week of Prayer be devoted "as a day of prayer to the God of Nations, that his Militant Army may be so endued with power from on high, that it shall be indeed mighty for the pulling down of strongholds, and that a Pentecostal power, like that of the Woman's Crusade of 1874, may rest upon us all, to the end that in the customs of society and by the laws of the land, there shall be a turning from the use and sale of alcoholic liquors as a drink." They also recommend that all-day meetings be held and suggest a programme, which will be furnished on application to the office, 53 Bible House, New York.

The "Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers" met this fall in Louisville, Ky. The proceedings of their three-days' meeting were so secret that even the ubiquitous reporters were foiled. But this conclave, so secret in the midst of a peaceful Christian community, and therefore so contrary in its practice to Christianity and good government,—this secret lodge cabal was entertained one evening by the Young Men's Christian Association of Louisville! Would this Y. M. C. A. have noticed a meeting of the disciples of Jesus gathered to pray for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit or that the great idolatry of the lodge be broken up?

—Joseph Cook is to begin January 8, a course of twelve Monday noon lectures in Tremont Temple, Boston. The Congregationalist says: "We have been impressed with the solemn earnestness of his manner since he returned to Boston. He has the bearing of one who feels the burden of a great responsibility. Having looked widely upon the world's needs and opportunities, he seems to feel, and to wish all others to feel, the supreme duty and privilege of making the most of life. A little of that sort of seriousness is not unwelcome just now. We hope it will spread."

Satan's Substitutes for Religion.

Men know the existence of God as they know space, or time, not by our senses' but by our reason; and with equal certainty. The man who doubts or denies either, has a perverted understanding, as he has perverted or defective senses, who is color blind, unable to distinguish red from green.

Satan, the foe of God, the enemy of man, and the rival of Christ, insinuates himself into the false philosophies, as into the false religions of men. Indeed, false philosophy is the theology of false religion. "The world, by wisdom, knew not God." And again,

"Faults in the life breed errors in the brain."

The use Satan has for vices and sins is to blind "the mind of them that believe not;" and so divorce and keep men from being reconciled to God in Christ.

Transmigration, souls passing into different bodies at death in an eternal round: evolution, all things growing better by an eternal law of progress;—these keep the mind from ever getting to God. And ceremonies, false worships, cheat the hearts of men, as false philosophies cheat their minds. Both keep men busy till "the harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved;" and both realize the fable of Sisyphus, who spent his eternity rolling a stone up a hill to let it roll down again. But the place where Ulysses saw Sisyphus was in hell!

A Bugle Call.

Civilization at times seems to turn backward; yet a reaction follows and the tide sweeps beyond all previous landmarks. In all great reforms God raises up to warn the masses a few stern, earnest men, who will declare their convictions of truth though the whole world scorn and revile them, and though it cost them their lives. If the people listen to the voice of warning all is well; if they will not listen God will in some way force the issue upon them. Some whose heads the hand of time has crowned with silver, well remember when the Abolitionist movement was in its infancy; you remember what earnest, aggressive men God sent forth; what burning glowing words fell from their lips, which seemed almost, to be touched with fire from on high; how they were ridiculed, called fanatics, and mobbed, yet they would not stop until the lips of some were sealed forever by the assasin's bullet. Even that did not seem to stop them; but their words came to us in clearer accents through the portals of the tomb. Men who would not listen to the living did listen to the dead. Yet the masses would not make any aggressive movement; they said "Slavery may be wrong, but we can do nothing about it, slaveholders are in our Congress and help enact our laws. The institution is protected by our laws; it has coexisted with our nation and cannot be put down.

Some of you remember how bloody years followed each other with fierce red feet; how our fathers and brothers went forth in the pride and strength of manhood; how the mothers and sisters waited and watched at home, watched with sad, weary eyes for forms which would never come again; waited with burdened hearts to kiss lips which would never be kissed save by the dark soil of a southern grave.

Dear reader, would you have those years come to you again? You answer, "No." Why do you ask such a question?

—Faith's eyes can see through a frown of God, and under it is read God's thoughts of love.

The slave power is gone forever, it is true, yet there is an institution in our midst that is as much worse than slavery was as idolatry is worse than oppression. The slave power was confined to one section of the country; the lodge power has its strongholds in every State, in every county, and in every town of any size. The slave power did not control over two-thirds of the offices; a Masonic lecturer declared in public a short time ago that nine-tenths of all government offices were filled by Masons: Yet the proportion of Masons to those who are not is very small. A short time before he said that the secrets of Freemasonry had not been, could not be, and never would be revealed. While this is mere bravado, yet to all practical purposes, it is true. A majority of the people in the United States know nothing about the power of the lodge or its true aim. If I had not the proof before my eyes I should say that it were impossible that an intelligent people would allow nine-tenths of the public offices to be held by members of a secret order of which they know nothing. Yet it is so. If two-thirds of our offices were filled by members of the Methodist church, one long, loud cry would resound from east to west, from north to south: Danger! Danger! The church and state must not be united. Yet men shut their eyes, fold their hands and say there is no danger when the secret empire and the state are united.

This institution, which is so harmless and innocent, has a power so great that to-day no man, whatever his abilities may be, can rise to any high office unless he has first bowed his knee to the secret empire. Such is its power that of all the papers published in the United States, you can count on your fingers those that will publish an article opposed to secret societies. Such is its power that in the five leading denominations you can not find more than a score of pulpits from which the pastor would dare to say one word against the lodge power. Such is its power that men who go forth to lecture against it are mobbed and their meetings broken up; yet they can have no redress, for the men who have sworn to enforce the law take part in the disturbance themselves, or have sworn to protect their brothers who have taken part.

It is this secret power which reaches forth its dark, slimy hand and says to the man who has professed to devote his whole life to the cause of Christ, "If you will come to me I will help pay your salary. It will cost you nothing. Come." He goes and is taught the one universal religion. He kneels at the altar of the unknown god and prays, not to Christ, but to the Grand Architect of the Universe." On the Sabbath day he stands behind the sacred desk and points out to others "the steep and thorny way to heaven." It is this power which from its dark midnight home sends forth its baneful, incestious breath, to extinguish the holy flame which burns on the altar of the true God.

The secret empire is to-day striking at the three fundamental safeguards of civil aud religious liberty, namely, free speech, free press and free mails. To some who have not investigated this subject it may seem as though this were not the voice of reason but the mysterious, moody mutterings of a madman. To such I would say, "I do not ask you to take my word, you can easily prove whether my words are true or not. Ask your paper to publish an article opposed to secret societies, or your pastor to preach a sermon on the lodge power. Ascertain how many offices in your county are filled by men who are members of secret orders.

I know of no way of judging of the future but by the past. In all the annals of the past, point out to me if you can, one man or combination of men that having usurped great power ever yielded it willingly, or were satisfied with the power which they had already acquired. "It is natural for man to indulge in the illusions of hope." "We are apt to shut our eyes against a painful truth, and listen to the song of the siren till it is to late."

Do you see yonder beautiful ship, with every white sail unfurled, sailing with wind and tide? How proudly, grandly she passes from wave to wave! There are brave men, beautiful women and innocnt children on board; laughter and mirth are there. But look! they are sailing toward a rock-bound coast. A voice of warning says, "there is danger ahead! there are rocks beneath the waves! "They look forth, and laugh him to scorn. What! rocks beneath those soft fleecy waves? The ship sails on, they are among them now, and the children clap their hands in glee to see the white-capped waves rise up by the ship's side. There is a crash.

"She struck where the white and fleecy waves Looked soft as carded wool."

They see the danger now and pierce the sky with one last, despairing wail, "O save us! Must we perish?" The rock-bound coast echoes back above their last resting place—"perish."

To you who believe that my words are true I would say, To the work! Never were the times more auspicious. Men who have never heard of our party say that a new party must arise.

"They tell us, sir, that we are weak; unable to cope with so formidable an adversary. But when shall we be stronger? Will it be the next week, or the next year? Will we gather strength by inaction?" "If we were base enough to desire it, it is now too late to retire from the contest. There is no retreat but in submission and slavery. Our chains are forged." Two years ago you heard their brazen clamor, within the halls of Boston, declaring that there was one subject on which you should not be free.

To the work now, or the time will come when you will look back to this day, to this hour.

"As the dammed haply think of the heaven
They had once in their reach—that they might have been free."

The shadow is on the dial; the hand writing is on the wall; he who runs may read.

HELMET.

"Nihilism."

Karl Blind in the Contemporary Review.

This word, first introduced in the Russian language by Turguenieff for a character of one of his novels, was before him used by the German writer Getzkow in his "Ritter von Geist." Its present application to the state of parties in Russia is rather misleading. As elsewhere, there are in Russia men of very various opposition shades—from the moderate Liberal, who would be satisfied with some kind of parliamentary representation, to the Republican and Socialist of different sectional views, and down to the impracticable anarchist, whose brain has been turned and set fire to by incessantly brooding over wrongs without the possibility of redress. It is not fair to lump all these groups together and to brand them as Nihilists. It should be remembered that the very terrorists of the Narodnaia Volia ("Will of the People") who were driven to their present tactics by sheer despair of making an impression by any other procedure, have even quite recently declared in a remarkable manifesto that if the Czar were to consent to the convocation of a National Constituent Assembly, they would at once cease using violent means.

When Gen. Garfield was stricken down by the hand of a crack-brained assasin, the Secret Russian Committee issued a protest containing expressions of deep sympathy with the people of the United States, and an energetic denunciation of the vile murderer. "In a country," they said, "where the personal liberty of the citizens allows of the pacific agitation for an idea, and where the free will of the people not only frames the laws, but chooses the government, assasination as a means of political struggle is tantamount to that very despotism, the overthrow of which is the object of the revolutionary party in Russia."

Surely these views are not what most people would call "Nihilism." Only step by step, and very unwillingly at first, were even the extreme Russian Socialists induced to give up their originally peaceful agitation among the peasantry and the people of the workshops. They began as thorough idealists, imbued with an apostolic spirit. Mostly young men and girls of the well-to-do, cultured, even aristocratic class, they gave up all their worldly prospects; dressed like working people and peasants; changed their names; mixed and labored with the crowd, trying to gain it over to the new gospel of political and social progress—often with very indifferent success; for the more brutish among the ignorant multitude often handed over their would-be friends and deliverers to the police. Of these enthusiasts, a book ("Subterranean Russia") published by a pseudonym author, M. Stephjak, but the contents of which are in no small measure authenticated by a well-known Russian exile, says:

"Their creed was Socialism; their god, the people. They were ready for every sacrifice; but they possessed neither the impetuosity nor the deep passions necessary for the combat. After the first disappointments they no longer hoped for victory, but aimed more at the crown of thorns than at the laurel-wreath. They were overflowing with love, and unable to hate anybody—not even their executioners."

Not a few of these, however, whose career had thus commenced, afterward changed into supporters of a system of revolutionary terror, owing to the wholesale arrest and deportation of the most peaceful propagandists. The trial of 193 prisoners at Moscow, in 1878, destroyed the last illusions as to the possibility of a legal agitation for social and political reform. Then, in Schiller's words, "The milk of pious thought turned into dragon's bane." Conspiratory circles were formed, in which "a covenant with death" was the parole.

There is not space enough here to give a description, highly instructive as it would be of the many martyrs of revolutionary conviction who have suffered the penalty of their deeds during the last few years. Among the various typical figures of these conspiracies, two at least may be mentioned: Danitri Lissogub, who was hanged on the denunciation of his own steward, for having devoted his whole property to propagandism and revolutionary action. It came out in the trial of the sixteen, in 1880, that Lissogub sold landed estates of the value of 200,000 rubles for that purpose. Pale, haggard, long bearded, of apostolic aspect and demeanor, this enthusiast always appeared in most shabby garb, thinly clad, in the bitterest cold. The author of "Subterranean Russia" calls him "the Saint of Nihilism." His counterpart was Valerian Ossinsky. He is depicted as of great manly beauty, tall, slim, of elegant attitude, with blue eyes of enthusiastic expression, fair-haired and well-bearded, of charming manners—a favorite of women. He was the best collector of pecuniary means for the party. When he asked for contributions, even old misers did not resist his persuasive voice. He is called the "Apollo of Nihilism." He, too, ended at the gallows.

The Gain of Sabbath Rest.

Of course I do not say that a man will not produce more in a week by working seven days than by working six days. But I very much doubt whether, at the end of the year, he will generally have produced more by working seven days a week, than by working six days a week; and I firmly believe that at the end of twenty years he will have produced less by working seven days a week than by working six days a week. The natural difference between Campania and Spitzbergen is trifling when compared with the difference between a country inhabited by men of full bodily and mental vigor, and a country inhabited by men sunk in bodily and mental decrepitude. Therefore it is that we are not poorer, but richer, because we have through many ages rested from our labor one day in seven. That day is not lost. While industry is suspended, while the plough lies in the furrow, while the exchange is silent, while no smoke ascends from the factory, a process is going on quite as important to the wealth of the nation as any process which is performed on more busy days. Man, the machine of machines—the machine compared with which all the contrivances of the Watts and Arkwrights are worthless—is repairing and winding up, so that he returns to his labor on the Monday with clearer intellect, with livelier spirits, with renewed corporeal vigor.—Macaulay.

The Sermon.

PREACHED IN THE COLLEGE CHAPEL, WHEATON, BY PRES. C. A. BLANCHARD.

Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the World.—I John 4:1.

In this verse we have two commands and the reason for their utterance; we are not to believe every spirit, we are to try all spirits under whose influence we may be thrown, and the reason for this unbelief and testing is that many false prophets are gone out into the world. A prophet, strictly speaking, is one who foretells future events; generally used, it signifies any religious teacher. A false prophet, therefore, is an erroneous teacher, and the injunction of the text is, not to believe every spirit bnt to try all spirits because there are many teachers of error gone out into the world. These facts lead to the conclusion that the spirits which we are not to believe without examination are in men; i. e., are in persons who profess to be prophets. Interpreting the text in this manner it will read: Do not believe every religious teacher, but test all those who profess to declare the word of God, for many false teachers are abroad among men. Our subject naturally divides itself as follows:

I. All men, and especially all religious teachers, are led and inflnenced by some spirit, so that testing their teachings is testing the spirits which animate them.

II. Spirits are of two sorts, good and bad; good spirits make true prophets, bad spirits make false prophets or teachers.

III. Evil spirits do not appear in their own guise and openly profess their own work. They mingle with the sons of God, profess to declare his Word, and seek to be credited as his representatives.

IV. It is hence a duty to test these teachers to ascertain by what spirit they are moved and if this is duty of course God has furnished the means of doing it: i. e., we can know whether prophets are trne or false.

V. Having tested spirits we should resist the devil and be filled with faith and with the Holy Ghost.

MEN ARE CONTROLLED BY SPIRITS.

Idealism and materialism have been contending schools in Philosophy, the one claiming that there is nothing but spirit and its manifestations; the other that there is nothing but matter and its qualities. Both these opinions are contradicted by the universal judgment of the masses of men. Here, as frequently in the development of mind, error is in each extreme while trnth lies in the valley between. There is little doubt however, that the idealist is much nearer to the truth than his materialistic neighbor. It is much more nearly the trnth that spirit is all, than that matter is all. All that we see in nature is the expression of that which first existed in the mind of God, and all that we see in art is simply the embodied thought of man. It is obvious that all the works of men may be divided into two great classes, viz., those which are honorable to God, as man's creator, and useful to men, and those which are dishonoring to God and damaging to men. It has been said that one who makes two blades of grass grow where only one was before is a benefactor of the race, so is every one who increases the sum total of human happiness by exertion of muscle or mind. The sewing machine clicks in every household and the farmer of to-day may ride almost all the season excepting at meal times. The printing press gives us the life work of Milton for twenty-five cents, or the New Testament for a nickel. Take on the other hand the invention of the still or the passion for war. The one set of inventions tend to widen the horizon and lengthen the life and increase the powers and opportunities of men, the other to multiply miseries and deaden the hopes, and brutalize the soul. Just so in regard to the teachings of men, in one case we find hnmility, purity, and usefulness as the result of instructions, in other cases conceit and folly attended by no tangible result of good. The fact that all man's thonghts, plans and labors tend certainly in one of these two directions leads to the second proposition, viz., that, the good and the evil, the one leading men ever upward, the other leading them ever downward. The Bible calls evil spirits "unclean" more frequently than anything else, and good spirits are ministering, i. e., serving. The names express the tendency and results of the action and teaching of the two classes of spirits. In the one case we have material and spiritual defilement, idleness, vagabondage, vice, envies, hatreds, murders. In the other case we have service, the weak strengthened, the ignorant instrncted, the vicious reclaimed, the idle and worthless made industrious and useful. Over every man's head and heart these two armies of light and darkness contend, each struggling for mastery. They do not always reveal themselves to those for whom they battle. Men simply find themselves moved by two opposing winds, one blowing in one direction, and another in a contrary one. The lie and the truth each stand begging for reception; honesty and dishonesty claim the man's mind and soul. All conceivable teachings, examples and impulses run in one of these two directions. There is no third somewhat that divides with these two the empire of the world. All actions are good or evil. All actions are the frnit and resnlt of spirit, the embodiment of thought. Nor are men's acts in general the sole product of their own thought. One man's mind operates upon the mind of another and oftentimes we find ourselves in the hands of spirit influences which do not have bodily form and which work upon the mind without intervention of the senses. The one makes the man a true prophet, whom it will be safe to follow; the other makes him a false prophet of whom there are many in the world. Bnt the point to be especially noted here is that the false spirit never sails under his true colors. A true pirate, he displays all flags except his own. The black flag with its skull and bones is never run up until he deems it impossible for his victim to escape.

THERE ARE TWO SORTS OF SPIRITS,

SATAN IMITATES THE ANGEL OF LIGHT.

(2 Cor. 11:14;) and in this garb he deceives many. When he came to Eve, it was with a proposition to bestow upon her a good gift; when he came to God as the accuser of Job, he was only interested in unmasking a hypocrite; when he came to the Lord Jesus, his mouth was full of texts of Scripture. If he thus boldly confronted our parents in Eden, and God himself, it is small wonder if he in like manner assails us. He makes the worldly, careless, self-righteous professor of religion at ease; he refrains from him and lets him alone. He finds some humble, nsefnl, self-distrustful soul and harrasses and pursues it with doubts and fears. Thus, liar and hypocrite that he is, he preaches peace to the one who serves self and terror to the one who serves God, and all the while it is as a teacher of divine truths that he appears. With lies he makes the heart of the righteous sad whom God has not made sad. Ez. 13:22. And at the same time he strengthens the hands of the wicked that he should not return from his evil way by promising him life. But onr text reqnires us to try the spirits whether they be of God. Of course if it is a duty to TRY SPIRITS; IT CAN BE DONE.

Every command supposes power to fulfill it, and this one in the text is no exception. Let us then for a little while examine the Scriptures to see how to test them. And first, we have one chief and comprehensive test in the immediate context. Every spirit that confesses that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God. There are two ways of confessing or denying this, viz., by word and by deed. Some openly deny that Christ, the anointed one, has come in the flesh, lived, suffered and died for the sins of men. Masonic and Odd-fellow lodges and ministers who deny the atonement are of this number. Other systems and teachers are animated by a spirit that does not explicitly deny this, but renders its lip-confession worthless by repudiating the teachings and refusing the authority of Jesns. Examples are found in Mormonism, Spiritnalism and in those who profess to believe and do not obey. Every one who denies that Jesns Christ came in the flesh to bear the load of sin away from the sons of men is not animated by the Spirit of God.

ANOTHER TEST IS FOUND

further along, to-wit in the sixth verse. "We are of God," says the apostle. He that knoweth God heareth us, he that is not of God heareth us not. This is an assertion of his inspiration and a declaration that those who reject the inspired Word of God, do not know him. To the same effect is the word of the Saviour: "My sheep know my voice; * * they know not the voice of strangers. (Substance of John 10:4.) We have here a simple method, by which we can determine our state, and the character of religious teachers. How do we do with the Wordof God? Do we hear and heed it? Every one who is of God knows his voice, recognizes his word and gives attention to it. He who slights the word, or refuses it or in any way casts reproach and discredit upon it, is not of God: does not know him, whatever he may profess. There have been in all ages of religions advance worthy persons who have imagined themselves to have passed beyond the need of God's Word inasmuch as they receive direct communications from above. They consider themselves as much inspired as John why then should they listen to him. Themselves have visions, dream dreams, and hear voices direct from God's throne, what profit is it to them to study a book written by one just like themselves. Against all such errorists the Holy Spirit sets himself. He that is of God heareth us. To hear implies obedience, and trust, not merely an impression made upon the mind through the eye or ear. Supposing now a person to affirm that he speaks or acts under compulsion of the Holy Spirit. That he does as he does, it being impossible to do otherwise. Whereas Panl affirms (1 Cor. 14:32) that the spirit of the prophets is subject to the prophets, God not being the anthor of confusion, bnt of peace as in all assemblies of the holy ones. He that is of God heareth the inspired word of God. Does not slight or set it aside on one pretence or another but hears it.

Still a third test we find in the latter part of the chapter. It is the test of

LOVE TOWARD OUR FELLOWS.

This is the evidence and proof of our love to God. If I say without ceasing that I love God and am at peace with him, no man can perhaps tell whether I lie or tell the truth; i. e., if he knows nothing except that I say so. Bnt if I say that I love and am at peace with my fellow men, this is a matter that is much more easily determined, and the Holy Spirit makes a clear statement that the one who says he loves God and at the same time hates his fellow, is a liar. Here is another plain, obvious measnre by which we can try ourselves and all religious teachers. Do words and works of love for man flow ont from our hearts and appear as the result of the teaching which we examine? If not, the spirit that is at work is not a good one but a bad one. If men are constantly seeking to get blessed but never seeking to impart blessing to others they are not in the Bible way. If persons are constantly blessing others they will find the peace of God to be flowing through their hearts like a river. If we find however, that onrselves or our teachers bless God and curse man with the same mouth, we should be snre that here is a manifest footprint of Satan.

But what is the use of testing or trying spirits and refusing to believe some that profess to declare the mind of God? It is evidently because we may reject the evil and choose the good. Here comes in again the wonderful

POWER OF CHOICE.

The devil assaults all. From the first Adam to the second and in all the weary years since, Satan has laid siege to the human soul. Never in his native blackness and hideous deformity, but always disguised as an angel of light. Or if there be exception to this general rule, it is when he clutches with fierce talons his shnddering prey after his siege is snccessful and his triumph assured. But men may resist the devil, and if they resist him he will flee from them. Jas. 4:7. And men may draw nigh to God, and if they do he will draw nigh to them. Men may be filled with all the fnlness of God. Eph. 3:19. Here is a blessed truth upon which we may well rest. It is not an idle task to try the spirits for if we find them evil, no matter how plausible or powerful they may be, we may successfully resist them, and if we find them to be holy and good we may receive them and crown them and obey them forever.

BELIEVE NOT EVERY SPIRIT.

Stick by what you know to be good until you find something that you know to be better. Try spirits, all of them, even when they come quoting Scripture. There are many false prophets gone out into the world, who in the end reject Christ, cast away his words and instill hatred into hearts where love should reign. Reject the evil and cleave to the good so shall you become partakers of the divine nature having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

REFORM STORY.

Holden with Cords.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LITTLE PEOPLE," "A SUNNY LIFE," ETC.

Chapter XXXIII—Angean Stables.

Fidelity lodge met in the upper story of a brick building near the center of the village, agreeably to the practice of their ancient brethren who assembled on high places to worship Baal, as standard Masonic authorities confirmed byall the Bible commentaries and encyclopedias, unite to inform us. It numbered sixty or seventy members and to outward appearances was in a prosperous condition. But an examination of the Secretary's books would have revealed a tale of disordered finances only equalled by the petty bickerings and out-and-out quarrels that at every meeting of the lodge vexed the sonl of the Worshipful Master, who strove heroicallv to infuse his own high Masonic ideal into the worthy brethren, but never snceeeded in quite satisfying himself or anybody else.

It is a melancholy fact that "the good men in the lodge" of whom we hear so much are a practical nonentity beside a few unscrupulous members. Goodness is modest and apt to shrink into the back-ground; but wickedness is aggressive and out-spoken. Anson Lovejoy, though he held the highest office in the lodge, did not wield in reality a tenth part of the influence exercised by another member who held no office at all.

This was Mr. Jervish, to whom the reader will remember that I made a rather disparaging allusion in my talk with Rachel recorded in the last chapter. I disliked the man without knowing anything very positive about him beyond what the tongue of rumor asserted—that he was a free-thinker in religion and a libertine in morals. But it must not be supposed that these two trifling circumstances affected in the least his good and regular standing in the lodge, or moved any one of the reverend gentlemen belonging thereto to protest for the honor of their sacred office against snch companionship.

It was commanded of old that even the burden bearers of the temple should be clean from all defilement. Shall they who are separated to a far higher service, fraternize in unholy union with men who habitually violate God's code of moral purity, and think to stand with unspotted garments in the pulpit? Can their prayers, their sermons, their breaking of bread in the Holy Supper be anything but an abomination and a loathing in his sight? O, Church of the living God, how long will you allow such foolish pastors to lay waste your fair heritage? O, Bride of Christ, how long shall your honor be turned to shame by their praises of your harlot rival?

Mark—or to speak more correctly, Elder Stedman, had lost none of his old hatred to the lodge. He had only relaxed his warfare on the system when he believed that it was down never to rise again from its mortal hurt. And now the fall of slavery had made a silence in which the approaching footsteps of the next great issue was plainly perceptible to "the hearing ear," which Elder Stedman believed ought to be more characteristic of the ministry than any other class of men—an opinion largely based on the Bible accounnt of the old prophets, who certainly took a lively interest in the great moral questions of their day. But a good many people did not share this idea, and when Mark began to level his arrows at Masonry there was the usual number of undiscerning good men outside of the lodge, "who thought ministers ought to preach the gospel and let other subjects alone. Bnt the Elder had never been in the habit of reading his marching orders backward. He hadn't the slightest notion that the command, "Cry aloud and spare not," really meant, "Be silent on all popular sins, and spare the feelings of sinners as much as possible." And so he preached on, as serenely careless of any disturbance produced by his words as the sun is of all the agitated runnings to and fro in some colony of discomforted beetles suddenly exposed to the light.

Masonry was strong in Granby, and under its shadow flourished Odd-fellowship, and all the kindred secret orders that like mushroons sprang up in the night of the war to cover the land with their rank, foul growth. It was strong enough to make men who hated the system from the bottom of their hearts shrink from discussing it with that strange fear that only the lodge is capable of inspiring;—to strike the whole community with a kind of moral paralysis, an unaccountable apathy, that is like a death chill at the heart of all freethought.

"What can the church be thinking of not to wake up to her duty in this matter of Masonry?" said Mark to me one day when he and Hannah had rode over for an hour's cozy chat and a cup of tea together. "Above all, what is the ministry thinking of not to see that fellowship with the lodge is spiritual adultery?—the very same sin for which God visited the Jewish church with such terrible jndgments. There is a blindness on this subject that is perfectly inscrutable. In many places the churches are so completely dominated and controlled by this foul spirit of secrecy that they are like a hive of bees riddled through and through with moths. There is no spiritnal life left in them."

"Well the fact is we reformers made a terrible blunder in the old Morgan days, and now our children and children's children must pay for it by fighting the battle all over again. We took it for granted that the lodge was dead and dropped all talking and writing on the subject. Meanwhile Masonry was striking hands with the slave power south of Mason and Dixon's line, and hatching up Odd-fellowship and Good Templarism and a host of other secret orders to keep the way open for its ultimate return to power. Now it is back in its old place with at least a hnndred avenues for mischief where it had one before."

"But we've got the old weapons to fight it with," returned Mark. "Thank God for that."

Rachel and Hannah had been indulging in some low-toned domestic confidences. Their attention was now attracted to the conversation and the latter remarked,

"I wonder that so many women, and some of them sisters in the church too, can stand in an apologetic attitude towards the lodge, when they know it excludes and treats with contempt the whole female sex."

"Well I had an experience on that point," answered Rachel, "at our last sewing meeting, Colonel Montfort's wife, Maria Perkins that was—you remember her Hannah—was telling about a Masonic grand ball that she attended somewhere, given in honor of the members' wives; and she stirred me up after a while to ask her how much of their charity fund she supposed went toward the supper and the music, and all the other fol-de-rols. I might as well have talked to a butterfly. There are always enough foolish women with about as much brain as you could get into a thimble, that don't care two straws for the moral side of the question. All they want is flattery, and admiration and a good time; and the lodge has found out that a little judicious expenditure of money in that direction pays even if Masonic widows and orphans don't get one per cent. dividend."

"And yet," answered the Elder's wife thoughtfully; "I believe that one Christian woman who through ignorance, or timidity, or the feeling that it is a subject in which she is not personally concerned gives the lodge as much as her silent support strengthens it more than a dozen of the frivolous, pleasure-seeking class. How many times I have heard the remark from good, praying sisters, 'O I don't know anything about Masonry, and I don't care to know anything about it.' They owe all their social elevation to Christ, but when a system of rites and ceremonies that sets him and his atoning work at nought is set up in our land they talk as though they actually prided themselves on their indifference to the whole thing."

"I can trnly say that the sorest wounds I ever received in this warfare has been in the house of my friends," said Mark. Many a time I have had to meet coldness and scorn from professing Christians for breaking my lodge oaths. They pretend to think it wicked to take snch obligations, yet with admirable consistency would keep a man bound in Satan's cable-tow forever, rather than praise the power of God in setting him free."

"I suppose Colonel Montfort is a member of the lodge here," inquired Hannah. "I think I remember hearing that his war record wasn't very good—tarnished by charges of dishonest use of government money or something of the kind."

"That is not a Masonic sin," I answered. "He only cheated poor soldiers. Colonel Montfort has plenty of 'worthy brothers' in the lodge guilty of equal or greater transgressions that ought to send them to State's prison, and would if the laws were enforced as they ought to be. But these men understand the requirements of Masonry better than the Master of the lodge, Anson Lovejoy, who is the most honest Mason I ever knew next to my grandfather. In spite of the fact that I am a renegade and perjured and altogether a reprobate, Masonically considered, he has unbosomed his perplexities to me pretty freely at one time and another. And I really pity the man. He don't rule; he fills the chair, but these men, especially Montfort and Jervish are the real Masters of the lodge. I'll tell you one thing just for illustration. He was initiating a candidate who hesitated at a certain part of the oath, and so he preceeded to satisfy his perplexed conscience by explaining that it only obliged him to help a brother in misfortune but not by any means to shield him in crime. Montfort and Jervish took exceptions to what he said in open lodge—a thing that Masonically speaking, they had no business to do; for according to all the statutes of Masonry the Master's word shall be law in the lodge. And ever since that affair happened his position has been anything but agreeable. He considers them as dangerous men, and they dispute and defy his authority at every turn."

"I wonder he don't resign," said Mark.

"He has wanted to, but the difficulty of uniting under anybody else makes them unwilling to accept his resignation; and the perplexity of choosing a new Master of the lodge might tend under present circumstances to divide or break it up altogether. You see he has a splendid theory of Masonry, and like most theorists he is willing to sacrifice considerable for it. He is naturally high spirited, but he pockets all these affronts and indignities in the hope that he may finally work such a moral revolution in the lodge that unworthy members will be no longer admitted, and the institution become what he claims it should be—simply a moral and benevolent one."

"I nnderstand," said Mark, with a slight smile. "Hercules and the Augean stables over again. But Hercules had to stand outside when he let on the purifying stream, otherwise he would have stood an excellent chance to get smothered."

—The Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows for the U. S., meeting in Baltimore last September, rejected a proposition to admit to the order the civilized Indians in Indian Territory. The tribes had a narrow escape; let them be thankful.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited. E. D. Bailey, N. E. Sec.

Lodge and Dram-bar Hard Pushed.

Worcester, Mass., Dec., 18, 1882.

The city election, partially reported last week, has been a general topic of conversation since the returns were received. In Massachnsetts the law provides for submitting to the people at the elections the qnestion, "Shall licenses be granted for the the sale of intoxicating drinks," to which the answer "yes" or "no" may be deposited. The vote for license does not compel the aldermen to comply, bnt is an expression of the will of the people.

This last election is said to have been the most closely contested of any in the history of the city, and the vote polled was the largest ever polled at a municipal election. The returns gave S. E. Hildreth, the temperance candidate, a majority of 44, bnt the same returns showed a majority of 201 in favor of licensing saloons. Last year the majority for license was 367. A trick was discovered late in the day by which many were deceived. True to their nefarious methods, the saloon element, or individuals of the party, scattered tickets in the usual form but varied in the phraseology as follows: "Shall license be refused," etc. Persons would vote a ballot with "no" printed on it in the usual form supposing they were voting against licenses. A large number of such ballots were cast in all the wards, every one of which unquestionably was intended for a temperance ballot, but they were cast out by the counters. A petition according to law was presented asking for a recount, but it was refused on a technicality. Petitions, however, were granted for a recount in several wards, of the vote for mayor, but the result was favorable to Mr. Hildreth, increasing his majority to 187. The temperance people believe a recount would also have given them the majority on the no-license vote.

This result is certainly a great achievement in view of all the circumstances. Both daily papers of the city were in favor of licenses and by their reports of the temperance agitation they did what they could by misrepresentation to break up the movement. The opposition was well organized and marshalled all its strength, yet temperance gained a notable victory. Only a portion of the aldermen were voted on at this election, so that a majority will still favor granting licenses, bnt the number of licenses will unquestionably be greatly diminished, while there is reason to hope that all unlicensed saloons will be summarily dealt with and the traffic restricted to the narrowest limits possible under the circumstances.

The first of our Sunday evening meetings at Washburn Hall, under the renaissance, was held last evening. This is the beginning of a work which many confidently believe will work a revolution in the religious work of the city. The audience was quite large and the new order of things made a strong impression. There were ten or a dozen churches represented in the audience, among those who are interested in the movement for a reformation. The subject for remarks was the Scripture passage in Acts 17: 16-17: "Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry. Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met him." Brief remarks were made by eight different gentlemen, expounding the passage and making a practical and forcible application of it to our present circumstances. The speaking was excellent and produced a strong impression. The gentlemen speaking were: L. Q. Spaulding, Mr. Flint, Rufus Taft, S. A. Pratt, Mr. Davis, Mr. Bond, F. J. Dunham and Rev. H. T. Cheever. The expression of all the speakers was that something extraordinary must be done to meet the present exigency in religious work in the city. Meetings are to be held in the hall every Sunday evening and are to be free to all who are "like-minded." Arrangements have been made to visit the saloons, hotels and boarding houses every Sunday to invite non-church-goers to this meeting. Some of the best lay-workers in the city are being interested in this work and it gives exceeding good promise of being a great movement.

Since I have been preaching in Washburn Hall I was called to attend the funeral of a little boy. On going to the house I saw a three-link pin, the badge of an Odd-fellow, on the coat of the bereaved father. During the week I called on the family, by special request, to pray with them. A lady had showed the father one of my addresses on secret societies and he frankly alluded to it and to his connection with Odd-fellowship. The evening was spent in explaining to him the evils of ths order, and after prayer with the family I left. The young man has attended our services at the Hall every Sabbath since then and last night he made known his new-found joy. His conversion seems clear and genuine, and he says his wife also joins him in this new life. His is a case of one who snpposed that "living up to Odd-fellowship" was being a Christian. This he told me at his home. No doubt there are scores of young men enamored of these secret orders in this city who need to be warned that the lodge is not the church, nor its ritual Christian worship.

We expect to dedicate the new chapel in South Worcester the Sunday before New Year's day. It is my intention then to give a full account of this work for the information of those who watch in the distance.

All the indications which reach ns of the work in New England are hopeful. We have sent out more reform literature from here during the past month than during any preceding month. This certainly is a favorable token.

Headquarter Notes.

—A lady writes as follows: "A man in ——— who was both a Baptist and a Mason, died. The minister preached. I heard that he appeared ashamed. How noble it would have been if he had said, 'If you want a Masonic parade you must excuse me.' One man who did not wear his apron, being asked the reason answered, 'I was ashamed to wear it.'"

—Jonathan S. Perham of Vermont shows an appreciation of the necessity of State organizations and an understanding of what is necessary to have one. He says: "I will give $5 to help on a State meeting." If all the friends were as ready to respond before asked we should soon see Vermont fully equipped.

—"I pray for you and all the anti-secret lecturers. May great grace be upon you all. May all declare the whole truth in the love of it. The cause is a good one. I feel that it is owned of God. I am blessed in my feeble efforts to help it on." Such words from one who both prays and pays signify something.

—Writes one brother: "It is difficult to contend against the strong tide of popular opinion. I can praise the Lord for the encouragement he is giving his people. I rejoice in the success you are having in Worcester. I do believe that we are to see the success of Mt. Carmel in New England and throughout the whole world. May God hasten the time and give his servants strong faith. I do wish you could be spared to visit our State but I cannot urge it as I believe your whole time is needed at Worcester."

—The Boston Congregationalist, while the secular press is giving the public colnmn after column of Weed and Whittlesey on the infamies of Freemasonry, after mountainous labor, raises its hands to heaven and brings forth this, which might be ridiculous if it was not wicked:

"It is hardly worth while to discuss, after so long an interval, whether the Masons killed Morgan or not. The late Mr. Weed thought they did, but Major Ben Perley Poore thinks the Anti-masons supported Morgan in Smyrna until he died. Better drop the subject."

Better drop the subject! That's what the lodge votes every time. The New York Sun, whose morals would taint the sanctity of the Congregationalist, says Mr. Weed's testimony is strong enough to hang Morgan's murderers! Verily as Christ said "the publicans and harlots enter the kingdom of God before you."

REFORM NEWS.

From California.

Hopeful Work by the State Lecturer.

Co[illegible]wood, Shasta Co., Cal., Dec. 13, 1882.

Edi[illegible]ynosure:—It has been a long time since yonr readers have heard anything from me or from the work in this far off land. Perhaps the best reason that can be given for this is that there is so little of interest to report. A general apathy seems to pervade the minds of the people on the snbject of the anti-secret reform. Among the masses of worldlings we look for no encouragement, and the sad experience of the past has taught us the folly of looking to any of the popular churches of the land for aid, and when the few who claim to be reformers go back on their principles or at least fail to co-operate in efforts to advance the reform, the influence is rather depressing on the energies of one who has a mind to work.

I had planned an active campaign, but failing to secure co-operation where it was expected, I have done but little more than to try and meet my responsibilities as pastor of the little church at Woodland. Recently, following some of the members of the little band there to their new home in this section of the State, I have been doing some aggressive work with encouraging results. In connection with Rev. W. W. Stovall, a brother in the ministry and an earnest reformer, we have held a series of meetings that have resulted in great good to the community.

I have also been doing something in the way of lecturing at Anderson, a little village of a few hundred inhabitants. I had engaged the school-house for a couple of lectures, but secretism interposed and word was sent me that I could not have it. There was quite an interest, however, awakened in the community by the circulation of tracts and handbills and the citizens finally agreed to furnish a hall for two evenings with the nnderstanding that I should occupy it the first evening and that one-half of the time of the second evening should be occupied by a speaker appointed by the citizens in giving a reply. A fair audience greeted us the first evening and a lawyer of the town was there very busily taking notes, it was supposed preparatory to a reply.

The second evening came and with it an audience much larger than on the first; bnt when the defender of Masonry was called for he failed to respond, and I had it all my own way, while for nearly two honrs I gave them solid Anti-masonic facts and arguments. It was a decided victory for the truth. Quite a number of books were sold and tracts and pamphlets given away. Excellent attention was given and the best of order maintained though some of our friends feared a Masonic trap.

I have also given two lectures on Kimball Plain to good audiences. At the close of the second lecture an intelligent young man said to me, "I need money badly, but I wonld not have missed hearing these lectnres for twenty dollars." Qnite an amount of reading matter in the form of books and tracts has also been put in circnlation here and the light is spreading. I hope to be able to send you some snbscribers for the Cynosure soon. Am ready to respond to calls for lectures wherever expenses can be paid, bnt cannot go at my own charges.

Bro. Hinman Visits Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 20, 1882.

Dear Bro. K.—What Rome, Ephesus and Corinth were to the ancient world, these great cities of our land are to our vast domain. Here are the centers of population and power. In this great city Freemasonry, the modern Paganism, has erected its grandest of temples, and its overshadowing power reaches to every department of society.

It was in jnst such centers that Paul achieved his greatest victories. It was in Corinth, where Christ was most despised, that he was determined to "Know nothing bnt Christ and him crucified." We do well to follow the wise example,

CORRESPONDENCE.

Withdraw?

ARCADE, N. Y.

Through the Cynosure of December 14th, 1882, "A Separatist" asks seven questions refering to the subject indicated by this assumed name. We shall assume, possibly not to the satisfaction of the interrogator, that for all practical purposes, an answer to the following question will cover the ground;

If Christians find themselves connected with an association, under whatever name, formed by human contrivance, ostensibly for general Christian work, but which nevertheless by its silence or otherwise, permits, by its members, the open and known violation of God's law, is it their duty to withdraw from such body?

To the writer of this article it seems that a very ready, proper and convincing affirmative reply may be given in few words as quoted from the Christian's infallible guide book.

The same number of the paper that presents these questions by "Separatist," presents an article on Christmas which truthfully declares that "in religion all things are to be arranged by divine command." Such commands settling an affirmative answer to the question under consideration, lie conspicuously upon the pages of the Scriptures. 2 Cor. 6:14-17: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers;" "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate."

Rev. 18:4: "Come out of her (Babylon), my people." 2 Thes. 3:6: "Now we command you brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us." Thus the Scriptures show what is the thus saith the Lord, as a reply to the interrogation under consideration.

Another question closely allied with this, demanding earnest scrutiny, is that, whether or not iniquity inheres in the organizations themselves? The organizations which are formed by leading Christians, and to which, Christians of the rank and file unite themselves, are they "arranged by divine command?" If they are not, but, on the contrary, are germinated by an adverse power to the divine, they are exotics in the garden of the Lord. The Saviour says of such, "Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up."

A Good Local Meeting, and a Grand Tax Suit.

CLINTON HOLLOW, N. Y. Dec. 12, 1882.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last week I called a meeting and read E. D. Bailey's address at the Batavia Convention, also the unveiling ceremonies at the monument, likewise the oaths and penalties of Freemasonry, with all we could to show the truth of Masonry and what the system is doing to blight this fair land. Every thing went smoothly between myself and the fraternity up to this time. Now I am called no better than a thief by one. Another told I had tried three times to get into a Mason lodge. Another said if I wanted favors I would get them somewhere else than from Masons. But so terrible are the oaths people are slow to believe; but some say they would never hear a Masonic pastor preach again, if this is true. We are intending to have another meeting soon, and I want C. A. Blanchard's address at Batavia for that occasion if it is in print. So you see, Mr. Editor, I have not been sleeping since I came here from Russell Co., Kansas, last spring.

I wish to mention one incident that transpired before leaving there. In the spring of 1880, I asked the trustee if he had assessed the property of the three secret societies. He said, no, he had not thought of it; but said he would do so. He called on the officials and they would not give in the list for a long time, but after a letter came from the Attorney General of the State saying they were no better than others to pay taxes, they finally gave in the list; and then to find out whether or no they were benevolent societies or not they carried the matter to the District Court and the court decided they were no benevolent society as coming within the law. So the poor fellows have found out they have to pay their tax as others do. There is a great shaking among the dry bones of Freemasonry since Mr. Weed's dying testimony and my prayer is that secretism may soon hide its deformed head.

Our Mail.

Geo. Clark, Oberlin, O.:

"The hardest blow struck against the Baal-worship—organized fraud—immorality—blasphemy and murder of the Masonic lodge has fallen this year. God is against it and it must fall. Every family and reading room ought to have the Cynosure and Weed's pamphlet."

C. P. Walround, Ritchey, Mo.:

"We have an anti-secret meeting Saturday night, December 23d, 1882, and have engaged a preacher to lecture for us, and written to Bro. Glassford to come and work the degrees for us. Our anti-secret society is doing a good business."

A. Holt, Carthage, N. Y.:

"I am as anxious to have this reform extend all over our land as I ever was. Hope the time is not far distant when men of principle will fall into line."

J. W. Thompson, Peoria, Ill.:

"I have been opposed to secret societies from my youth."

Geo. H. Danforth, W. Monroe, N. Y.:

"I sympathize deeply with those dear men who are sacrificing all for Christ."

O. Johnson, Cedar Rapids, Iowa:

"I am a member of the Free Methodist church engaged in the work as an evangelist. I meet with a good deal of opposition from the lodge. I have belonged to two secret orders but the Son has set me free. I have been threatened in different ways; even to the taking of my life. The lodge has a strong hold in this city. Satan's seat is here in the form of secret societies. May the good Lord tear down the altars of Baal. I am in this war for right and truth."

Daniel Countryman, Rochelle, Ill.:

"I received from President C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton College, the Thurlow Weed pamphlet containing his letter to the Batavia Anti-masonic Convention at the time of the unveiling of the Morgan monument. Murder will out. It was out at the time of the abduction and murder of Captain William Morgan when all honest Masons such as President Finney and thousands of other Masons rushed forward like doves to the windows to renounce Masonry. Well the late Thurlow Weed of New York has only more fully confirmed among his last words of the truthfulness of the abduction and murder of Morgan by the Masons. If they will not hear such men as President Finney and Weed they would not hear though one rose from the dead."

C. Reynolds, who is travelling, writes from Lundy's Lane Erie Co. Pa.:

"Had the privilege of preaching once in my travels where the pastor was a Mason and at another place an Odd-fellow at another a U. B. church where I know an interest was awakened to take higher ground in coming out and being more separate from Baal worship. * * Shall probably journey some hundreds of miles yet and shall do all I can to advance the interest of the National Christian Association for I believe it to be the cause of Christ."

We are always glad to hear from Bro. Reynolds.

Thos. W. Cooper, Winfield, Iowa;

"I have made up my mind to renounce and denounce the infamous institution, while I have a voice to proclaim the truth or a hand to guide the pen."

——— Jamesport, Mo.:

"The exposition you publish (I. O. O. F.) is correct and no mistake. I have filled every station in the Lodge and use your exposition in giving your work to the lodge and I know it to be correct. But I am an Odd-fellow no more only as nature may make me. It is wicked, silly and extremely foolish for any one to practice."

E. S. Livingston, Reynoldsburg, O., eighty years old will try to get some subscribers. He writes:

"I lived in New York at the time Morgan was taken away. Have been Anti-masonic ever since."

T. R. Sheldon, Richmond, Ill.:

"Will die without a friend before I will give up the cause of truth. The principles set forth in your paper are good and will prevail."

The House that Rum Built.

The almshouse: This is the house that rum built.

The drunkard: This is the beast that lives in the house that rum built.

Appetite: This the chain that binds the beast that lives in the house that rum built.

Intoxicating drink: This is the serpent in flowery guise, with the artful tongue and dazzling eyes, that welds the chain that binds the beast that lives in the house that rum built.

The rumseller: This is the monster who holds the rein over the serpent who welds the chain that binds the beast in cruel pain that lives in the house that rum built.—Happy Pilgrim.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON I January 7, 1883.—THE ASCENDING LORD.—Acts 1:1-14.

(1) The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach. (2) Until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen: (3) To whom also he showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God: (4) And being assembled together with them, commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me. (5) For John truly baptized with water: but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence. (6) When they therefore were come together they asked of him saying, Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? (7) And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power. (8) But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth. (9) And when he had spoken these things while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. (10) And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel: (11) Which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. (12) Then returned they unto Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, which is from Jerusalem a Sabbath day's journey. (13) And when they were come in they went up into an upper room, where abode both Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James the son of Alpheus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James. (14) These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And when he had spoken these things while they beheld, he was taken up.—Acts 1:9.

Contemporary Events. The Roman Empire held sway over most of the known world, thus opening the way by her conquests for the greater conquests of the Gospel. The Jews were scattered everywhere, taking with them the Bible with its prophecies and religious ritual, which Christ came to fulfill, thus preparing the way for the Gospel. According to Labberton, in his Outlines of History, this was an age of remarkable intellectual activity; and according to Lecky (Hist. of European Morals), there was a general disintegration of the old religions, a decline in morals, and yet a thirst for some belief, all of which caused men to appreciate the great remedy Christianity was bringing them.

Statistics of the Roman Empire. In order to understand the material on which Christianity had to work, we give the best statistics available, after consulting the best authorities and the persons most acquainted with the facts. Lyman's Tables give the population of the Roman Empire at the time of Christ as 120,000,000, of which 60,000,000 were slaves, 40,000,000 were tributaries and freedmen, and only 20,000,000 were full citizens, or one-sixth of the population. The army numbered 400,000, and the navy 50,000 men. Milman gives the population of Jerusalem at 2,550,000, and of Rome, by the census of A. D. 48, at 5,984,000. Merrill in Galilee in the time of Christ, thinks that the population of Palestine was about 6,000,000, and of Galilee 2,000,000.—Peloubet.

NOTES.

Of all that Jesus began both to do and to teach. From the arrangement of these words in the original Greek, two things are plain which escape the English reader: First, there is an emphasis on the verb "began;" secondly, there is none on the word "Jesus." The contrast is not that the former treatise related what Jesus began, and this relates what some other person or person continued; but it is that the former treatise related what Jesus began to do and to teach; and this relates what he, the same Jesus, continued to do and to teach.—Alford.

By many infallible proofs. The Greek word, translated by "infallible proofs," occurs here only in the New Testament. It is used frequently by Plato and Aristotle, and denotes "the strongest proofs of which a subject is capable," "an irresistible proof." Bela renders it well, certissimis signis. The irresistible, incontrovertible proofs which Jesus gave to his disciples of his resurrection, such as talking with them, eating with them, walking with them, inviting them to look at and to touch his hands, his feet, his side, with the still visible print of the nails and the scar of the spear, are described in Luke 24:36-48; Mark 16:14; John 20:19, 29; 21. Comp. also John, First Epistle, 1:1, 2.—Schaff.

Commanded them (the apostles) not to depart from Jerusalem. The reasons appear to be: (1) Because of the prophecy (Is. 2:3). (2) Because there would be the greatest assembly of persons to witness this great miracle and to be worked upon by it. (3) Because it was most fit that this great work of Christ's power should be there displayed where had been his greatest humiliation: that those who were not convinced by the resurrection might be convinced by this miraculous gift of the Holy Ghost.—Lightfoot. (4) It would be at the next great festival after the crucifixion, when strangers from all parts of the world would be gathered at Jerusalem, who would carry back the tidings of that manifestation into all lands; and (5) that the Christian law might go forth from Mount Zion (Isa. 2:3; Mic. 4:2), and to show its harmony with the Levitical dispensation.—Bible Reader's Com.

It is not for you to know the times or the seasons. It would be impossible for them to know, even if he should tell them. They were not yet in a position to see the truth. The fall of Jerusalem and the Mosaic ritual would have staggered their faith. They had too many prejudices, they had too narrow a view, to yet understand the progress and growth of the kingdom of God, and the method in which it could be restored. It would be but pictures to the blind, and music to the deaf.—P. Observe that this is fatal to all attempts to foretell the time of Christ's second coming, or even the definite signs of that second coming. But Christ does not merely declare their ignorance of the time of his own second coming! The times are the succession of ages, greater or less in length, over which the history of the church should extend, before the end comes; the seasons are the successive phases of development, through and by means of which it would grow to its development. It is not in man either to know the length of time, or to understand beforehand the necessary processes of growth; it is his simply to perform the duty allotted to him, leaving the great movement of which he is a part, and to which he contributes, to be unfolded by God. He cannot read the book till God has unrolled it.

But ye shall receive power. Comp. Luke 24:49; Rom. 15:13, 19; 1 Cor. 2:4; 2 Cor. 12:9; Phil. 3:10; 1 Thes. 1:5. These references will give the student an idea of the meaning of Christ's promise. It includes (1) the power of working miracles; (2) personal, moral, and spiritual power in the conflicts and temptations of life, and especially in bearing suffering and persecution for Christ's sake; (3) power in the ministry of the word beyond that which belongs to human eloquence and wisdom, or even to the mere natural adaptation of the truth to human wants.—Abbott.

(1) The ascension is intimated by the Old Testament writers (Psalms 24:7-10; 110:1; 68:18; with Ephes. 4:7, 8; Lev. 16:15, with Heb. 9:7-12;) (2) and by Christ (John 6:62; 7:33; 20:17;) (3) it is referred to by the apostles as a fact well recognized in the Christian church (Ephes. 1:20; Heb. 10:12; 1 Pet. 3:22;) (4) it is an almost necessary sequel of the resurrection, since after the resurrection Christ must either have ascended into heaven, or led a hidden life, and subsequently died a natural death. In respect to the body with which he ascended, it is easy to conjecture and impossible to know with assurance; but it is reasonable to suppose that the change which Paul declared will be wrought in the bodies of his saints at the last day before their ascension (1 Cor. 15:51-54), was wrought in Christ's earthly body, which I believe to have been, prior to the ascension, unchanged (Luke 24:39; John 20:27.)—Abbott.

Shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go. Not merely, As surely as he has departed, so surely will he return, but, In the manner in which he has departed he will return. The second coming of Christ, then, will not be like his first coming, obscure, and, as it were, in concealment. He will come in power and glory, on the clouds, and with his holy angels with him (Matt. 24:30, 31; 26:64; Rev. 6:13-17.)—Abbott.

Go to Work.

One of the best remedies for three-fourths of the ills which flesh is heir to, is good, honest, hard work. Many a sick man is cured by hard work, under the more palateable name of "exercise;" and many others never would have been sick, had they kept about their daily toils as they should. Hard, steady work is the path to recovery from vices and their results. There is little hope of reformation for any man who will not work; there is great encouragement to expect the reformation of any man who may have gone astray, if he is only ready to and willing to work! Hard work tames hot blood, subdues passion, brings appetite under control, steadies the nerves, and calms the temper, and in a word, helps man to be what God intended that he should be.

The remedy for a large proportion of the financial troubles that surround us, lies in the same direction. A great many live at their ease, and hire other people to perform their work for them, until servants have grown rich and their masters have become poor. Now let the idlers go to work themselves, exercise their flabby muscles, put their dyspeptic stomachs in working order, and prove the truth of that Scripture which informs them that "the sleep of a laboring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much."

Steady, industrious, hard work, joined with thrift, economy and wise management, liquidates debt, removes mortgages, restores credit, increases self-respect, improves health, and makes a man feel as if he had a right and a place in the Lord's world.

Go to work! If not for yourself, for some one else. If you cannot get pay, work for nothing. Help some one who is in distress. Relieve the sick. Do what your hand findeth to do. You may find that the poorest paying jobs in the end bring the greatest rewards. And remember, when you work, there is one Master who is over all, and he rewards the services for which men neglect to pay, and gives his inheritance at last to those who patiently fulfill his will.—The Safeguard.

Tea Drinking.

The London Lancet quotes Dr. Arlinge, one of the Pottery Inspectors, as saying "that a portion of the reforming zeal which keeps up such a fierce and bitter agitation against intoxicating drinks, might advantageously be diverted to the repression of the very serious evil of tea-tippling among the poorer classes. Tea, in anything beyond moderate quantities, is as distinctly a narcotic poison as is opium or alcohol. It is capable of ruining the digestion, of enfeebling and disordering the heart's action, and of generally shattering the nerves. And it must be remembered that not merely is it a question of narcotic excess, but the enormous quantity of hot water which tea-bibbers necessarily take is exceedingly prejudicial both to digestion and nutrition. Our teetotal reformers have overlooked, and even to no small extent encouraged, a form of animal indulgence which is as distinctly sensual, extravagant, and pernicious, as any beer-swilling, or gin-drinking in the world."

American Party Papers.

These papers represent and seek to promote the principles of the American Party. Four of them are now published as follows:

New England American, by E. D. Bailey, 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass.;

Illinois American, by Ezra A. Cook, 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.;

Michigan American, by Elder H. A. Day, Coldwater, Mich.;

Iowa American, by N. Bourne, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The Indiana American has been voted by the State Association; Elder I. W. Lowman, Goshen, Ind., editor.

These papers are published monthly and are uniform in size and in price as follows:

TERMS, POST-PAID:

Single copies, per year							25 cents.
5 copies to one address 1 year							$ 1.00
12	"	"	or 9 to	9 addresses	1 year		2.00
50	"	"	" 40 "	40	"	"	7.00
150	"	"	" 100 "	100	"	"	15.00

Most of the matter in these papers is also used in the Cynosure and the great object in starting them is to afford friends an extremely efficient and cheap way of introducing and promoting this reform. A few friends could club in together and by raising $15.00 per year, either have the paper sent directly to 100 different, persons or have one hundred and fifty copies sent monthly for distribution.

The influence of these papers for good, when received regularly by 100 families in any neighborhood, can scarcely be overestimated.

REFORM NOTE-PAPER AND ENVELOPES.

As a needed means of spreading the truth regarding secrecy, a collection of the utterances of Scripture and various noted statesmen and ministers has been prepared and printed in tasteful form at the top of note-paper and on both sides of envelopes (the matter on the paper being entirely different from that on the envelopes.) A blank line for date is also printed in. The envelopes can be furnished either white or colored; both envelopes and paper being of the ordinary size and of good quality

PRICES:

No. 5 Envelopes, 3x5½ inches, $4 per 1000; postpaid, 80 cents per 100
Note Paper, 5½x8½ " $3 " " 40 " "
The matter contained on this Stationery is pithy and forcible, and will do good work. Use it.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1882.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

Who Defeated St. John?

OLATHE, Kan., Dec. 18, 1882.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I started for Kansas, determined to get the correct answer to this question, not from curiosity, but for the instruction of our American party, that we may know, accurately, what causes are producing political effects in this country; and I was resolved not to be deceived or to deceive others as to who and what defeated St. John. I began to ask this question as soon as the November elections were over, and have asked it from every one whose opinion was worth asking, from my own table to this town, where the Governor lives; and I am prepared to report.

The first answer I have uniformly received is, "Well, I don't know!" Even his law partner, Mayor Pickering, of Olathe, could give me no light, except that "the liquor party worked with fearful energy and means, and there was no end to the falsehoods circulated against him."

But the liquor party, as such, did not, could not defeat him. Prohibition was carried in the State by a round number of 92,000 votes (I will get and send the official votes), and St. John received some 8,000 or 9,000 votes LESS THAN PROHIBITION. Now I have seen on the cars several who voted for St. John twice when he was elected, but who voted against him this time. And not one of all I have seen has changed his mind on prohibition! He was defeated, then, by the vote of prohibitionists who were influeneed by some other than the liquor power.

WHAT IS THAT POWER?

The answers given are various. A small-souled man, back in the country, said:

"I voted agin 'im."

"Why?" I asked.

"I believe St. John got a haul of the whisky money that was raised." And so this man thought St. John was bribed to defeat himself, and that by brewers' money! Some shrewd man had put this idea into this ignorant, avaricious man's head.

Two gentlemanly and fair men voted against him, because they said they did not like St. John's self-conceit, or the third term. They said he was too confident of being re-elected, and they did not believe in one man ruling the State. But what if he had not been self-confident? Would he have been elected if he had doubted or despaired for himself?

Several have said, "St. John defeated himself, by not executing the liquor law." "He had power to turn out the prosecuting attorneys. Why didn't he turn out those in Topeka, the State capital, and imprison the saloon-keepers?" This answer, like all the rest, betrays by its cunning its lodge origin. "St. John defeated himself," forsooth, because he was not a sincere prohibitionist! This is folly! When, amidst war and rebellion, Lincoln suspended the habeas corpus, the Democrats howled, "He's a dictator. He'll make us all slaves." If St. John had gone to jailing the liquor men, ten thousand Americans, jealous for human rights as we all are, would have cursed him for a cruel tyrant, and a hundred thousand women would have shrieked "Amen." Why, two sensible men, prohibitionists, on the cars, said to me, "I voted for him twice, but I voted against him this time because I do not believe in the State being governed by one man." What would multitudes have said, had the Governor gone to packing temperance juries, and turning out attorneys in Topeka?

Now, then, Who defeated St. John? I answer, I am thoroughly satisfied that Freemasons defeated him, and give here not the reasons, but chief sketches of reasons for my belief.

1. A Mason here in Olathe said to Mr. Curtis, "St. John ain't much of a Mason." Mr. Curtis replied, "Isn't he as much of a Mason as you are?" "No, indeed," was the Mason's answer. This proves the main point. The lodge distrusts St. John. Masons had, no doubt, expected appointments for grips and did not get them, and worked, as Masons only can, by lies and specious arguments to defeat him all over the State.

2. Carefully consider the reasons given above for voting against him, and they all bear the Masonic ear-mark. They are cunning reasons given by cunning men to prejudice honest voters.

3. St. John is defeated, and no one knows who did it; not even Mayor Pickering, his law partner. Now there is an old maxim—"If the heifer be dead, and the butcher stands by with his knife bloody, is there any doubt who killed the heifer?" Now the lodge here (which runs through the State) stands by St. John's defeat with its "knife bloody."

4. "Then why should not so wide a fact leak out?" I answer: Masons keep secrets from Masons, even when they drive them to the polls like flocks of sheep. If Albert Pike and the Sovereign Inspector General had come to distrust St. John, they would, of course, like all assassins, "strike, but conceal the hand." This is exactly what is done here. The hand is concealed, and the author and leader of prohibition has been defeated by prohibitionists!

5. It is not seen by American voters to-day, who defeated John Quincy Adams in 1828. They only know that Jackson, his Secretary Livingston, and his Mexican Minister Poinsett, were Masons; and Adams was dropped at the end of one term, though all the former Presidents but one had two, and Adams was defeated by the North, not because of his Anti-masonry, (the North was Anti-masonic), but because, like St. John, he was too "self-reliant," and what not, though the administration of both these men was and is popular.

6. Every lodge triumph is just like this.

Nicholas Longworth said to me of the Know-Nothings (who were Masons under an alias): "We have a power here which carries all our elections, and no one knows who does it till the election is over." So precisely is it now.

7. We saw that Ben. Butler's election in Massachusetts, like this in Kansas vs. St. John, was a "still hunt." Butler made no speeches, and lodge liquor and money elected him. Thousands of good honest men, too, voted for him. Now then

WHAT IS TO BE DONE?

I answer: Just what Thurlow Weed did when he saw that the lodge defeated the Rochester treasurer and put in its own creature, viz., accept their lead. TAKE THIS QUESTION INTO POLITICS! and it will put St. John into the Presidential chair in 1888, as it would have put in Seward in 1860, had the people known that the lodge was defeating him. On a straight issue the lodge is to-day unpopular, and will be found so in 1888.

I last night, here in Olathe, addressed an audience which packed the Wesleyan church like sheep wedged in a stable. The church is of good size. I speak on politics to-night. The lodge defeated Pomeroy and put Ingalls (a Mason) in his place. Pomeroy is with us and St. John must be. TAKE THE QUESTION TO THE POLLS.

The State Convention.

EMPORIA, Kan., Dec. 20, 1882.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Our Convention opened finely, last evening in the Congregational Church, (Dr. Cordley's), a magnificent and beautiful audience room, the largest in the city. Dr. McMillan, United Presbyterian, of Olathe, temporarily took the chair. Rev. Mr. Hibbard, Free Methodist, made a neat and sweet speech of welcome, to which Dr. McMillan replied in a calm, clear, Scotch style.

But "The best of all is God is with us;" as the dying Wesley said. Rev. Mr. Loggan, United Brethren, opened the season of prayer. He was at Aurora, all the way from Plattsmouth. Mr. Carpenter said to me, when Loggan closed his speech, "Brother Blanchard, these men are giants." But we were not. It was the Spirit of God gave us utterance, and we spake with other tongues than our own.

Two men last night made fools of themselves, or rather Satan made fools of them. An Episcopal minister, who is not a successor of the Apostles, and a lawyer named Buck, who is called "Judge," wanted to ask questions, and the question, "Are you a Mason?"

I said, "The question is irrelevant."

"I will show that it is relevant," he vociferated.

As he had no right to speak there without our leave, I instantly moved that he have leave to speak. "I don't want to speak," said he.

"Then sit down," I replied.

At the close of our meeting, two fine young men, students of the Normal school here, came and invited me to visit and address the students, as visitors are welcome there. It is raining or I would go up this morning.

Our good brother Collins, who so ably presided at the Monument Convention, Batavia, came to greet us at the close of our meeting. As I expected as much to meet his ghost, I fairly did not know him. His excellent wife is with him touching with skillful fingers the reporters and other heart-strings of the Convention.

The bell has just rung and I must go to the meeting. I have kept up asking, "Who and what defeated St. John?" There is but one true answer: Many hated to have him allow himself to be persuaded to run a third time. But those men generally if not universally voted for him. They are the men of principle. He was defeated by weak prohibitionists who were gulled and deceived by the cunning minions of the lodge. His defeat, I predict, will prove the Bull Run of prohibition.

If St. John had not feared no other governor would carry out the liquor law, he would not have run. It was a mistake, but he is a noble man.

FOREFATHERS DAY,
DEC. 22d, 1882.

The Convention closed last night. I have never seen a happier set of people in a revival of religion. "They were all filled with joy and the Holy Ghost." The preponderance of the working force of the convention was Scotch Presbyterians, but the Free Methodist pastor, Rev. Mr Hibbard, and his people, aided much, and the good brother Loggan, whom I had not met since the first Aurora meeting in October, 1867, with his good wife, were here, all the same, only with their heads a little whitened, as they drew nearer heaven, by the light which beams from the opening gates as "Friend after friend depart."

Our good brother Worrell astonished us by one of the cleanest, ablest and best speeches of the occasion. He compared those who are chirping about St. John's defeat, "Third Term," "Third Term!" etc., etc., to birds limping off, and uttering cries to hide the really important thing, their nest. His theory of the Governor's defeat, is that St. John, being only a Mason of low degree, has been distrusted and set aside by the "Sovereign Inspectors" in favor of one who will serve their purposes better. I have not a remaining doubt but Mr. Worrell's theory is the true one. He said the lodge may shout "hurrah for prohibition" again when they can make by it, and thus keep the temperance cause wavering, as indeed it has done throughout the country; as the devil in the Phillipian damsel shouted for Paul and Silas to mix with and spoil the movement. We shall see what we shall see.

This morning I am invited to speak to the normal students here. I then go to Lyndon, Osage county, and after Sabbath, proceed to speak at North Cedar with our excellent Bro. Milligan. Rev. Mr. McMillan, of Olathe, will send a full official synopsis of proceeding soon.

Yours in Christ, J. BLANCHARD.

—It is worthy of remark that the command eries of Knight Templar Freemasons of Chicago in electing their officers lately, have so far as we have observed, discarded the Reverend figure-heads, Thomas, Fallows, Perry, Locke, Lorimer, etc., and put in ordinary sinners from the rank and file.

—Of the ten Baptist "divinity colleges" or theological institutes in Great Britain only four are of the regular or strict communion type, namely—the three in Wales and that in Manchester, England.

College Outbreaks.

There seems to be an epidemic of insubordination among our colleges. At Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., a base ball game ended in the expulsion of two Juniors, when the two upper classes threatened to leave unless the young men were reinstated, and finally the whole college took sides in the attempt to coerce the faculty. No settlement is reported.

Adelbert College, Cleveland, (the old Western Reserve College so long located at Hudson, O.) is afflicted in much the same way. The faculty declaring against one or two insubordinates the students in a body went into rebellion. A peace has been patched up after some days of disorder.

In Illinois the "State Oratorical Association," got up by several institutions for competition in elocutionary skill, is at the bottom of jealousy and revolt without end. A few weeks ago a Monmouth student having been successful, the desire of his comrades to give him an ovation led them into excesses of temper which they will always regret. At one time the plague of sedition seemed to have fastened upon the whole body of students, but the firmness of President McMichael prevailed in restoring order. The Chicago University students belong to the same "Oratorical Association." A few days ago several of them returned from a meeting of the body, one threatening to shoot another. Several rows resulted, and President Anderson was insulted in chapel by one of his Seniors, and the young blood actually drew a revolver upon his teacher when called aside for an interview. The ruffian was pinned to the wall and disarmed and is now settling his little by-play in the courts.

The agency of the college fraternities in fomenting these troubles does not of course openly appear. That it is largely responsible we do not doubt. Match games of ball as well as match games of oratory between colleges are entirely aside from the legitimate work of a student. This "Oratorical Association" is already a stench in the nostrils of the Illinois faculties; controlled by seditious minds, it is made the occasion of drunken sprees and produces general demoralization among a large class of students. These outbreaks should suggest to the churches and to praying parents that our institutions of learning should be continually remembered before God. One day of prayer for them in a year is well, but it must be supplemented by many closet hours and a wise use of every means that shall make our colleges centers of spiritual as well as intellectual power.

--Our thanks to Bro. E. B. Palmer of Batavia, N. Y., for a copy of the Progressive Batavian with a fine picture of the immense works of the Johnston Harvester Company just erected in that city just west of the cemetery where the Morgan monument stands. The fine offices of the company are in the middle of the block on the opposite side of the street from the monument. The Morgan memorial thus occupies a thronged corner—the N. Y. Central tracks on the south, the Harvester works on the west.

—It is reported that early last May Ephraim Sherman Durfee, aged 97, died in Oshkosh, Wis. His death is noted for no remarkable fact except as he was once associated with Captain Wm. Morgan. He was, it is alleged, master of the lodge in Rochester, N. Y., in 1828 (?) and conferred the degrees upon Morgan. He was compelled to leave the country during the excitement that followed Morgan's death. How much of the story is true is left to conjecture, but as Morgan was murdered two years before the date above given, there is a discrepancy that "clouds its title" to truth.

—When Rob. Morris was lecturing in Iowa on the beauties of the Hiramite religion, as he saw them, he admitted only Master Masons to some of his meetings, and some of them not being very strongly bound by the speaker's obligation of secrecy, revealed that Morris advised these Master Masons to join the churches in as large numbers as possible, so as to be able to control them. Will the United Brethren churches take note of this? This is the same Rob. Morris who could whine as piously as a mendicant friar when Father Taylor put the lash of truth upon his back, and yet call Finney and Bernard renegades and liars in the same breath!

—One G.W. Hughey, "D.D.," who signs himself "Past-Grand Worthy Patriarch, Sons of Temperance," wants to start a temperance paper in St. Louis. He expects his secret-worship brethren will all help, and one endorsement is from John D. Vincil, pastor of Marvin Chapel, M. E. church, South, who is Grand Secretary of the Missouri Grand Lodge of Freemasons, who lately told a reporter that Mr. Weed's letter was "a slander," the Morgan expose "silly," other expositions "written by men wholly ignorant" of what they were doing, and the Morgan excitement got up for political purposes only.

Weed against the Lodge.

The interest in the lodge murder of Morgan aroused by Mr. Weed's letter is not yet lost, though the all-absorbing holiday season is upon us. Perhaps the most wonderful corroborating testimony comes from California. On the 7th of December the Record-Union of Sacramento, published the following letter from the sons of the Dr. Strong who attended the second inquest held upon the body washed up at Oak Orchard Creek, and whose testimony, with that of Mrs. Morgan, S. D. Greene and others, identified it beyond doubt as that of Morgan. The comment of the editor follows:

The Morgan Mystery.

EDS. RECORD-UNION:—In your paper some days since a floating paragraph appeared stating that William Morgan was seen years after his abduction and the noted Anti-masonic excitement of 1826, in Asia Minor, and that he died there. This is all pure fiction. The facts in this celebrated case are as stated in the article written by Hon. Frederick Whittlesey, of Rochester, who died in 1851, and which is just published (December 2d) by the Rochester Union and Advertiser. A telegraphic synopsis you have in your paper of the 4th. As a matter of history the full article is well worthy of publication. William Morgan was an inmate of our father's family in Rochester for some time during the winter season preceding his abduction. He believed himself to be under surveillance at this time by the Masonic fraternity, in consequence of his reputed writings in the exposure of Masonry. His eyes became seriously inflamed from his close application in writing this expose and he was kept closely housed as a patient of our father's who was a practicing physician, and was employed in the treatment of his eyes. We recollect him well, with his large, green blinds, and his not being permitted to come to the light. During his residence with us he had a tooth extracted, which was preserved by his wife. His teeth were very peculiar, being all well formed and all double in both the upper and lower jaws. His abduction occured in September, 1826. In the following summer or fall a body was discovered near the mouth of Oak Orchard Creek, very much decayed, and evidently having been in the water of Lake Ontario for many months. It was generally thought at the time that this was the body of Wm. Morgan, and great efforts were being made at the investigation to prove it to be the body of some other person. Our father and Mrs. Morgan were summoned to the inquest. The tooth was produced in evidence, and the peculiar formation of the teeth of Morgan stated by Mrs. Morgan and our father. The jaw of the corpse fully answered to the description, and the tooth suited the vacancy as described. And to the mind of Mrs. Morgan and our father, as well as to disinterested parties, it was fully established that this was the identical body of Wm. Morgan. As this is a link in the chain of evidence of the Morgan mystery, we present it to you forpublication.

ALBERT AND W. R. STRONG.

COMMENTS OF THE UNION.

These gentlemen, who were in a position to know all that ever was known about the Morgan abduction show that the identification of the body which was at the time alleged to have been that of Morgan, was far more complete than has generally been supposed. Morgan had double teeth all through both jaws; a peculiarity which perhaps does not occur once in a million times. He had had one of his teeth drawn shortly before his disappearance, and his wife had kept this tooth. When the body was found, eight or nine months afterwards, it was in so advanced a stage of decomposition that the features were not recognizable; but the corpse was found to have double teeth all through both jaws, and moreover there was a gap in them both which Morgan's extracted tooth neatly filled. It seems to us that this was as complete an identification as was possible, not only under these, but under any circumstances. For whereas the features of a face may be altered by death and immersion so that even the nearest relations have sometimes been misled, it is scarcely conceivable that such a circumstance as the finding of the body of another man with the same peculiar teeth, and the same gap in them, should have occurred. In short after that piece of evidence we should say that reasonable doubt as to the identity of the body found, with Morgan, was out of the question.

Reform News.

and here, as it were from the heart of the nation, send out the living waters of truth which are for its healing. It is not impracticable. Nothing is impracticable that is essential to the accomplishment of God's great work on earth. Difficulties there doubtless are, but there are also wonderful facilities.

I came to this city on Saturday last and was most kindly received by Rev. T. P. Stevenson, editor of the Christian Statesman, with whose family I had a most pleasant stay till Tuesday morning. On Sabbath evening I spoke in the 17th Street Reformed Presbyterian church to quite a full congregation. Notice had been sent to several other churches and there was most excellent attention to a discourse on the relation of the secret orders to the Christian religion. The congregation attested their sincerity by a liberal collection.

On Monday morning I visited the meeting of the United Presbyterian ministers at the office of the Christian Instructor. I was invited to make statements of the object and work of the N. C. A., and a committee was appointed to consider what action should be taken and report in a week. Since then I have visited quite a number of ministers (mostly Reformed Presbyterians, N. S.) who listened kindly to what I said and expressed much interest in our reform. Some of them have promised to bring the subject before their sessions and if practicable have a public discussion.

Last night I attended a meeting of the Free Methodists at their house of worship on Master St., and found warm sympathy with my work. It is proposed to have as many meetings as practicable in different parts of the city and to then have a general meeting.

It is a great work to canvass this great city. I can work but slowly, but in view of our work in Washington, both present and prospective, it seems important that these neighboring cities should also be visited in the interest of our reform. I expect to go to Chambersburg, Pa., on the 30th, God willing. May the Lord direct my steps. Yours for Christ, H. H. HINMAN.

From the Michigan Secretary.

Brethren in Michigan, I expect to spend the winter preaching and lecturing. We intend immediately to organize a county Anti-masonic Association in this (Oakland) county. I think that local associations should be formed throughout the State. I hope that all who are willing to assist in organizing in this county will at once report by mail to me or to Dr. L. I. Wicker, Holly, Mich. Persons in adjacent counties are requested to co-operate with us.

If we have but little interest in this very important work, let us pray ourselves alive. Let us feel for lost men as Christ felt for us, then act with the glory of God and eternity in view.

As soon as possible, a practicable meeting will be called. A. H. SPRINGSTEIN,

Sec. State Association.

HOME CIRCLE.

Watching.--Mark 13:33.

BY MRS. HELEN E. BROWN.

I'm watching for my Lord;
I know not when he'll come
To take me to his glorious rest,
His own dellghtful home.

I lift my eyes at dawn,
And think, Before the night
Perhaps he will translate my soul
Where it is ever light.

Or as I lay me down
To sleep, when day is done,
I say, Before the morning break,
May rise my soul's sweet Sun,

I try to do my work
Each day as 'twere my last;
To have my house in order when
He sounds the trumpet blast.

I do not dread the way;
I know he loves his own,
And he himself will come for me—
I shall not go alone.

If sudden accident,
Or sickness sharp and brief,
Shall be his messengers, he'll haste
And bring me quick relief.

For, precious in his sight,
He tells us, is the death
Of every saint; how easy, then,
To yield to him our breath!

So come, my Lord! I cry;
Dear Jesus, quickly come!
I'm longing to behold thy face!
Longing to be at home!

A Model Princess.

Something new under the sun comes to us from across the water. It is not from the busy capital and haunts of the central European countries, but from far-off Lapland. The family of Bernadotte, of Sweden—the only one of all Napoleon's generals whom he placed upon a throne, who stayed there after the Vienna Congress—has always taken a profound interest in the Scandinavia to which they were transplanted from their homes in the southern border-land between France and Spain. This has been the ground of their hold on the people. The late King Carl, of Sweden, ransacked the old Norse legends, and has done as much as Tegner himself to bring to life the early mythical history of the Scandinavians. But now we have a new factor in this interest of the Bernadotte family in their adopted country. ThePrincess Eugenie, sister of the reigning King Oscar, has exhibited a singular zeal and interest in the evangelization and material development of the Laplanders. She has recently organized a society of ladies in Stockholm, whose sole object is to promote missionary labor among the Lapps. She has spent much of her time in writing letters and personally visiting ladies, whom she invokes to come to the aid of her noble undertaking. One of the points of her appeal covers the whole case, and is simply irresistible. It is a reference to the fruitless plea of a Lapp woman, five centuries ago, to secure the gospel for her native country. These are the words of Princess Eugenie: "Five hundred years ago Margaretha, a woman from Lapland, impelled by a burning desire to see the glorious sun of the gospel rise over the snow-covered fields of Lapland, traveled the whole distance to the south on foot, to lay her petition before her Queen, and beg for help. But notwithstanding the Queen's wish to aid her, the missionaries never reached Lapland, and Margaretha failed to see what she prayed for."

But much more successful was another Lapp woman, who, sixteen years ago, also came all the way to Stockholm on foot to seek spiritual help for her forgotten and unevangelized people—for, notwithstanding what King Adolph II. did for evangelizing the Lapps, they are still about as much pagan as in the old days of Odin and Thor. This latest woman from Lapland, who walked all the way to Stockholm for missionary help, was Mary Mattsdotter, and her plea has taken fruit in the noble efforts of the Princess Eugenie. This lady is now giving her entire time to the great work of sending the gospel to the Lapps. Neither the royal family nor the nobility generally, in any of the three Scandinavian countries, are wealthy. The civil list is small, and the taxes for the support of the crown are meager, for the people themselves are poor. Hence, the Princess has to resort to just such means as our American ladies employ, in order to provide missionary help for the Lapps, in whom she has taken such interest, and to whose improvement she is dedicating her life. In her own castle she has organized a "sewing society," the profits from which are given to Lapp evangelization. She has little bazars here and there in Stockholm, and in each of them are objects for sale which are the fruit of her own hands, such as embroidery and paintings. She spends her summers on the Island of Gothland, in the Baltic Sea. and gives all her time to missionary work for the poor of the Island, and is regarded by them almost in the light of a patron saint. When she returns in the autumn to Stockholm, she again goes to work for the Lapps, and spends her long winter in providing means to send missionaries. She has been at this work of love for a year or two, but we shall in due time hear of the work done in Lapland by her missionaries.

This is a new way for a lady of the nobility to spend her time. Instead of going to races, and lounging away her years at the watering-place, she prefers to make something of her life. Her example is worthy of imitation in this country. There is many a lady, and many a man, too, for that matter who need not wait long to find some class of people, somewhere on the world's map, who are in the darkness and the sorrow of no gospel, or of a very limited one. They have means and minds, and all they need is the conscience and energy to find a field. There is some harvest which they can gather and why do they stand all the day idle? But it is the old, old trouble—there are enough white fields; the dearth is in willing reapers.—Christian Advocate.

The Praying Widow of Nuremberg.

In the year 1820, there lived at Nuremberg the widow of a laborer, whose two sons were about completing their studies. But she was so poor that, when the youngest was about to pass his examination, she knew not how to procure the fifty francs demanded for his diploma. She made known her trouble to her pastor, who advised her to borrow that sum. The widow replied, "I dare not do it, for I do not know how I can ever repay it." "Well," said the pastor, "let us ask the Lord to send you that amount, relying on this promise, 'If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven.' Go home and pray, and I will do the same in my study."

Kneeling down the pastor presented his request in earnest prayer to God. Then he tried to think of some way by which he could help the poor mother, for his own resources were exhausted. He left his study hoping that his walk in the city would bring some good result. Passing the house of a parishoner some one seemed to say to him, "Go in and salute them." He knocked, and the woman who opened the door exclaimed, "You have come at the right moment." The father then said to his pastor, "We desire your counsel. Yesterday we celebrated our silver wedding. We did not wish to spend money for a feast, but have put aside twenty-five florins as a small token of gratitude for all the blessings God has granted us during these twenty-five years of marriage. We do not know how to employ this money, and I just now said to my wife that you could indicate to us the best use to which it could be applied." The pastor then recounted with much emotion the story of the poor widow. They both exclaimed, "It is the finger of God. Take the money and carry it to her."

It was now night, and the next day at nine o'clock the money must be paid. The pastor hastened to the home of the poor widow, and at her door heard her groans and half-uttered words of earnest prayer. He entered the room and said to her: "Before they call I will answer; and while they are yet speaking I will hear." He then explained to the astonished mother how their prayers had been answered, and her anxiety gave place to praise. They both kneeled down and gave thanks to God, who had so faithfully fulfilled his promise.—Selected.

"Man has but One Chance."

"Gentlemen, this universe, up to the edge of the tomb, is not a joke. There are in this [illegible] serious differences between the right hand and the left. Nevertheless, in our present [illegible], a man has but one chance. Even if you come weighted into the world, as Sinbad was with the Old Man of the Sea, you have but one chance. Time does not fly in a circle, but forth, and right on. The wandering, squandering, desiccated moral leper is gifted with no second set of early years. There is no fountain in Florida that gives perpetual youth; and the universe might be searched, probably in vain, for such a spring. Waste your youth; in it you shall have but one chance. Waste your middle life; in it you shall hase but one chance. Waste your old age; in it you shall have but one chance. It is an irreversible natural law that character attains final permanence, and in the nature of things final permanence can come but once. This world is fearfully and wonderfully made, and so are we, and we shall escape neither ourselves nor these stupendous laws. It is not to me a pleasant thing to exhibit these truths from the side of terror; but, on the other side, these are the truths of bliss; for, by this very law through which all character tends to become unchanging, a soul that attains final permanence of good character runs but one risk and is delivered once for all from its torture and unrest. It has passed the bourne, from behind which no man is caught out of the fold. He who is the force behind all natural law is the Keeper of his sheep, and no one is able to pluck them out of his hand. Himself without variableness or the shadow of turning, he maintains the irreversibleness of all natural forces, one of which is the insufferably majestic law by which character tends to assume final permanence, good, as well as bad."—Joseph Cook.

A WIFE'S FAITH.—In one of the towns of England there is a beautiful little chapel, and a very touching story is told in connection with it. It was built by an infidel. He had a praying wife, but he would not listen to her, would not allow her pastor even to take dinner with them, would not look at the Bible, would not allow religion even to be talked of. She made up her mind, seeing she could not influence him by her voice, that every day she would pray to God at twelve o'clock for his salvation. She said nothing to him, but every day at that hour she told the Lord about her husband. At the end of twelve months there was no change in him. But she did not give it up. Six months more went past. Her faith began to waver, and she said, "Will I have to give him up at last? Perhaps when I am dead he will answer my prayers." When she had got to that point it seemed just as if God had got her where he wanted her. The man came home to dinner one day. His wife was in the dining-room waiting for him, but he did not come in. She waited for some time, and finally looked for him all through the house. At last she thought of looking into the little room where she had prayed so often. There he was praying at the same bed with agony, where she had prayed for so many months, asking forgiveness for his sins. And this is a lesson for you, wives, who have infidel husbands. The Lord saw that woman's faith and answered her prayers.—Pure Testimony.

"Preach," says Austin Phelps; "let other men organize. Preach; let other men raise funds and look after denominational affairs. Preach; let other men ferret out scandals and try clerical delinquents. Preach; let other men solve the problem of perpetual motion, of which church history is full. Then make a straight path between your pulpit and your study, on which the grass shall never grow. Build your clerical influence up between those two abutements.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

The New-Year.

Stay yet, my friends, a moment stay;
Stay till the good old year,
So long companion of our way,
Shakes hands and leaves us here.
Oh stay, oh stay,
One little hour and then away.

Days brightly came and calmly went,
While yet he was our guest;
How cheerfully the week was spent!
How sweet the seventh day's rest!
Oh stay, oh stay,
One golden hour and then away.

Even while we sing he smiles his last,
And leaves our sphere behind,
The good old year is with the past;
Oh be the new as kind!
Oh stay, oh stay,
One parting strain and then away.

The Way to have a Happy New Year

BY MARGARET E. WINSLOW.

"Happy New Year!" said Lulu, as she took her accustomed seat the first Sabbath of 18—, "Happy New Year, girls! Happy New Year, Miss Amy! How many times have I said it to you?"

"This is the sixth New Year since you and Carte came from the infant class into mine; the others have not been together quite so long but to each and all I wish a very Happy New Year, and that it were in my power to make it such to every one of you."

"In whose power is it, Miss Amy?"

"The Lord's, first and chiefest, of course, but then he is so ready to do his part, and cares so much for the happiness of his children, that I might almost say it is in your power to make 18— the very happiest year of your life."

"I wonder how it is," said Lulu, who was given to wondering, "that every year everybody wishes everybody else Happy New Years, and yet they and everybody are as unhappy as possible. I don't think I ever heard anybody say, 'A Happy Old Year.'"

"I never did either, and yet I think the fault is our own in two ways: First, sorrow makes more impression on us than happiness, and so, in looking back, the year seems fuller of the one than the other; and, secondly, we forget that the way to make happy years is to try to make each day happy as it passes by. I knew an old gentleman, eighty years old, who told me last summer that he tried never to let a day go by without doing some little kindness, or making some one feel happier. That man was helping to make a great many happy new years, for himself and for others."

"For others, of course," said Carrie, "but I don't see how taking trouble and putting yourself out for other people is going to make you any happier yourself."

Carrie wasn't fond of taking trouble at all and if she could have given her definition of a "Happy New Year," it would have been one in which she kept perfectly still and had everybody to wait upon her.

"I never thought about New Years in that way," said Meta, "its a time to get presents, and have parties and good times, not to do things in."

"What do you think makes the happy New Years of the Lord?" said her teacher softly. "Isn't it just making all of us as happy as he can—as happy as we will let him, I mean? Suppose we try his plan this year, and each do all that we can to make others happy instead of thinking what they do, or do not do, for us."

"But that's like making a resolution," said Lulu. "Every New Year's since I can remember I've made resolutions, and I've always broken them. I don't think I'll ever make any more; it's of no use."

"There is a way of keeping resolutions," said Miss Amy, thinking, however, that her pupil's best road towards learning that way practically was through the failure of self-effort; "but suppose we don't resolve—that is for the year—but just each day do something to make some one happy, and see if in this way we cannot fulfill our own greetings and really have a happy new year."

"Agreed," said all the girls; and one of them said, "Let,s be a society, and call ourselves the 'Lend a hands,' like some girls I read about in Boston. They lent a hand to help poor mothers clothe their babies, but we'll try to help everybody."

We cannot follow all Miss Amy's class through every one of the three hundred and sixty-five days of 18—, but we can look at the first week in January, and see how two or three of them "lent a hand."

"I thought you were going sleigh-riding, Meta," said this little girl's mother, as she sat down to her lessons on Monday afternoon; "it's your turn to-day. Make haste and get ready."

"Would you just as soon take Mary Thorne, mother? She hasn't had a sleigh ride this winter, and the bells make her so long to go."

"Certainly, if you prefer it; but remember your turn won't come very soon, and the sleighing may not last."

"Never mind, I shall like it better," and she really had never enjoyed a ride half so much as she did the pleasure of seeing Mary's bright eyes and glowing cheeks as she set out on her unwonted, but greatly longed-for, pleasure-trip.

Tuesday had been long anticipated by Meta as the occasion of the annual party given by her dearest girl friend, but on this day little Georgie was quite sick, and mother was obliged to leave him all the afternoon and evening; so she wrote a little note of regret, and stayed at home, telling her brother stories and playing games with the other children, and became so interested that the evening seemed to her pleasanter than any party she had ever attended. So the week went on. Of course there were not great sacrifices to make every day, but there was always some little thing, at least, that she could give up to make somebody else happy. One day it was her own pleasant, warm seat by the fire, in which she had installed disagreeable Miss Peabody who had chanced to come in to dinner. On Thursday it was the best "corner piece" of pie, which she quietly passed to one of her brothers, helping herself to the less desirable one destined for him. On Friday she lent her new skates to a cousin visiting her, losing thereby the first trial of the lightful new possession as well as the best skating party of the season; and on Saturday she took care not to let the same cousin know that the story book to which she devoted the day was the very one which she had commenced the previous Saturday and intended to finish this. Each day had brought the voluntary giving up some very great pleasure, and yet when Saturday night came Meta felt that so far, at least, hers had been a happy New Year.

"Can't you get up and set the breakfast table, dear?" said Carrie's mother on Monday morning. "I'm sorry to have to ask you, daughter, but Norah has so much to do on washing day, and the baby has been so sick all night, that I dare not lay him down now that he has just fallen asleep."

Any day in the old year Carrie would have said "I can't," and fallen immediately asleep again; and her mother, who was one of those foolish people who seem to think children have come into the world just to be waited upon, would not have again roused her till her breakfast was waiting for her on the table; but the memory of the "society" was fresh in Carrie's mind, and she sprang out of bed, dressed in an incredibly short space of time, set the table as well as any one, dusted the sitting room, and did many other little things that usually fell to her mother's share of the morning work, while the baby slept peacefully, and woke up quite refreshed, to his mother's great delight.

Tuesday afternoon Mrs. Dana said that she very much wished she could send some gruel and fruit to a poor, sick woman, but it was a long walk and there was nobody to send, when, greatly to her surprise, Carrie volunteered to go.

"I am afraid you will be tired," said her mother.

"Never mind if I am; it won't hurt me to be tired." And it did not, for the long walk in the crisp afternoon air was as good as a sleigh-ride for bringing color into her cheeks, and the thanks of the poor old woman made her so happy that she determined to go and see her just as often as she could.

On Wednesday Carrie took her little brother out to ride on his new bright sled, instead of sitting all the afternoon in the big arm chair by the fire as she generally did. On Thursday, she hunted up some pieces of silk, and made little Ella supremely happy by constructing a magnificent new dress for her doll. On Friday, as she had found nothing else to do all day, she went up and got her father's slippers and had them all ready for him by the fire when he came home at night; and on Saturday, as there was a dress-maker in the house, and it was baking day besides, she ran on so many errands, buttered so many tins, covered so many jars, carried so many irons, and picked out so many basting threads, that her mother was afraid she would be quite worn out.

"I'am a little tired, mamma, but I don't mind that; I am as happy as I can be. This is the happiest New Year's I ever saw."

"One kind thing a day," thought Lulu, "that's nothing. I mean to do something to make people happy every hour—no, every minute—to-day;" and so thinking, she got out of bed directly, dressed very nicely, and was in time for breakfast, which was a great pleasure to her father, who was particular on this point, and did not often have his wishes gratified. This was a good beginning, but Lulu had such great things floating through her imagination, that this one seemed only a matter of course. She was an only child, there were many servants and an abundance of money in her home, and she did not know any of "the poor" whom the "ministering children" of books always work for. To be sure, she might have walked lightly as her heavy shoes creaked past the door of her sick grandmother, and she might have opened the door and spoken a pleasant word or so on her way to school. Also when she reached school, she might have helped Martha Mivert with that "dreadful hard sum," instead of saying, "How stupid you are! It's just as easy as anything;" and in the afternoon she might have gone across the street and taught that pretty fancy stitch in knitting to old Miss Molly, who, rich as she was, had to stay in her room all the time, and had so few pleasures. But she did not do any of these things; and, instead, went up to her room and had "a good cry" over her failing. The next day it was worse, for she not only let every little opportunity slip past, but became so nervous and cross from her disappointment with herself that she gave positive pain to a good many people by her short, abrupt answers and sharp words. So far it was not a happy New Year with Lulu, and very often "crossness" is the direct result of unhappiness. Wednesday, she did not try at all, and at night she was so thoroughly disgusted with herself that a more wretched little girl could not be found.

"I told Miss Amy it was of no use to resolve. I never can keep a resolution, and I never shall. I won't try to do good or to be good any more."

Now, this was a very sad thing to say, for Lulu had really been trying to be a Christian for some time, and it meant that she would not try to love and please her Saviour any more. But by and by a better thought came. Miss Amy had said there was a way to keep resolutions. It must be by asking Jesus to help us; Why had she not thought of that before? It was not too late now, and she would try. It was a very simple prayer that the little girl offered then, that the blessed Lord would come and help her to watch and remember not to be heedless, or selfish, or cross, and to go on and on and not be weary in well-doing—a very simple prayer, but just such as he loves to answer, and she went to sleep much comforted.

The next day things were different. There were "those boys," the cousins in the other street, who had been so long asking her to help them with their scrap-book; the books that papa wanted returned to the library; the yarn that grandma wanted to have wound; and such a quantity of little things, besides the great one of the class in the Saving School on Saturday, which had during the old year been very much neglected, that Lulu could scarcely believe the week was over, so busily and happily had its latter days sped away.

"I see it is still a Happy New Year," said Miss Amy, looking round on the bright faces on Sabbath afternoon.

"Yes indeed," answered a chorus of voices, and in a somewhat confused manner the story of the week was poured out, Lulu adding,

"And, Miss Amy, I have found out what you meant by 'There is a way of keeping resolutions;' it's just asking Jesus to help you and letting him do it. I think this is going to be the very happiest year of my life."

"I trust it is, and I hope the same for all of you. It will be so, if you have all learned Lulu's secret."

"But a whole year! Do you think we can keep on a whole year, Miss Amy—so many days?" said one.

"We are not going to look at a whole year, only to begin a Happy New Year every day, you know; and I think some of you have learned the way. Meta has learned that 'it is more blessed to give than to receive;' Carrie, that painstaking for others is happier than idle self-indulgence; and Lulu, that while 'without me ye can do nothing,' 'all things are possible to him that believeth.'"

"Besides," said the girl who proposed the society, "we have all learned how nice it is to 'lend a hand.'"—Selected.

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

Nominations for 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
of Illinois.

For Vice-President,
JOHN A. CONANT.
of Connecticut.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—About five years ago the Grand Orator of the Masonic Grand Lodge of this State pronounced a grand oration before the grand body. This is part of what he said. Mark it, thinking men of America!—

1. "That Masonry numbers, to-day, more than a million votaries, representing the best classes of all the civilized nations of the world. 2. That with these are already embraced many of those occupying the highest official positions of all governments. 3. That this number is being rapidly augmented, and will continue to increase UNTIL EVERY CROWNED HEAD, EVERY PRINCE, EVERY MINISTER, EVERY PRESIDENT AND CABINET SHALL FEEL AND ACKNOWLEDGE HER SECRET, SILENT INFLUENCE AND POWER."

Votes Thrown Out.

PUTNAM, Conn.

At the election on Nov. 7, 1882, the undersigned cast a ballot, headed "American Reform State Ticket." He has seen five other voters who then cast like ballots. One of the committee of the State ticket, told me that five of these ballots were in the box (one short). Two names on these ballots are not mentioned in the official report; i. e.. 12 votes in all. I do not think that the omission is the result of mere error on the part of all concerned. Having gone to the place just before the closing of the polls, I saw the ballot boxes emptied, and noticed on the pile from the State box, a parcel of ballots apparently as smooth and nearly in as regular order one upon the other as when they left the printer's hands, lying on one side of the top of the heap, having been at the bottom of the box. There seemed to be as many as perhaps six. Mentioning this afterwards to one of the counters, he said that there were more than that, and that they had not a wrinkle in them. The other counter told me that he saw the boxes opened before the voting began, and that they were empty.

Neither of the two great parties will trust the other to do all the receiving, keeping, counting and reporting of its votes. Each demands and receives the privilege of having a representative to handle every ballot. I think neither can safely trust the other to do this work alone. I think that much more a small party opposed to secret societies cannot safely trust the handling of their ballots to Freemasons, whether these Masons be labeled Republicans, Democrats, Prohibitionists, or for license. A knowledge of their oaths, and of some of their practices under these oaths, utterly forbids this trust. Their oaths require action, and a course of action wholly contrary to the Constitution and laws of the individual States, and of the United States, and above all, contrary to the laws of Jehovah. They say, "Masonry is not a political organization." It is true they do not openly work as a political organization—as one political party. Better were it for the nation if they did this; but it would destroy Masonry. When I look at the evidence their political action gives, I see clear indications that their Masonic affinities are much stronger than their merely nominal Republican, or Democratic, or temperance affinities.

Here in Putnam several past elections, both for town and State officers, have shown this; and elections in other towns and States, have shown the same. In our last town election, the regular Republican caucus ticket had on it out of its thirty names (and nine or more Masons in all,) two Democrats, both Masons, and both favoring license; as also two Republicans, one Mason, who peddled license tickets all day, one of them in two places on the ticket. The Republicans had also an amicable bolter's Republican ticket, with two more Democratic Masons' names on it, (one of them favoring license) instead of two Republican non-Masons who were on the regular caucus ticket. The last regular Republican caucus State ticket, for Nov. 7th, had on it for Representatives, one non-Mason, (who having been on once, was, according to custom, put on for a second term,) and one Mason. The Masonic Republican had again an amicable bolter's ticket with the name of the caucus Masonic candidate and the name of the only Democratic caucus nominee—a Mason. So the two Masons were elected and the non-Mason left out. "The indications are" (as the weather reports phrase is) that the Masonic leaders in the two parties agreed that the Democrats should nominate only one candidate, and that the Republicans should elect only one of their two candidates,—of course the Mason.

The real parties are, the secret society men (Masons the chief) and the non-secret society men; (briefly S. S. men and non S. S. men). Many non S. S. men do not see this, and only look at men as they are labeled by the great party leaders—as other Republicans or Democrats; or as either Prohibitionists or license men. But let the S. S. men be labeled as such, as they ought to be, and not so many would be duped by them and so led as to secure the election of men to whose most prominent principles they are wholly opposed. Under the old party cabals we have here in Putnam two registrars of voters—one Republican, one Democrat, under proper labels two S. S. men, no non S. S. men, two candidates for Sheriff of county, one Republican, one Democrat, under proper labels two S. S. men, no non S. S. men and so on indefinitely.

Let non S. S. men be anti S. S. men, and the face of affairs would be changed. Let men as well as things be called by their right names.

Note the power of registrars of voters. Among others is that of appointing the presiding officer of election meetings. They—or their appointee, the presiding officer—appoint the box-tenders and the counters of votes. All being thus under Masonic control, what guarantee have anti-secret or non-secret voters, that their votes will be duly counted and reported.

GEORGE H. WILLIAMS.

Sunday School Politics.

The following, from an editorial in Harper's Weekly, not a Sunday-school paper, is notable. It should be carefully read:

The elections of 1882 are a complete popular vindication of Sunady-school politics. They are a declaration that the supporters of the party whose record is the most illustrious for its country and for constitutional liberty of any party in any country at any time will not tolerate Executive dictation, or a mean and corrupt control. Practical politics do not conaist in cheating and stealing and a profound contempt for generous and honorable motives, but in a wise calculation of moral forces in the individual and the community. The Democratic party in the last generation allied itself with slavery and with the moral timidity of trade, and, intrenched in the national patronage, sneered at opposition. But in five years it was totally overthrown by the organized moral sentiment of the country, and for a quarter of a century it will have been kept out of national power. The Democratic party was overwhelmed by Sunday-school politics. These politics were discarded in the second administration of Grant. The result was the narrow escape of the Republican party from disaster in 1876. At that election, President Hayes and Sunday-school politics came into power. In "regular" Republican circles it was the fashion to sneer at milk toast and Sunday-schools in politics, as the Democrats had sneered at Woolly Heads and Brudder Bones, twenty years before. But the 32,000 majority against Hayes in New York, in 1876, was reduced by Sunday-school politics in 1877 to 11,000, and in 1880 the Sunday-school majority for Garfield was 21,000. Garfield was elected because his career and the defeat of the third term plot at Chicago showed that the Sunday-school was still the controlling power of the party. In other words, it showed that the party was not yet subdued by the politics of bosses and rings, and the patronage which makes them. From a doubtful and disputed electoral issue and a Democratic popular majority of a quarter of a million in 1876, Sunday-school politics in the teeth of sneering bosses, gave the Republican party in 1880 an electoral majority of fifty-nine, and a popular majority also.

AN AGRICULTURAL AND INDUSTRIAL INSTITUTE for the colored refugees in Kansas has been established at Columbus in Cherokee county. The institution has a farm of over four hundred acres, well improved and stocked, outbuildings, shops, tools, etc., enough for a school of one hundred pupils, and the pupils are anxious to come, but there is no building for them to live in. Stone has been purchased and means to build are solicited to go on with the work. If any wish to aid by a New Year's gift, they may send through the well-known Quaker lady, Elizabeth L. Comstock, Rollin, Mich., or to L. M. Pickering, Columbus, Kansas.

MR. EDITOR, there is a grand field for some of the lecturers and workers in the reform against lodgery here in the vicinity of Moulton, Appanoose county, Iowa. Who will come and occupy it? Now is the time to strike.

J. T. ALLAMAN.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

—Bishop Wright prints a powerful editorial in the Richmond Star in favor of disciplining church members who refuse to abandon the secret lodge. It will be published in tract from.

—Dr. Nathan Brown reports the completion of the scholar's edition of the Gospel of John in Japanese. The total amount of Scriptures printed during the year is 2,290,000 pages.

—At a Union service on Thanksgiving day in the Galena street M. E. church, Aurora, Ill., Rev. C. N. Hobart preached. He astounded some of his hearers and rejoiced others by declaring with Christian boldness that infidelity, monopoly and secretism are the three great evils that threaten the nation. The Cynosure will secure that discourse and publish it, if possible.

—The United Presbyterian church is contributing promptly for the relief of the native Christians of her missions, who lost their property by the war in Egypt. The Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, Mr. Jos. D. McKee, of Philadelphia, says the Board could use $10,000 for this purpose.

—The Presbyterians organized a mission church in Rio Janeiro in 1862, and now have 32 churches in the empire, with a total of 1,729 members, most of them converts from Romanism.

—The Evangelica Christian, of Paris, estimates at nine thousand the number of those who, beyond the Vaudois Valleys, regularly attend worship in Italian churches, and that in as as many as two hnndred places; with five thousand children in day schools, three thousand in Sunday-schools, the churches among whom all these are distributed being three—the Waldensian, the Free Church, and the Wesleyans.

—"In India," says a missionary writer, "missionaries get but little sympathy and encouragement from Europeans. The large majority of Government officers, military and civil, take no interest in missions. They know nothing about them, and seldom ask anything concerning them. They are, in fact opposed to them. They declare they have no faith in their success, are set against the poor native Christians, and look with pity upon the unfortunate missionary as engaged in a hopeless task. This attitude, together with their example, has a most demoralizing tendency upon the missionary himself and upon the work." The testimony of this missionary is hardly corroborated by others, who have been most heartily assisted, both by money and personal effort, by the English residents.

—When Luther began his reformation, eighty out of the one hundred millions who owed allegiance to Christian rulers were under Papal rule, the remainder, chiefly under the Patriarch of the Greek Church. In A. D. 1700, the Roman Catholic peoples had increased to 90,000,000, the Eastern Christians to 33,000,000; while those of Protestant faith were numbered 32,000,000, or about one-fifth of nominal Christian people. In 1800 there were under Protestant governments, 194,000,000; under Papal, 134,000,000; and under governments owning the Greek Church, 60,000,000. In 1876 the record stands as follows: Under governments professedly Roman Catholic, 181,000,000; Greek Church, 96,000,000; and nnder rnle professedly Protestant, 408,000,000.

—An exchange has an interesting note on John Rankin, a pioneer in Ohio for temperance, abolition and every Christian reform. He has contributed to the columns of the Cynosure, and earnestly prays for the downfall of secret conspiracies against truth and goodness. The note says: "The Rev. John Rankin, the oldest Presbyterian minister in Ohio, preached at Ripley, Ohio, October 29th, in the pulpit of the church bnilt for him nearly forty years ago. He is now in his ninetieth year, and commenced preaching in Ripley nearly sixty years ago, having previously preached in Kentucky and Tennessee. His sermon is said to have been one of his characteristic discourses, marked by its ability and logic. Father Rankin was one of the first advocates of the abolition of slavery, and it was a tract from his pen that converted William Lloyd Garrison to the anti-slavery cause. He has been a fearless preacher of the truth, and has exerted an influence for good that can never be told till the day of final reckoning. Many in his part of the State will remember him as the early apostle of the abolition cause."

—Two thousand young men, students of theology, are being trained in fifty-two seminaries in the United States, by two hundred instructors. As every ten students have, therefore, an instructor it suggests that they ought to be well taught. It is doubtful if there is such care being taken of any other set of youth in the country.

—The old bath at Trichinopoly, Madras, India, in which Bishop Heber lost his life, suffers from neglect, and steps have been taken by the English government to secure its preservation. It has been directed that the bath shall be protected by an ornamental iron railing placed at a sufficient distance to prevent interferencewith the water. The bath will retain its original character, and is to be kept filled with water. On a side wall is to be set up a slab bearing the following inscription: "In memory of the devoted, accomplished, beloved, and universally honored servant of God, Reginald Heber, D. D., third bishop of Calcutta and one of India's truest and most loving benefactors, this stone was erected in the year 1882, at the expense of government on the margin of the bath in which he was drowned while bathing on the 3d of April, 1826. His body was laid under the chancel of the church of St. John, Trichinopoly, in the hope of the resurrection of the just to eternal life through Jesus Christ."

Undenominational Churches.

DEAR EDITOR:—In the year 1867, a little band, six in nnmber, decided to separate from those with whom we were then ecclesiastically associated, New School Presbyterians, because of their persistent connection with the sin of slaveholding. We believed that a people persisting in such a sin, and declaring, as they did, that there was "no hope of repentence on their part," were apostate from the faith; and that we ought not, by fellowship, "bid them Godspeed"—that the true church, in her Lord, could not be "the ministers of sin."

At the same time we saw what we believed was true, that the true children of God—the Christians of the locality—ought to constitute the one church of that locality.

We also saw that if there should be no divisions in the body, then there ought to be no names to make divisions—that as in our baptism we had taken on us the name of our Lord, as the wife that of the bridegroom—that as he is the "head of the church," the one "of whom the whole family of heaven and earth are named; so we should stand as the "church of Christ" in that locality.

This, which was right, was now found practicable. A revival ensued. Twenty-one souls were added. Those who had been Methodists, Baptists, and Disciples united with the church. The name was objectionable to none—dear to all—"church," "Church of God," "Churches of Christ," are biblical terms and make the one body.

Persecutions arose—violent mobs on the border, and afterwards in the interior—still the leaven worked—another church was formed in Bracken county. The former was in Lewis county.

About this time, 1850, my attention was called to the subject of Christian baptism; a Presbyterian minister having put into my hands Stewart's work on baptism. I saw Stewart's concession, "that in the classics the word baptizo means to dip, to plunge, to immerse; that on this all lexicographers and critics of any note are agreed!" I said, if this be true, then how must those to whom the epistles were addressed have understood the word. They must have understood the Greek word just as used in classics—the language the people spoke. The more I studied, the more I became convinced that what our Lord commanded in his great commission was, that I too, should be baptised—receive what the word imports when used to denote action—not result of the action nor mere import of the rite, but what the word means when used to indicate action; for the commission requires an action. Accordingly I was immersed—"buried by baptism into death"—into the relation of one dead to sin and alive to God—eis, the Greek word, here used as "in the name of the Father"—not to denote "into position" but into relation.

Now, whilst I thus believe and thus act, and in baptising never do something else, yet I realize that baptism is not a church ordinance, but one of our Lord's, and what each true believer must do, is to do just exactly what he understands his Lord to enjoin, and not what an association of men may enjoin.

Also, this command to be baptised comes to nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand, not in the inspired Word, but in a translation, or rather in a transference of the Word with an English termination. These nine hundred and ninety-nine have to interpret—they cannot translate. All are agreed that questions of interpretation must not be conditions of fellowship. I must, therefore, give to penitent believers the Bible, with the right of private interpretation; with the belief that honest enquirers, delivered from partisan strife and partisan teaching will, in the light of God's Word and God's spirit, come to see what is the proper action by which to express their consecration to their Lord.

After some years I came to the interior of the State, and here, at what is now known as Berea, in Madison county, Ky., was organized another similar church.

In process of time Bros. Waters, Lincoln, Candee, Rogers and others came. Other churches were gathered in Jackson, Rock Castle and Jessamine counties.

In those days, before the war, the idea of a college in which to educate the youth of the land, not merely in the classics, bnt especially in correct apprehension of the design of government protection, and the nature of the religion of Jesus Christ, love to God and love to man, was conceived; and a board of trustees organized and a constitution adopted. A by-law in this constitution declares "this college shall be under an influence strictly Christian, and as such, opposed to sectarianism, slaveholding, caste and every other wrong institution or practice.

Meeting of the Associated Churches.

The convention of the Associated Churches of Christ met at Cedar Grove church, Lowndes county, Miss., Dec. 6th, 1882. In the discussion of the best means of opposing secret orders the prominent truth held forth was that the church should take the lead in reform.

A vote of thanks was passed to those who had sent words of Christian greeting

The following preambles, resolution and address were unanimously adopted and ordered to be forwarded for publication in the Cynosure:

WHEREAS, Freemasonry claims to be a religion which is pure theism and will save the soul, which claim is contrary to the Word of God, which declares that there is one faith, and says of our Saviour Jesus Christ, "Neither is there salvation in any other for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved;" and

WHEREAS, It is impossible that there should be two ways of salvation in Christ's church; therefore

RESOLVED, That we the convention of the Associated Churches of Christ do affectionately and earnestly recommend to all the conferences, associations and churches of every denomination, to pass resolutions making rules against secret orders, that will prohibit those who belong to these secret orders from being members of the church of Christ.

ADDRESS.

To all the members of God's church everywhere:

BELOVED IN THE LORD:—The church is being corrupted by Satan through the power of secret organizations. Let us do our whole duty to preserve its purity. The church is an organization built on the rock of ages by Christ himself. He claims it as his own. He says, "On this rock will I build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." He is the head of the body, the church. Christ loved the church and gave himself for it, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish. With Christ for our leader, let us be of good courage. Let us obey the injunction of God's Word, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them."

Sent by order of convention.

M. TAPLEY, Ass't Sec'y.

HOME AND FARM.

PROVIDE A SNOW PLOW.--Shoveling soon becomes hard work; a snow plow, with a horse to draw it, is a great improvement over the shovel. Indeed the difference is quite as great as in working land by the plow and with the spade. If one has a snow plow, he is quite sure of the help of all the boys (if not the girls too) of the neighborhood, who make a great frolic, and are always useful in adding needed weight to the plow. A snow plow may often be a matter of co-operation among neighbors, if not in owning, at least in working it. In every well-managed village one should be owned and operated for the general good. Even where the paths are not long enough to allow of the use of the horse, a hand-plow save in very deep snows is preferable to the shovel.

Winter Rations for Poultry.

As staple food, nothing is better and nothing is so cheap as good Indian corn, and one meal a day may safely be of this grain, either ground or whole. Grinding is of less consequence for poultry than for larger animals, as every bird carries a complete mill for the purpose, and puts in a new run of stones as often as it can get to the ground. A variety of grain is always acceptable; wheat screenings, buckwheat, oats and rye, the last rather sparingly. Cooked food is highly relished—potatoes or turnips, boiled and mashed with Indian meal, scalded and fed warm, especially on frosty mornings. Fowls are very fond of vegetables, even raw, and if sugar beets or mangels or turnips are put within reach, they will help themselves. For an appetizer, nothing is better than cabbage or the tops of turnips. Hens never tire of cabbage, and a good supply for winter should always be laid in. Animal food in some shape must be furnished, if you want plenty of eggs. Shore farmers can get fish offal from the markets, clams from the banks, or minnows from the ditches. Skimmed milk is always in order, and meat scraps from fat-trying establishments, sold in large cakes, and placed where the hens have free access to them, are excellent food to laying poultry.—American Agriculturist.

Winter Care of Live-Stock.

There are a few general rules for the care of live stock in winter, which are of universal application:

First—They should lie dry, whether bedded or not. A dry floor is far better than wet bedding. Spar or slat floors, through which urine will quickly pass, and which give the animals a level standing place, are especially to be advised. A good degree of comfort may be had on such floors, but a good supply of dry litter—straw, leaves, swamp hay, etc.—certainly makes all kinds of stock more comfortable.

Second—Shelter saves fodder, wherever lumber can reasonably be obtained, to a degree which few practical men are aware of. The warmer the stables are the better, except perhaps for sheep. But with close, warm stables, it is essential that the manure heap will be where it will not contaminate the air, and that there should be perfect ventilation, so arranged as not to cause drafts of air.

Third—As to feed. This should be given with the utmost regularity and uniformity—never more than will be eaten up long before the next feeding time. Then the animals have an appetite for their food, so that coarse fodder may be first given, to be followed with better, and by grain in some form, if this be a part of the daily ration. This is no doubt the most economical system, of all kinds of fodder used in the ordinary way.

Fourth—Grooming and the care of the animals are a most valuable means of keeping them in health as well as of saving food. The skin of the animal existing in a state of nature is washed by every shower, brushed and carded by every bush, licked by its mates, rubbed by the ground in rolling, and in various ways kept free from accumulations of its own exfoliations, from the stoppage of the pores by sweat, and from its own inherent dirt. A healthy skin means warmth, health, life, vigor, other things being about right, and we can secure this only by grooming.—Am. Agriculturist.

Shall we Prune in Winter?

There has been a vast amount of discussion as to the proper time for pruning, some insisting that it should not be done in winter, while others hold that the proper time is "whenever your knife is sharp." One season especially in which pruning should not be done, viz.: during the period of active growth, from the time the buds start in spring, until buds for the next year are formed. Winter is preferred by many, as more time can be devoted to the work; and with the apple and pear, it probably does not make any difference at what period it is done between the falling of the leaf and swelling of the buds in spring. It is not well to prune when the wood is frozen, as bad wounds and cracks may result. If young trees are taken in hand at the start and proper attention given to forming the heads, there would be little need of severe pruning in the orchard. The too common method is, to plant an orchard and let it grow uncared for. The trees, after they begin to bear, yield fair crops for a few years, and then when, they decline and fail, pruning is suggested as a remedy. Too often the pruning is done by ignorant persons, and as a result, nearly as much wood is cut out as there is left. The great waste should be avoided. The labor of the tree, so to speak, expended to produce these numerous branches, should have been directed to the production of fruit, as it might have been had proper care been given to the orchard when young. The principles of pruning are readily understood, and one should never remove a branch, large or small, without having some definite object in view.—Am. Agriculturist.

PROF. RECLAM, a great authority on matters of hygiene, lately published an article explaining why dyspeptics usually find that stale bread agrees with them better than fresh bread. Fresh bread is in itself just as digestible as stale bread: but the latter cannot be so quickly swallowed, so that it becomes more thoroughly mixed with saliva. Bread, and all food consisting principally of starchy matter, is digested in the mouth rather than the stomach; which explains why the habit of swallowing it hastily leads to indigestion as frequently as the habit of swallowing meat that has been imperfectly masticated. Dyspeptics are, therefore, frequently as much to blame for their condition, or more, than their cooks or the quality of their food. Eels, sauerkraut, and other things avoided by dyspeptics, are only injurious to them because they can be, and are, so easily swallowed.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man, by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1 25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Broekman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen

MISCELLANEOUS.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. Table of Contents: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen. $2.00

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. Each of these able writers in clear, forcible language treats the subject in one or more of its varied phases. Rev. David McDill in six chapters treats of 1. "Their Antiquity; 2 Their Secrecy; 3. "Oaths and Promises;" 4. "Profaneness" 5. "Their Exclusiveness;" 6. "False Claims." Prest. Blanchard handles the topic: "Shall Christians join Secret Societies?" in a masterly way, showing clearly that they are all opposed to the genius of Christianity; and Dr. Beecher closes with his Report on Secret Societies, which was adopted by the Congregational Association of Illinois at Ottawa in 1866. In cloth, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.25. Paper cover, 15 cents; per dozen, $1.25

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfers with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin, objects, what it has done and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the end sought; the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and By-laws of the Association, condition of the Carpenter donation, with engraving of building donated by Mr. Carpenter; tables showing the number of pastors and communicants in churches that exclude members of secret societies, tabular view of local, county, state and national conventions, and list of organizations auxiliary to the National Christian Association; brief opinions of eminent men on secret societies, and testimonies of religious bodies against them. 25 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Minutes of the Syracuse Convention. Containing addresses by Rev. B. T. Roberts, Chas. W. Greene, Esq., Prof. C. A. Blanchard, Rev. D. P. Rathbun, Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Mrs. M. E. Gage, Elder J. R. Baird and others. Unpublished Reminiscences of the Morgan Times, by Elder David Bernard; Recollections of the Morgan Trials, as related by Victory Birdseye, Esq., and presented by his daughter, Mrs. C. B. Miller; Secretary's Report; Roll of Delegates; Songs of Mr. G. W. Clark; Paper by Enoch Honeywell; Constitution N. C. A.; Reports of Committees and a Report of the Political Meeting. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Proceedings of Pittsburgh Convention. Containing Official Reports; Addresses by Rev. D. R. Kerr, I. D., Rev. B. T. Roberts, Rev. G. T. R. Meiser, Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., Prest. J. Blanchard, Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., Rev. Woodruff Post, Rev. Henry Cogswell, Prof. C. A. Blanchard and Rev. W. E. Coquilette; also Report of the Political Mass Convention, with Platform and Candidates for the Presidential Campaign of 1876. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Anti-Mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 31 Cynosure tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies; and the dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized secrecy are shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public. Those who wish to circulate anti-Masonic Tracts ought to have the book to select from. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

In the Coils; or the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historial sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of every-day life, and showing how individual, domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. Parents who wish, not only to keep their children out of these night-schools of Satan, but to give them arguments against them in the most attractive dress, will do well to purchase this book. $1.50 each; $15 per dozen.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each, per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen. $4.00.

Stearns' Review of Two Masonic Addresses. In this scathing review the lying pretensions of the order are clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Letters on Masonry. Showing the antagonism between Freemasonry and the Christian religion. Paper cover, 30 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen. $2.00.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 415 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen. $7.50

Freemasonry and the M. E. Church. Let every lover of truth and justice read this report of the trial of Rev. J. T. Michael, showing how he was driven out of the M. E. church for opposing Masonry and loving Methodism. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate, and afterward in pamphlet form. The Evangelical Repository, reviewing it, says: "This pamphlet consists of a series of articles originally published in the Church Advocate, Lancaster, Pa. Elder M. S. Newcomer opposes secret societies, and especially Freemasonry and Elder G. W. Wilson defends the system. We are free to say that Mr. Newcomer has thoroughly routed his opponent at every point. Mr. Wilson speaks by the book, as he is a Royal Arch Mason." 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

A Masonic Conspiracy. Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The House of Representatives on the 25th passed a resolution inflicting a fine of $50 per day upon any Congressman who should dare to absent himself from the House during the holiday season afterward voted to adjourn from December 22 to January 2. The Senate does not agree.

—The Postoffice Appropriation Bill passed by a vote of 163 to 21, and goes to the Senate with the provision for two-cent postage incorporated in it.

—The army appropriation bill makes a reduction as compared with last year of $1,600,000.

—The Supreme Court of the United States has made an emphatic and gratifying decision on the subject of political assessments. It upheld the recent prosecution of General Curtis in New York, affirming in unmistakable terms the constitutionality of the statute under which he was convicted. Justice Bradley gave a dissenting opinion.

—The City Bank of Rochester, N. Y., has closed its doors. Its President, Chas. E. Upton, got on the wrong side of the oil market and sank $350,000 of the bank's money in trying to get even. Several small savings institutions in Rochester deposited with the City Bank, and many poor people will probably suffer by its failure.

—Mr. Gladstone having strengthened his position with the Whigs by the admission of Earl Derby to the Cabinet, now seeks to conciliate the Radicals. It has been finally determined to create a Bureau of Agriculture, and Mr. Chamberlain, the thorough-going member for Birmingham, is to be its first chief, of course with a seat in the Cabinet.

—Great distress appears to exist in Ireland, starving laborers parading the streets of the towns in the West and demanding work or bread.

—Mr. Parnell expressed the opinion in Parliament that there had been already saved upwards of three million pounds in arrears of rent, and announced his intention of opposing any proposition to encourage the Irish to emigrate to America unless they were given a bonus which would enable them to land on this side of the water with enough funds to keep them from becoming a burden upon the community.

—At Loughrea, Ireland, a number of laborers paraded the street demanding work or food, and declaring that they were starving. They surrounded the residence of Bishop Duggan who distributed money to them. Great distress prevails in the town.

—It is lately alleged that the Junta of Guatemala, the committee which at present administers the affairs of that country, much desire the admission of their land as a State of the American Union.

—While a cage was descending in the Hardenburg mine in Prussia, the chain broke and the cage fell, killing twenty persons.

—A terrible storm took place at St. John, Newfoundland, on the 19th. The hurricane lasted for twenty-four hours, during which some fifteen vessels were wrecked and totally lost. Wharves, stages, and fish-flakes were washed away like gossamer into the sea. Seven men were lost.

—Bontoux the President, and Feder the Manager of the Union Generale of Paris, the magnificent swindle which collapsed in February of last year, have each been sentenced to five years of imprisonment, both on the charge of swindling.

—The Chinese in the Province of Ili, tortured and murdered in October two Cossacks and two Russian clerks. The Russian Consul at Kuldja is making an investigation. The Russians on the frontier are exasperated and threaten reprisals.

MASONIC BOOKS

FOR SALE BY

EZRA A. COOK,

7 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

Books sent post-paid on receipt of retail price, but books by mail are at risk of person ordering, unless 10 cents extra is sent to pay for registering them, when their safe delivery is guaranteed. Books at retail ordered by express are sold at 10 per cent. discount and delivery guaranteed, but not express paid. Postage stamps taken for small sums.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No scrupulous Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicographer, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority because they tell too much.

General Ahiman Rezon and Freemasons' Guide. By Daniel Sickels, 33d degree. The most perfect Masonic monitor published in the United States. Embellished with many engravings and containing monitorial instructions in the degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Masons, with explanatory lectures, the ceremonies of consecration and dedication of new lodges, installation of officers, laying foundation stones, dedication of Masonic halls, burial services, Masonic calendar, ritual for a Lodge of Sorrow, Masonic trials, etc. Bound in fine cloth, extra large 12mo, $2.00.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the entire ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Scores of Masons have privately admitted that this is a standard text-book in the lodge and is strictly correct: but publicly it is not acknowledged as authority, though many officers of the lodge make use of it. Price, in cloth, $2.50.

Sickels' Freemasons' Monitor. Containing the degrees of Freemasonry embraced in the Lodge, Chapter, Conucil and Commandery, embellished with nearly 300 symbolic illustrations, together with tactics and drill of Masonic Knighthood. Also forms of Masonic documents, notes, songs, Masonic dates, installations, etc. By D. Sickels; 32mo. In tuck, $1.50; cloth, $1.00.

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. A practical guide to the ceremonies in the degrees conferred in Masonic Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated edition. In cloth, $1.25; in paper, 75 cents.

Although this Monitor is extensively used by the lodge, especially in conferring the higher degrees, it is publicly called an exposition, and not allowed as authority.

Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, or Monitorial Instructions in the Degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Mason, with Ceremonies relating to installations, dedications, consecrations, laying of corner-stones, etc. Price, $2.00.

Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry. Containing a Definition of Terms, Notes on its History, Traditions and Antiquities, and an Account of all the Rites and Mysteries of the Ancient World. 12 mo., 526 pages, $3.00.

Female Masonry. Manual of the Order of the Eastern Star. Containing the ritual, symbols, lectures, etc., of the five degrees of "Adoptive Masonry," Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, profusely illustrated and handsomely bound. Price, $1.50.

Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, or Monitorial Instruction Book. By Albert G. Mackey, Past General High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of the United States, Knight of the Eagle and Pelican, Prince of Mercy, etc. Price, cloth, $1.25; tuck, $1.75.

Mackey's Text-Book of Masonic Jurisprudence. Illustrating the laws of Freemasonry, both written and unwritten. This is the great law book of Freemasonry. 570 pages. Price, $2.50.

Allyn's Ritual of Masonry. Illustrated by a large number of engravings, and containing a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, Orange and Odd-fellows' Societies Price, $5.00.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR

To all our readers and friends. God grant that A. D. 1883 may be to them and to the CYNOSURE one of the "years of the right hand of the Most High."

TOPICS OF THE TIME.

The Civil Service Reform bill passed the Senate on Wednesday last, with an opposition of only five Democratic votes at last. The clearness and abilitywith which the salient points of this political reform are placed before our readers makes needless any statement of the arguments which prevailed at the final vote. After a four week's struggle the measure was passed by a vote of 39 to 5. Senator Pendleton, a Democrat, introduced the measure, but Republicans took most interest in its passage and in fighting down the amendments of enemies brought in to kill it. The probibition of the political assessment business is part of the measure, and Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, who is a prohibition champion, was successful in attaching an additional section, providing: "No person habitually using intoxicating beverages in excess shall be appointed or retained in any office, business or employment to which the provisions of this act are applicable."

In his brief speech advocating this amendment Mr. Blair, with much skill, referred to the fact that Thomas Jefferson had been several times quoted during the debate as authority for the doctrine that integrity and capacity should be tests for admission to the public service. He would quote Jefferson still further when he said: "The habit of indulging in ardent spirits by men in office has occasioned more injury to the public than any other use, and were I to commence my administration, with the experience I now have, the first question I would ask respecting a candidate would be, 'Does he use ardent spirits?'" It is a great step for the Senate to adopt this prohibitory section. It is not many years ago when the idea would have been scouted, and with as much reason as a proposition to exclude adherents of secret lodges would to-day. We can wait. The time will as surely come when the lodge will be cast out with the dram-bar as the reasons underlying the prohibition of the latter are matched in every respect by those of the other.

The ordinary observance of Dec. 25th as the birthday of Jesus has its counterpart in the "Passion play" of the Bavarian peasants, which a very persistent gentleman named Morse is trying to reproduce and popularize in this country. This performance, which is no less than a theatrical representation of the Last Supper, arrest, trial, and crucifixion of Christ, is prolonged through several days, and annually reproduced by the villagers of Oberammergau with much preparation and a grave zeal. But the efforts of Mr. Morse are not appreciated here, and after long and expensive preparation for the reproduction of this "miracle-play" in New York, he has been forbidden the privelege by the Mayor at the petition of innumerous and influential citizens. It is a curious study in human nature to read the severe criticisms of some of the religious journals, so-called, which in years past have published long and glowing accounts from travelers, approving the semi-religious play of the peasants. What is good for the humble dwellers in Bavarian valleys ought to be for poor lodgers in New York. But the logic of objection may be in that Mr. Morse brings in the play for patrons who have money and not for the poor who have none. He is at least forbidden to annoy the "conscientious" people who can make an outrageous farce with "Christmas" day festivals, and stoutly maintain the authority of the day wherein the "world" makes a grand holiday in honor of the birth of a Saviour whom it hates, and whom it would persecute and crucify should he come again among men. "The old Puritan antipathy to the religious festival has completely passed away," say the religious editors who abhor the Passion-play. But it has not passed away, and objection to one is good against the other.

Rufus Hatch, the old broker and banker of New York, is pitted against General Sheridan for the possession of Yellowstone Park. Mr. Hatch keenly observes that the Northern Pacific railway will soon open the way for the multitudes to visit that valley of grotesque and wonderful exhibitions of nature, and is at the head of a company who have secured a lease of the Park, with the exclusive privilege of building hotels and conducting stage and telegraph lines. Gen. Sheridan denounces this as a grand monopoly which will end in the ruin of the Park. He wants the reservation enlarged and the whole guarded by U. S. troops to prevent visitors from further despoiling some of the race curiosities of the region. Hatch says the soldiers have done more damage than all others together, burning over large sections and marauding wildly everywhere. The banker is the best general. He went to Washington last week, and got up a fine banquet for the representatives of the press. No one would have mistrusted a bribe had not a few correspondents been left out, and took the gentle revenge of exposing the generous fraud. They say that Hatch wants to lease the Park with its 6,000 square miles for a nominal sum annually. He approaches Congress through the press of the whole country whose good will he hoped to buy with a good breakfast.

Among the most thrilling episodes of the anti-slavery struggle was the collision between John F. Potter of Wisconsin and Roger A. Pryor of Virginia, friend and counterpart of the "Bully" Brooks who nearly beat the life out of the brave Sumner. A recent report that Mr. Potter was reduced to extreme poverty and was compelled to resort to a "poor-farm" has revived the interest in those days of struggle with the slave power. It is likely that the dispatches are misleading us, and that Mr. Potter simply owns a poor farm in Wisconsin which affords him a scant existence. A correspondent, reviving the recollections of twenty-three years ago, gives Mr. Potter's version of his combat with Pryor and the challenge that followed: "I detested duelling," said Mr. Potter, "and the idea of taking a human life was abhorent to me. But we could not swallow insults forever. I had nothing against Pryor. But he assumed plantation manners and told us in an arrogant speech that our freedom of debate would no longer be allowed. I replied defiantly. Pryor challenged me as I rather expected he would. I saw how absurd duelling was as a means of adjusting differences, but I saw no way but to accept. I talked with my wife about it. She acted a good deal as wives will under such circumstances, but she agreed with me, as I thought she would, and said I had better fight. We both felt that it was a National matter—not any private quarrel—and we were willing to make sacrifices. I selected bowie-knives in a locked room for several reasons. First, I thought he might not fight, and that would have a good result by throwing derision upon duelling and the Southern bravos. Second, I thought I was stronger and quicker than he, and that I should prove superior if the fight really came off. I felt that the quarrel was forced on me and I was entitled to any advantage the 'code' would give me. We all felt that the time had come for some Northern man to lay aside his scruples and strike one blow that would convince the South that we were not to be bullied any longer. Mr. Pryor declined to fight. I have nothing to say about his decision. But it certainly had its effect at the time on the relations of the two parties in Washington and I have never regretted my course."

Civil Service Reform.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

The question now pressing upon the public mind and more than any other absorbing the attention of Congress, is that of Civil Service reform. Stripped of all false coverings the question is this: Do the officers who are called to administer the government hold their offices as public servants for the good of the people, or do they constitute a privileged class, and has office been bestowed upon them for their benefit.

No one is in any doubt as to what is republican doctrine. All our political orators tell us on all occasions that the government is of the people, by the people, and for the people, but they forget to say that by "the people," they mean only the party in power, and only such members of that party as have the desire and capacity to hold office.

Who shall administer this government, and who profit most by such administration? has been the almost only question at issue during the last few years. Such a question ought never to arise, and it is no wonder that the people should in the late election have revolted against the politicians, and hurled from power the men who sought to hold office for their own selfish advantage.

That there may be a true reform we need to recognize certain fixed principles.

1. Divine law is the basis of all human law and is paramount to all human enactments. It is only when the voice of the people is just that it is the voice of God.

2. Public office is a sacred trust, accepted and executed for the public good.

3. The qualifications for office are: Character and capacity. By character is meant fearing God and keeping his commandments.

4. The right to continue in the civil service grows out of the capacity to discharge that service honestly and well. The right to hold office is not an inherent right, nor is it reward for political service. Promotions in civil service should follow the same rule as promotions in business, and depend on experience, capacity and fidelity. That these principles ought to be recognized and carried out is obvious to all.

But the further inquiry arises, what are the obstacles to their adoption? They are:

1. The rule of party. "To the victors belong the spoils" has been the motto of all great political parties. It is a principle utterly unrepublican and immoral, and has tended greatly to the injury of public morality. It is only another name for the doctrine that "might makes right." It is the robber rule and can only be maintained at the peril of republican government. To the victors in every moral conflict there belong great responsibilities, but no rights that they did not previously possess. Republican government is not a government of a party, but a government of the people. Men elected to office do not represent their party, but the whole people. To dismiss men from office merely to make place for others is both unjust and impolitic, and ought to be prohibited by law.

2. The assessment of civil offices for political purposes. It matters not that such assessments are called voluntary contributions and that officers are simply invited to give. So long as the tenure of office depends on the good will of those having the appointing power, such invitation becomes practically mandatory. It is of the nature of a bribe. It appeals to the worst elements in humanity and ought to be suppressed by law. Not only the collection but the use of money to influence elections is clearly criminal. It is well known that during the late canvass that combinations of brewers and distillers both open and secret raised large sums of money which were used to influence the vote of certain States, and protect a most lucrative, but most injurious business. If the offering of a bribe to a juryman is a crime, and its acceptance invalidates the verdict, how much more should an appeal to the averice and appetite of the morally weak, be regarded as practically making void all appeals to the verdict of public opinion as expressed at the polls.

3. Secret oath-bound fraternities. It is true that we are told that these fraternities represent all political parties and have nothing to do with party politics. Grant it, but we are not told that, other things being equal, the members of such fraternities will not favor the nomination, election or appointment of a "brother" rather than one who is not a member. It is not in human nature to do otherwise. The history of all such associations in all ages shows this to be true. If it be said that open associations are liable to the same objections, the answer is that open associations are responsible to public opinion. They do not seek to evade that responsibility, but stand or fall as their acts are sustained or disproved Secret societies deny such responsibility. The public are presumed not to know what they do and have no rights of review and remonstrance. Such associations have manifestly a great advantage over those whose works are open and manifest; and they are in great danger of abusing that advantage. It implies no disrespect to the private character of the members of those orders that partiality and favoritism should be shown to each other. It is inherent in the nature of these orders. There were many slaveholders who never consciously wronged a slave, but the evil of that system was the irresponsible power which could be and some times was used in cruelty.

Precisely the same objection holds to all secret associations. They are not responsible to public opinion, are liable to be used for evil purposes and dangerous to the well-being of society.

The practical effect of these orders is seen in the fact that the Freemasons, who number but a little over half a million in this country, and are but as one to twenty of the voters, hold about five-sixths of all the offices of profit and trust. The wonderful growth of Masonry during the last thirty years is believed to be largely due to the fact that it afforded aspiring young men the opportunity for election, appointment, and promotion into which they could not aspire on the ground of personal merit. These fraternities claim to be, and doubtless are, a privileged class, and men join them for the advantages and immunities that they could not otherwise obtain. That members of the Masonic fraternity are sworn to another government and other laws than those of the State, and that therefore they cannot bear true allegiance to both governments is a sufficient, but not the main objection against this order. Do its members constitute a privileged class? Do they seek and hold office because they are members of that class? Do they obtain by favor what others only secure by merit? This is what they claim, and is at least one of the reasons why they expect persons to unite with them. Here then is the greatest obstacle to a reform in the Civil Service. These orders have spread like a net all over the land. They have honey-combed every department of society. Their suppression becomes one of the most important and difficult problems of the Christian and the statesman. Our greatest statesmen have been deeply impressed with this fact. William Wirt, himself a seceded Mason, thought Freemasonry a conspiracy against God and humanity. John Quincy Adams was prepared to demonstrate its incompatibility with both human and divine law. Daniel Webster thought that its obligations and ceremonies ought to be suppressed by law. William H. Seward, Millard Filmore, J. C. Spencer and others declared that in their opinion it trampled on every government it could not control; while Thaddeus Stevens held that by it trial by jury was transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud. To these names may be added those of Chief Justice John Marshall, Richard Rush, Edward Everett, Charles Sumner, and a host of others; and it will be seen that any plan for reform of the Civil Service must of necessity include some plan for the suppression of all privileged classes and all combinations of men who do not acknowledge their responsibility to and challenge public investigation.

U. S. Coast Survey--Truth Survey.

BY GEORGE H. WILLIAMS.

The United States Coast Survey, that great and useful work, has added largely to the safety of navigation on our coasts, and so has been the means of great saving of life and property, besides all its other valuable uses. The first thing in order and in importance in this work was and is a reliable

BASE LINE.

For this the greatest care must be taken, and no expense that is necessary to secure it must be spared. It must be accurately directed towards accurately known points of the compass. It must be exactly level. The curvature of the earth must be accurately taken into account. Without these it could not be reliable, and every triangulation based on it would be unreliable, and would be likely to result in great loss of life and property on water by shipwreck, and in other losses on land. After all, the most nearly perfect base line man ever made falls short of perfection. But the base line which God has given for the SURVEY OF TRUTH—of all that man on earth can survey—physical, mental, moral, spiritual—is absolutely perfect. It required knowledge and wisdom infinitely beyond that of man, to know all the things that must be known and done in order to prepare such a base line. We have it! It is God's Holy Word—the Bible—Jehovah's revelation to man. No survey of truth that is not wholly based on this is reliable. Suppose in the Coast Survey reliance were placed on a base line whose length, direction and straightness were only such as a man, without compass or any instrument to aid him, had determined by his walking several miles over hill, across valley and river and through forest, judging of the distance, direction and straightness by his unaided senses; would that be a reliable base line? Could triangulation based on it be reasonably expected to add to the safety of coast navigation? Of course not.

Well, there are men who say "There is no God;" no intelligent being who has created the infinite universe and who carries on its wonderful works—wonderful in their every detail—wonderful in their greatness, so great; and in their littleness so small, that man's finite powers cannot reach them. Can man comprehend infinite space? On the other hand, can he imagine a bound to space? He will inevitably think of space beyond any bound he can imagine. Can man comprehend an existence that had no beginning? That always was? On the other hand, can he imagine a beginning of all that ever existed? No! Then let man be humble; very humble.

Some of these men who say "There is no God," are noted students of mind (shall I say) and matter. They study intently the wonderful works of God in nature, and yet say these had no intelligent creator. They are called men of science. But they have rejected Jehovah, the infinite Creator, Upholder and Ruler of all, and his true and Holy Word—the revelation of himself, of his works, and of man, man's origin, course and destiny. They have rejected the only and the true and PERFECT BASE LINE for the survey of all these things. Is it any wonder, therefore, that as God's Word expresses it (Rom. 1:22), "Professing themselves to be wise they became fools?" "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God" (Ps. 14:1 and 53:1). The great truth that there is a God who has made all things and upholds all; who is infinitely great, good, wise and merciful, gracious, condescending and who has revealed these things to us in his Word, these men deny. They "hold, hinder, hold down the truth in unrighteousness," (Rom. 1:18). They study "the creation of the world," "the things that are made," by which "His eternal power and godhead are clearly seen, so that they are without excuse," (Rom. 1:20). "Therefore the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against them," (Rom. 1:18). "The Gospel of Christ" which "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Rom. 1:16), being rejected by them, leads to them every other folly, (read Rom. 1:16-22, etc., and 1 Cor. 1:17-31 carefully). Can you make a child believe that a watch had no maker? He is not such a fool as to do that. But these "men of science" can study all creation and say "It has no creator." They say it contrary to the reason God has given them, (Rom. 1:18 22), when they reject God's Word as their Base Line for the Survey of Truth, is it any wonder that they arrive at such follies as this: "Man is descended from a hairy quadruped, furnished with a tail, and pointed ears."—Darwin. (See App. Cyc. vol. 5, p. 697). Or as this: "That which persists unchanging in quantity but ever changing in form, under these sensible appearances which the universe presents to us, transcends human knowledge and conception—is an unknown and unknowable power, which we are obliged to recognize as without limit in space or end in time." This is the sixteenth and last proposition of Herbert Spencer's theory, as summed up by himself. (See App. Cyc. "Evolution," vol. 7, p. 17). According to Spencer the created is infinite and eternal. There is no Creator. A child will not accept such doctrine. It requires a man of science to do that.

An Ancient Poem.

The world is very evil!
The times are waxing late:
Be sober, and keep virgil;
The Judge is at the gate:
The Judge that comes in mercy,
The Judge that comes with might,
To terminate the evil,
To diadem the right.

Arise, arise, good Christian,
Let right to wrong succeed;
Let penitential sorrow
To heavenly gladness lead;
To the light that hath no evening,
That knows nor moon nor sun,
The light so new and golden,
The light that is but one.

And now we fight the battle.
But there shall wear the crown
Of full and everlasting
And passionless renown;
And now we watch and struggle,
And now we live in hope,
And Sion in her anguish
With Babylon must cope.

But He whom now we trust in Shall then be seen and known,
And they that know and see him
Shall have him for their own.
Yes! God my King, my Portion,
In fulness of his grace;
We then shall see forever
And worship face to face.

The Sermon.

PREACHED AT THE UNION SERVICES, SOUTH WORCESTER, NOV. 26TH, BY E. D. BAILEY.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." John 10:1.

The text introduces one of our Lord's parables. The object of this discourse is to explain and apply the parable. To understand it let us draw a mental picture of the SHEEPFOLD.

We will suppose a large area of ground inclosed with a high, circular stone wall—say fifteen feet high. The wall is solid and we will suppose in the first place that there is no door for ingress or egress. Inside of this high inclosure is the kingdom of heaven, outside are those who do not belong to the kingdom. Inside is the throne of God, encircled by the rainbow, surrounded by the twenty-four elders with crowns on their heads and before the throne a large company of the heavenly host.

The wall of the sheepfold represents the law of God. Formerly there were no persons outside of the wall, but at some time in past ages our progenitors transgressed God's law and thus took their places outside of the kingdom. It is the race to which we belong that rebelled against God and we are therefore outside of his kingdom.

Infinite love however has yearned after us and desired to open a door in the solid wall by which we might return again to the blessed privileges of the kingdom. The Lord Jesus Christ is the DOOR.

When, at his crucifixion, the vail of the temwas rent, it signified that a door had been opened for us to return to the kingdom. It would not answer to break down the whole wall and permit a promiscuous return of the corrupt, degraded, rebellious people of earth, but the Lord himself stands in the door to see that all are properly cleansed and submissive in spirit, in order that heaven may not be unheavened, a receptacle for the filth of earth. When men come to the door they are clothed in filthy garments. The first thing noticeable about those who seek to enter in is that they all despise God and wholesome law. There seems to be an innate hatred for whatever God commands. Of course persons with such feelings are in no condition to be taken into the kingdom. Some come to the door clothed in adultery, some stained with murder, some are drunkards, some thieves, some forgers; but some come tolerably free from these things, but very proud and entertaining no love for God.

Of course a radical change must be wrought in all these. The Lord tells them all to cast off their filthy garments. That is what we mean by REPENTANCE.

Men must cease from sin, from rebellion, before they can be clothed in the proper habiliments of saints The Lord Jesus stands at the door and insists on the first and important step. We cannot follow all the details, but after repentance, they must all exercise faith which implies allegiance to God and his law, after which they are regenerated, sanctified and admitted into the kingdom, cleansed from all the corruption of their long night of rebellion.

You will readily see, dear friends, the absolute necessity that all men should pass through this one door. The work of preparing men for heaven was committed to Christ and nobody can be prepared who does not stand meekly before him and do his commandments. All who try to attain heaven by some other means are

THIEVES AND ROBBERS.

They are robbing the Lord Jesus Christ of the honor due him for opening the door, they are robbing God of the expression of sorrow due to him, after so long insulting him; they are robbing the law of the homage which alone which would be a guarantee of future good intentions; in short they are showing the same contempt for the kingdom of heaven which their progenitors showed when they were cast out. With such a spirit, with such feelings, justice and reason demand that they should still be excluded.

If you look along the wall of the sheepfold you will see a lot of on which these thieves and robbers are attempting to elude the door and the door-keeper and climb into the kingdom. These ladders are labeled, "Unitarianism," "Universalism," "Concord School of Philosophy," "Culture," "Wealth," "Freemasonry," "Odd-fellowship" and such like,—all human devices for ignoring Christ, cheating God, and entering heaven with waving banners.

If an angel were to stand at the top of each ladder, he would see strange sights and hear curious doctrines. Here comes up one man whose coat is made of philosophy, whose hat is rhetoric, whose pants are logic and whose boots are made of science (falsely so-called.) When asked what he thinks of Christ, his lip curls contemptuously and he haughtily replies that he was probably a very good man but Socrates and Emerson were greater philosophers. These men are not submissive to God's law; there is in them a proud spirit of rebellion, couched under subtle philosophy. They have never repented, they have never paid allegiance to God in the person of Jesus Christ, their hearts have never been cleansed.

Jesus Christ is the way, the door, yet these men utterly refuse their homage and build ladders by which they hope to enter the kingdom. Every human organization, every Satanic worship, every false system of philosophy, has had this one characteristic, of robbing Christ of the position to which, for necessary reasons, he has been exalted. Were it not for these false worships, the work of converting men would progress rapidly, but these satanic devices deceive men and beget in them false hopes, never to be realized.

This fact explains the real purpose of all these ladders. Those who are climbing up some other way are said in the parable to have come only

TO STEAL, KILL AND DESTROY.

This shows that the persons meant in this description are considered by the Lord unsafe to have in the kingdom. When men talk about universal salvation they do not consider the greatness of the conspiracy against God and human happiness. The problem of saving a sinful people without endangering the kingdom is a problem worthy of divine wisdom, surpassing human skill. We may well consider that when God opens one door and only one, there is wisdom in the statement and his plan is not to be trifled with. In the plan of salvation Jesus has a two-fold office and in the parable he develops this fact. He is not only the door by which we must enter the sheepfold, but he is also who tenderly guards those who enter. He admits us, but he also leads us "into green pastures and beside the still waters." Of course those who climb up some other way would never be willing to be held by him and this constitutes a valid reason why they cannot be admitted to the fold over which he presides. "The willing and obedient" will be teachable, submissive, affectionate followers; all others would be interlopers. The Lord conveys to our minds the tender love exercised for us when he says: "The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." Surely the love of Christ ought to constrain us. No other being has ever manifested an equal interest our welfare, no other being ever gave his life for us, no other being ever offered pardon so freely, no other being ever gave such "great and precious promises" to his rebellious subjects.

This parable seems to me to render very clear the whole plan of salvation. We see the inside of heaven, we see ourselves outside, we see Christ opening the door and standing therein to receive our words of penitence and submission, we see him insisting upon repentance and obediance, offering robes of righteousness for our filthy garments; we see him adopting us into the kingdom and feeding us ever after; we see also his enemies, unsubmissive, dishonest, insulting, proud, deceptive, climbing up some other way. All this the parable brings vividly to our minds and thus pictorially lays before us the important features of Christ's kingdom. I cannot conclude without calling your attention to the two most prominent

FACTS OF THE BIBLE.

The great curse of human society is false worship: The chief characteristics of all false philosophies, or worships, are a set of spurious ceremonies, coupled with a promise of heaven in consideration of fidelity to these mummeries, with no repentance and without obedience to God. God appeared in the person of Christ to be acknowledged as the Great Head of the universe. The true worship acknowledges Christ, but all false systems ignore him and teach the people to depend upon human ceremonies for salvation. The contrast between true and false worship is the leading feature of the parable. "There is no other name, under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved."

REFORM STORY.

Holden with Cords.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LITTLE PEOPLE," "A SUNNY LIFE," ETC.

Chapter XXXIV—One More Unfortunate.

Mr. Simon Peck's establishment consisted of a small grocery store with two or three untidy rooms in the rear, where every article in the canon of a good housewife was persistently set at nought. Mrs. Simon Peck was a woman with thin yellow hair done up in perpetual curl papers and a general appearance suggestive of washed out calico. Of the younger Pecks the less said the better. They were all that might be expected however, considering their parentage and training.

This man belonged to Fidelity lodge, and low as was his social standing compared with Colonel Montfort and others of its leading members, he held a very important office therein which was that of general toady as well as a most convenient catspaw for any species of dirty work with which the Colonel did not care to soil his aristocratic fingers. This satellitic intimacy with the great men of the lodge had caused Mr. Peck to advance considerably in his own good opinion, for with the usual obtuseness of toadies he never seemed to suspect the real grounds on which it was based; and set on by the powerful clique before mentioned he contrived in a variety of ways —none of which were very agreeable to a sensitive and finely strung spirit—to throw contempt on the authority of the Master of the lodge by sly, underhand methods of attack, much more annoying than open warfare.

"But were there no good men in Fidelity lodge?" inquires the reader. Assuredly there were, but of these many had fallen into that habit of non-attendance which certainly has illustrious prestige in George Washington's example, not to mention later worthies to whom the lodge proudly points as "distinguished Masons;" while those who remained wielded no influence worth speaking of. Thus it will be seen that Anson Lovejoy in his attempts to mold the lodge after his own high Masonic standard was not a whit better off than if he had stood entirely alone.

It was not often that I patronized Mr. Peck's counter, but one morning I was in a hurry and stepped in there for some article indispensable to the kitchen economy which had been overlooked in making ont the usnal household list of necessaries.

Mary, who sometimes waited on customers, went behind the counter and weighed out the pound of bread soda for which I called. I could not help noting as she did so her expression of silent misery and dejection. My heart ached for her. Is it possible, I thought, that in the loving providence of the All-wise Father some lives must ever remain like the unsunned tiger lilies to which Rachel in one of those gleams of poetic sentiment, that we so often see flash across the most common sense and practical nature, had likened her? But all I could do was to drop a pleasant word as she handed me the brown paper parcel, little thinking that when I saw that face again the great Eternal Mystery would have set on every feature its awful seal of silence and separation never to be broken by human blame or pity.

I laid the package down on the kitchen table where Rachel stood rolling out pies and superintending the oven from which several comely brown loaves had just emerged.

"I wonder if that Mary Lyman isn't in some kind of trouble," I said. "Her face really haunts me, she looked so wretched. Of conrse I couldn't say anything to her, but a real good motherly woman like you might find out what the matter is and perhaps help her."

Rachel filled a pie thoughtfully and ornamented the edges with elaborate care. I felt that there was something behind her silence and waited patiently till the revelation should come. She put her pie in the oven and proceeded to roll out another before she spoke, and then it was to make an inquiry not apparently connected with the subject.

"I have heard you speak once or twice of a certain Mr. Jervish, a friend of Colonel Montfort's. What do you know about him in particular?"

"Well nothing in particular, but in general I should call him an nnmitigated son of Belial. However, he has got policy enough to keep his vices pretty well under the surface, and so he gets admitted freely into good society, as such men usually do, and no questions asked. Why?"

"It may not be true what I have heard, what I suspect, but if it is"—and Rachel stood erect with firm set lips and flashing eyes—"if it is, I do not want any further proof that the Bible doctrine of everlasting punishment is the right one."

For a moment I felt stunned. Pity, shame, abhorrence of the wretch who had wrought such sacreligious ruin of one of God's fairest hnman temples struggled together in contending tides of feeling. They who think it strange that in the Apocalypse the Halleluias of God's saints are represented as rising joyous and triumphant in sight of the smoke of eternal burnings have snrely never felt as I did at that moment—glad from my very soul that there is such an awful place of retribution where the punishment which society fails to mete out for crimes like this shall at last be visited upon the evil doer.

"As she doesn't happen to be a Mason's wife or daughter," said Rachel bitterly, "her destroyer will go scot free as far as the lodge is concerned. Ministers of the gospel will call him 'brother' all the same; and when he dies they'll drop their sprig of evergreen into the grave and make a prayer to the Supreme Architect of the Universe, and he'll be all right for the Grand Lodge above. I tell you I'm sick at heart when I think of it."

And Rachel scraped up her dough and pnt it back in the pan for a Saturday pie, and the clock ticked away in the corner, and the sunshine stole in with a fresh breeze to bear it company; and everything went on precisely the same as if the world had no such awful abyss of sin and sorrow as that which had now opened before us.

"But this poor fatherless, motherless girl," I said at last. Can't we do anything to help her. We believe in Christ's way of treating the fallen and not in society's way. Let us show our faith by our deeds."

"Well, father," said Rachel with a softened voice. "I'm snre I'm willing to try, I've been thinking it over. I don't just see my way clear yet; but I shall of course, I always do."

Which was no unfounded boast. Rachel's "thinking," as with most persons of her positive temperament usually resulted in very energetic action. For just as soon as the pies and cakes were out of the oven and cool ng on the pantry table she put on her bonnet and stepped across to the Peck's back yard where a kitchen garden flourished as well as it could under adverse circumstances. Here among trailing vines of cucumbers and tomato and summer squash, Mary was picking vegetables for dinner; and shi lded from sight of the house by a long row of bean poles, Rachel went and knelt down by the side of the surprised girl, and without the slightest circumvolution inquired gently but fi.mly—

"Mary, I want to know if this story I have heard about you is true. If you say 'No,' I shall believe you and rejoice. But tell me the truth."

Now if Rachel had not been kind in days before—if she had not manifested by word and look that she felt a true womanly interest in the bound girl who lived at the Peck's she never could have taken this poor erring human heart by storm as she did.

Mary looked up quickly, colored and burst into tears.

"Mrs. Severns," she said wildly, "I am going to drown myself. I thought it all over last night, but I couldn't make up my mind. There is no place in the world for me, there never was and it is the best thing I can do."

Rachel quietly took the two hands down from the averted face, and held them fast in her own cool grasp.

"Don't talk that way, Mary. God has raised you up two friends in Mr. Severns and I. We are going to do all we can for you. Don't add sin to sin by destroying yourself, and remember, another life with your's."

"What is the use of yonr talking to me?" said the girl turning in a kind of fierce despair. "Why don't you let me alone?"

"Because I have no right to let you alone, and because there is hope for you yet. Satan may tell you there is none, but don't harken to his lie. There is a place for repentance—at the feet of him who said to a sinner of old time who had fallen lower than you, 'Go, and sin no more.' "

So Rachel talked, strong, brave, Christ-like words, till Mary ceased weeping, and it seemed as though a faint, pale rainbow of real hope had begun to span the gulf of her shame and despair. And then Rachel, rising up from her lowly position behind the bean poles went home feeling as I think one of God's angels must returning from some errand of celestial pity to a siuning soul of this lower world.

"Father," she said after dinner, "I have been thinking of Aunt Faith. That would be just the place for Mary if I can get her taken in there; and I feel sure I can; so if you will just have the wagon harnessed up I'll go right over and see her this very afternoon."

Now Aunt Faith was an elderly Quakeress, a kind of uncommissioned Sister of Mercy who knew nothing of training schools or any of the organized systems of charity, but worked independently of all these on a system of her own, which upon critical examination, might be found to be quite as near the New Testament pattern; and here, as Rachel said, was exactly the refuge the poor girl needed; rest from the strife of tongues, shelter for the present, and counsel for the future; and more than all else, a living daily manifestation of the great pitiful Christ Heart, breathing in every movement of Aunt Faith's motherly person, every fold of her Quaker gray dress that partook as little of this world's fashions as if it had been a kind of spiritual emanation, like the mantle of meakness and charity made visible to mortal eyes in tangible form and material.

"Don't thee worry, friend Rachel;" she said. "The poor soul shall have all needed care. Nor do I want thy thanks. It is for the dear Lord's sake I do it, as thee very well knows."

Rachel had one more task before her, and that was to acquaint Mary with what had been done, and arrange for her speedy departure from the Peck household. Though not remiss in neighborly offices she had never cared to be on visiting terms with Mrs. Peck, and shrank from what she foresaw would be likely to prove a disagreeable interview. It was late when we reached home, but early next morning Rachel went over feeling that the sooner the business was accomplished the better.

She saw nothing of Mary. Mrs. Peck with profuse welcomes and many apologies—neither of which Rachel heeded—took her into the dirty, disordered sitting room. She looked disturbed, but perhaps it was only the perturbation caused by Rachel's unexpected visit.

"I came to have some talk with you about your girl Mary," said the latter. "I don't see her about, where is she?"

"She's gone off. I hai'nt seen her myself since last night."

"Gone off! Where to?" asked Rachel, startled with a horrible fear as she remembered Mary's wild words the day before.

"That's more than I know, where to. But she'll never come back here, the baggage," answered Mrs. Peck, flushing with virtuons indignation, "after disgracing herself and all the rest of us as she has, I don't want her in my family again."

Now if Rachel had not been so strongly possessed with the idea that Mary had destroyed herself she might have suspected that Mrs. Peck lied in thus denying all knowledge of her where abouts. As it was, the shock with which she first heard the news gave place to a sudden revulsion of feeling. She felt a real antipathy to the woman, and before leaving the house she emptied several vials of very righteous wrath on the head of Mrs. Peck who she rightfully averred had taken Mary to be a mere household drudge, had tanght her nothing, and was therefore responsible in no small degree for her lapse from virtue.

Mrs. Peck was angry at first, then took the other tack so common with women of her shallow temperament, and cried; but Rachel, sublimely indifferent to both tears and anger, rose np and went her way sick of soul as she saw all her well-laid plans thus suddenly brought to nought.

Why, O why must it be that the good angels are so often thwarted in this blessed ministry by the satanic wiles of some opposing spirit of evil? Why must the craft and guile of the old Serpent be allowed to drag back to destruction a soul that was almost saved?

Several days passed during which we heard nothing of the unfortunate girl, but the fact that a closely covered carriage had been seen to stop at the Peck's the night she was missing, and then drive rapidly off in the dusk was a coincidence remembered by one or two people when the subject began to be inquired into. And it was believed that she had gone off of her own voluntary will. But where? and with whom? Questions which it is reserved for the next chapter to answer.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited. E. D. BAILEY, N .E. Sec.

Stellar Theology and Masonic Astronomy.

This is the title of a new book lately issued by a high Mason, published by D. Appleton & Co., in defence of Freemasonry. The author demonstrates conclusively that nearly all of the ritual and symbolism of Freemasonry is derived from the ancient system of sun-worship. We hope hereafter to present some of the new and striking proofs addnced by the author. He maintains his position clearly and ably.

This is the position now taken by the best Masonic writers. It would be humiliating to the nominally Christian portion of the lodge to learn that the ceremonies they have passed thronph were all borrowed from ancient idol worship if their consciences had not become fully hardened to all sense of shame.

ONCE A MASON ALWAYS A MASON.

The doctrine of the perseverance of the saints is a fundamental doctrine in the creed of the Mason. There is no such thing as "falling from grace" when once a member bound his soul with the oaths of Masonry and had his name written on a lodge roll. He may hold ever so contrary opinions, but when he is once in he can never get out. So says the "law and the prophets" of the secret lodge.

It is unlike anything upon the face of the earth. A man may join any manner of open club or society and yet be tired or disgusted and leave. He may forsake his native conntry and promise allegiance to another, and the land of his birth can have no control over him. He may belong first to one political party and then to another—a Democrat to-day a Republican to-morrow—and hold himself bound to neither. He may sever the most sacred of human relations and break every promise and vow he ever made, and the divorce court will sanction it.

He may go further. He may join a church, profess and really possess a living faith and then tnrn away from his brethren, break his solemn covenant, cast off the obligations of his vows, reject the name he once professed to love, and the Word of God declares that he will be "as a heathen man and a publican" to his former brethren.

But to a man who, with conscience purified and vision cleared to see the evils that are done under the cover of secrecy, is seeking to free himself from their power, the lodge says these words: "The covenant is irrevocable. Even though a Mason may be suspended or expelled, though he may withdraw from the lodge, journey into countries where Masons can not be fonnd, or become a subject of despotic governments that persecute, or a communicant of bigoted churches that denounce Masonry, he cannot cast off or nullify his Masonic covenant. No law of the land can affect it—no anathema of the church weaken it. It is irrevocable."

Such is the declaration of a human organization that exalts its assumed authority above all obligations a man may have to his family, his fellow beings, his country or his God. By what right or authority do they do this, and who gave them this authority?

The South Worcester Chapel.

Last Spring the friends of the union mission in South Worcester purchased a lot, on the corner of Southbridge and Princeton Sts., for a new chapel, the lot costing $625. The prospect of raising money for a chapel was not very flattering, but with persistent effort it was done and a neat chapel has been erected at a total cost of nearly $1,800, making a total expenditure of nearly $2,400. At this writing there is a deficit of about $200, and an effort is being made to raise that amount and dedicate it, free of debt Dec. 31st.

The building is 30 by 50, built and finished in modern style, the roof being very steep. There is an entry projection in front 6 by 13. On the back end there are two small rooms for prayermeeting and Sunday School purposes, with an outside entry on the south side. The seating capacity of the andience room is 250. The S. S. at present numbers over 100 scholars. Mr. Henry Branon has been the chairman of the building committee and deserves much credit for the diligence with which he has prosecuted the work. The congregations are composed of persons from different denominations who work together with delightfnl harmony.

It is believed that a strong reform society will grow up here, prosecuting the work of the Master faithfnlly and reflecting the light of the pure Gospel.

The Washburn Hall Services.

A new depsrtnre has been made in the Sunday evening meetings at Washburn Hall. A number of earnest Christian workers have undertaken to make the meeting a strong Evangelistic reform meeting in which special effort should be constantly made to gather in the non-church-going portion of our citizens. The new movement meets with general favor and has had an auspicious opening. There are many men and women in the city who desire to see a reformation but the obstacles have seemed insnrmountable. This meeting will furnish all such persons an opportunity to join with others in a struggle against popular sins, in favor of godliness.

The speaking will be largely done by capable laymen and women upon whom the Lord has put his Spirit. The singing will be in the hands of a capable leader and the one object always uppermost will be the conversion of the unconverted. The location is the most favorable in the city for reaching the people and there is little doubt that much good will result from these efforts. People from different denominations are interested in the work.

Food for Thought.

The following figures are clipped from the Odd-fellows' Register:

"During the sixty years of its existence, the records of Odd-fellowship show the number of persons admitted to the order to be 1,200,000; that of this great army 460,000 are now in the ranks, while 90,000 have been severed from connection by death. The balance, some 650,000 or about 54 per cent. of all initiated have dropped out, after holding an average membership of seven years."

It will be noticed first that the army of initiates (1,200,000) is immense. It will also be noticed that more than half drop out after a short trial of the order. This is inconceivable if the advantages of the order were so great as they are popularly supposed to be. The same paper states that "the withdrawals, suspensions, and initiations practically change the composition of the fraternity every twelve years." That is, every seven years more than half of the entire membership withdraw in disgust, and in five years more the remaining portion do likewise, so that on an average the order falls into new hands every twelve years.

This would be a very hopeful announcement if all who withdraw were thereby freed from the chains of the order, but this is not the fact. Unless the withdrawers are willing to breast unrelenting persecution they are compelled to continue a quasi endorsement of the order. Their obligation is still binding and under this vow of secrecy the order continues to prey upon human credulity and dnpe the uninformed. There is no way to destroy it but to publish the facts.

—There is a poor man is this city who is a benevolent society in himself. Having a family of his own and only his daily wages for support he nevertheless finds ways to help the poor and suffering. He carries a pail of coal or a loaf of bread from his own stores, collects little sums of money to pay doctors' bills, or reports cases that he cannot help. He has been a friend in need to many of the suffering poor who had no one to help them.

REFORM NEWS.

The Fairfield, Iowa, Meeting.

The Fairfield local association called a meeting January 8th. But on account of the week of prayer a postponement has been made until Monday evening, January 22d, when an effort will be made to have Elder Rathbun present and secure a large attendance. Friends throughout Jefferson county are all requested to be present at this meeting.

Report the Lectures.

EDITOR CYNOSURE :—I wish to repeat in your paper the request I have made in the Iowa American. The editors of that small but ambitions sheet do not feel themselves capable of making even two columns profitable for the cause, unless they have the co-operation of friends in other parts of the State. Our lecturer is hard at work, but we receive no tidings except through your paper. Now we wish to have some friend in every place where he lectures, send us a short account of the impression made, and any circumstances which may interest the general reader. At least send a postal, stating the fact that he did lecture at such a time, in such a place. Send us the reports. Direct, "Editor Iowa American, College Springs, Page county, Iowa." H. AVERY.

Is There any Help for the Widow's Son.

Yes we are coming! Never did he need help more. Fonl deeds of fifty six years are resnrrected and hover of like accusing ghosts aronnd the Masonic culprit. Hundreds of thousands of ears have been forced open and millions of "silent tongues' started into motion by the sworn testimony of a great man on his bed of death. Something must be done to fill the wasting ranks of the Masonic fraternity. Hear them, ye sons of Hiram!

On the 26th day of January, A. D. 5883, or A. D. 1883, in Clifford, Snsqnehanna Co., Pa., 7 o'clock in the evening, a degree meeting will be opened in due form and order by S. E. Starry of Iowa. Brother Starry is a young, "bright Mason,' and will knock light into Hiram in the most ancient and scientific form. He is cool, brave and generons and can play the W. M. well. This movement is designed to inangurate a campaign for N. E. Pennsylvania of some length. Let all true Masons, that is, those with the prefix Anti, "take heed and govern themselves accordingly." N. CALLENDER, COR. SEC.

The Outlook for Illinois.

The Executive Committee of tbe Illinois Christian Association has held two meetings lately, and have put in order plans for a good work in the State during the year.

Rev. Joseph Travis, of the Free Methodist, is chairman of the committee, and W. I. Phillips, secretary. The secretary with Mrs. E. A. Cook and Mrs. D. P Baker are a committee on districting the State; H. L. Kellogg, committee on raising funds for State work, and the two committees are entrnsted with the matter of securing a State lecturer.

The plan proposed is, in brief, this: A lecturer is to be secured for so long a time as possible. To co-operate with and aid him a chair man is to be appointed in each of the twenty Congressional districts of the State. He will assist the lecturer so far as in his power in arranging meetings, and will secure all the auxsilary aid possible from friends in the district, especially in getting speakers from among the ministers, lawyers, teachers, farmers or others who will deliver addresses in connection with the State lecturer at different points in the Congressional district. It is hoped that by this plan of co-operation a large number of addresses may be given and the interest of both speakers and hearers in the reform be greatly augmented.

Correspondence has been already begun with Bro. S. E. Starry in regard to taking up of the State work. As he will be passing through Illinois soon on his way East, we expect soon to learn what arrangement will be fully agreed upon.

Sister Reforms.

Temperance, The Religious Amendment and Anti-Ledgery.

MORNING SUN, Iowa, Dec. 21, 1882.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—As you publish a reform journal, and favor the cause of temperance and national reform as well as anti-secrecy, I propose to furnish you an item under each of these heads.

We are rejoicing in what we hope is a complete victory over the saloon business in Morning Sun. During the summer and fall there were two saloons here. Both were doing a thriving business, and drunkenness had become common. We have had a prohibitory town ordinance for years, but it was not enforced. Last month some of the citizens took the matter in hand; the proprietors of both saloons were arrested under the law which declares as a nuisance "houses where drunkenness, fighting, quarreling and other breaches of the peace are carried on." The proof was abundant; the proprietors were found guilty, assessed fines and costs and the nuisances abated. So far as I can learn there has been no liquor sold here for about one month. Whether the Supreme Court declares the amendment constitutional or not we hope to have prohibition in Morning Sun.

A convention in the interest of national reform was held here this week. There were four sessions beginning Monday evening. The Rev. James Duncan of Cedar Rapids presided. There were three formal addresses; the first by the Rev. R. C. Wylie, district secretary, on "The Philosophy of the National Reform Movement," the second by the Rev. T. P. Robb on "The Aims of the Movement," and the third by the Rev. James Duncan on "The Sabbath Question." These addresses were attentively listened to by good audiences. Besides these there were devotional exercises, resolutions and brief talks on the matter in hand, all of which were interesting and profitable. We had expected others to make set addresses, but failed to secure them, nevertheless the conventien was a success.

One thing was developed in working up the convention, namely, that the members and friends of secret societies are very shy of national reform. One minister, a member of a secret society, declined to sign the call; another in a neighboring town said: "If national reform includes opposition to secret societies, the M. E. church will have nothing to do with it." The National Reform Association has not yet put an anti-secrecy plank in its platform, although every active worker in the cause, is, so far as I know anything about them, opposed to secret societies. The omission is, I suppose, for policy, but the "policy" does not much profit the cause. True, some secret society men have been persuaded to address national reform conventions, but the fact has grieved at least as many as it has gained. Discerning men, even in the lodge, see that the principles of national reform are in direct opposition to secrecy. Let these principles prevail and secrecy will be proscribed by law. Members of secret societies may give a quasi-endorsement of national reform, but it is idle to expect that those who deny Christ Jesus in the lodge will be earnest in seeking to honor him in the nation.

You noticed, not long since, that I had addressed an "open letter" to a certain pastor here, asking him to justify his connection with the G. A. R. The stress of the letter was laid on the fact that secrecy is condemned by the words of Christ. I also referred to the ritual, making some quotations from a copy published by E. A. Cook, as to the manner of initiation and the oath, and asking him to justify himself in taking part in such things. The person addressed has maintained "a dignified silence." A citizen, who is a member of the order, has come out and denied the authenticity of the ritual. Another member has admitted to me that it may have been the ritual once, but says it is not now. If there has been a change, can any one furnish me a copy of the present ritual? The subject of secrecy is still being agitated through our local paper, and we have this evidence that good is coming out of it, some ex-soldiers are confirmed in their resolution to keep out of the G. A. R. and all other secret societies. So far as publicly known the G. A. R. has failed to get enough members to organize a post here. At all events they are keeping very quiet. And now comes a man from Washington (Iowa) to organize "a lodge of the Iowa Legion of Honor," whatever that may be. What is it? All I know of it is that is a secret society with a mutual insurance attachment. It is evident the devil has not given up Morning Sun yet. May God give all his people grace to resist him, and then we know he will flee from us. C. D. TRUMBULL.

P. S.—Dec. 22. The Herald, received to-day, announces that Chas. W. Fish, of Newton, the mustering officer of the G. A. R., will be here to-day to muster in the Morning Sun Post. They will start with twenty-eight members. All I have to say is may their days be few.

Whisky and Freemasonry.

LOSTANT, Ill.

Next day after the late fall election a Tonica Mason staggered into Lostant and expatiated to some of our citizens at considerable length upon the past and present prospects of Anti-masonry. "Anti-masonry is not as strong as it was" when Morgan was killed, said he, addressing a prominent Anti-mason.

"Then you killed Morgan, did you?" replied his opponent.

"No! No!! No!!! I did not say the Masons killed Morgan," shouted the Tonica man in great confusion, blushing deeply from the combined influences of bad whisky and telling the truth. That is a thing that is sure to bring great remorse to a Masonic conscience—telling the truth we mean.

"Yes but the Masons did kill Morgan," firmly remarked an influential, gray-headed citizen who has a distinct recollection of the Morgan excitement. How quick these stripling Masons collapse before such a witness!

"Just think of it," continued the son of Hiram completely losing his jewel, "you have thrown away $2,500 building a monument to that perjured villian. Immortalized a man for breaking his oath." Even bad whisky is sometimes good for medical purposes. It made this Mason tell the truth twice—that Morgan told the truth about Masonry, and that the Masons killed him for it. The peace of the "brethren" around Lostant was greatly disturbed for the balance of that day. A Mason had told the truth. What could be done to counteract it? Well of course that was easily done to the satisfaction of Masons. They would all just tell a lie.

Dear reader, did you ever see and hear a Mason laugh a lie? Did you ever notice that distressing, hideous, hypocritical, idiotic grin, accompanied with a hollow, deathlike guffaw, that a Mason gives when the truth is told about Masonry, or some bad thing which a Mason has done? That is an accomplishment which every well regulated Mason must possess. By the use of it he expects to make great impressions. He expects people will not believe the truth about Masonry when told in his presence, simply because he laughs like an idiot. All the laughing that Masons can do to the end of time will not "conceal" the damning deed of Morgan's murder.

The Masons made a feeble effort to counteract the work of the American party last fall in this section. They employed a "Jack" to act as scribe and recklessly turned him loose in the columns of a local paper. They will never do that again here. "Pills" met with a sad fate. Like all hirelings of the lodge, he found an early grave. "Quartette," his opponent, asked him a great many pointed questions which "Pills" owners would not allow him to answer. The editor had great compassion and let "Pills" down gently by telling us it is no place to discuss the subject of secret societies in a local paper. Considering that "Pills," as a spokesman for the lodge, made an open attack against anti-secretism and then backed down from a discussion, we claimed that a victory was gained. "Pills" attack on anti-secretism was caused by the advocates of the American platform inviting the Prohibitory party to co-operate with them in the election of public officers. He claimed that nine-tenths of the prohibitionists are secretists and that it therefore would be impracticable to unite the two parties. Since secret societies are about as great an evil as drinking saloons it is evident that secretists, as such, cannot do any efficient work in suppressing saloons. "If Satan cast out Satan, his kingdom cannot stand." The Masonic lodge in Lostant has "played the dog in the manger" until the cause of temperance is seemingly dead. "Rule or ruin" is the motto of Freemasons. Everything that cannot be made to serve the lodge must die.

OCCASIONAL.

Relief for Honest Members of the Craft.

It is said that it is the oath or obligation which makes the Mason. This being true, when that obligation ceases to be of binding force, then the party obligated becomes free. In a contract, according to law, the party of the first part cannot hold the party of the second part to the agreement when he, the party of the first part, fails to fulfill his part in said contract. The veriest school-boy knows this principle of law. The obligation is taken conditionally. The Worshipful Master, acting for the lodge, says in substance as every well-informed Mason is aware, these words, or nearly these, to the candidate: "You are now about to take upon you a solemn oath or obligation, which I assure you upon the honor of a man and a Mason shall in no way conflict with any of the exalted duties you owe to yourself, your family, your country, or your God."

Now my honest brother look at that again and tell me if, after taking the oath which follows this agreement by the party of the first part, you can be held when you find that to fulfill on your part, will conflict with your own private interests, your family interests, your duty to your country or your God. I tell you, you are free after such finding. The highest court of the land would declare you free. It is as though the candidate kneeling upon his bare knees had actually said in every separate clause of his obligation, "Furthermore do I promise and swear that, if its performance does not conflict as per agreement of the Worshipful Master, I will do thus and so," according to the wording of the oath, "and if it does conflict I will not; but from that moment shall consider this promise no longer of binding force upon me." The matter is as clear as day-light, and there are hundreds of honest men who would gladly shake off the galling oppression of the lodge and be free as they were when first they entered upon life's duties. Like Catholicism, Masonry aims to keep its members in the darkness of ignorance. But light is coming and with it relief to honest Masons in distress. Come out and teach your sons and daughters too, to beware of the trap. Say, in the language of David, "The snare is broken and we are escaped."

Our Mail.

S. G. Thomas, Olathe, Kan.:

"Your senior editor gave us some grand lectures to crowded houses in Olathe. I am working for the Cynosure and hope to add more names to this club by and by."

He sends a club of ten for a year each.

S. A. Reynolds, Waverly, Pa.:

"I am in hearty sympathy with the tone of your paper on all the issues of the day."

W. B. Loomis, Howell, Mich.:

"I remember the Morgan excitement and have been opposed to secret orders ever since."

Stephen Wright, Glens Falls, N. Y.:

"Our village paper the Messenger, published Thurlow Weed's letter in full."

F. L. Garrison, Fountain, Dakota:

"The secret orders are gaining strength very fast at our county seat.

Davis H. Seamans, Factoryville Pa.:

"I am not discouraged. Feel that I am in a righteous cause and ere long the blessing will come if we only hold out faithful."

W. J. Knappen, Jenningsville Pa.:

"I think people do not wish to know much about the secret orders."

Elbert Marcy; Emporia; Kansas:

"We have just closed a very profitable convention here and have great reason to believe it has done much good. The Cynosure like my religion, grows better and better; and my prayer is that it may continue so until all secret societies may be destroyed root and branch from the face of the earth."

L. B. Lathrop, Hollister, California:

"I would like a cut of Morgan's monument large enough for a parlor ornament, say two by three feet; containing the inscription either on the monument or under it."

Mrs. S. B. Hart, Olathe, Kansas:

"Freemasonry is gaining ground in England and but few know anything of its real character.

LESSON 2, January 14, 1883—THE DESCENDING SPIRIT.—Acts ii. 1-16.

(1) And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they they were all with one accord in one place. (2) And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled the house where they were sitting. (3) And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. (4) And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. (5) And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. (6) Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language. (7) And they were all amazed and marveled, saying one to another, Behold are not all these which speak Galileans. (8) And now hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born? (9) Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, Pontus, and Asia. (10) Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes: (11) Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongue the wonderful works of God. (12) And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, What meaneth this? (13) Others mocking said, These men are full of new wine. (14) But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said unto them, Ye men of Judea and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my word: (15) For these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day. (16) But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel.

SUGGESTIONS TO TEACHERS.

Children are usually fond of gifts. Many of them have New Year's gifts, which they prize very highly. From this teachers may lead them up to the great theme of this lesson, viz., Christ's best gift to the church—the Holy Spirit. The lesson teaches, 1. What means we must use to obtain the gift; 2. It reveals the gift itself; 3. The effects which flow from it. The means, united, fervent, persevering prayer. The gift, the Holy Spirit. The effects, disciples furnished as witnesses for Christ, worldly men filled with wonder, and the light of the gospel shed abroad. The miraculous elements of the day of Pentecost are now withheld, but the gracious influences are yet to be obtained by the same means and will be followed with the same effects substantially.

V. 1. When the day of Pentecost was fully come—this was the anniversary of the giving of the law on Mt. Sinai. Then God's law was written on tables of stone: now, by the gift of the Holy Spirit, it is written on the fleshy tables of living hearts. They were all with one accord in one place. It is not enough for disciples to meet together. They should settle all their disagreements, or cast them to the winds and be of one mind. The very act of meeting together for prayer tends to draw souls closer together. It also increases faith, love and zeal. If we want to kindle a fire we rake the coals together. "See that ye forsake not the assembling of yourselves together."

Vs. 2, 3. There came a sound from heaven. The baptism of the Holy Ghost was thus proven by two sensible signs—sound and sight. This was needed to confirm the faith of disciples and to revive their hearts. Joseph sent wagons from Egypt for his father, the very sight of which revived his drooping spirits. These two witnesses, sight and sound, gave the disciples the full assurance of faith and sense.

V. 4 And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak . . . as the Spirit gave them utterance. This much of these words we may apply to ourselves. He does not now apply the miraculous gift of tongues. There is no need for this. Men and women can master the language of the people to whom they are sent as missionaries. Indeed, those who have been in foreign fields say that it is a good thing that they cannot talk to the natives when they first go out. The customs of nations are so very different that they would make many mistakes at first that would prejudice hearts against them. But while learning a vocabulary they learn also much about the people to whom they are sent, and can therefore address them with better judgment. There is no need for the gift of tongues, for the printed Bible can be placed in the hands of the people. It is now translated, in whole or part, into 226 languages and dialects.

It is still true, however, that we can speak efficiently for Christ only "as the Spirit gives us utterance:"

"We must be true ourselves if we the truth would teach;
Our own souls must overflow, if we another's soul would reach;
It needs the overflow of soul to give the heart full speech."

V. 5. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem, Jews, devout men, out of every nation. Now we see that the very restrictions which were placed about the word and worship of God in olden times serve to scatter the seed when the "fulness of time is come." These restrictions required that all male Jews go up to Jerusalem to worship three times a year. We would say that it would have been better to establish a temple in every city or center where they went. But now, in accordance with this law, Jews are assembled at Jerusalem out of every nation. There they hear the gospel. When they go to their homes they carry the seed of the gospel with them. God never makes mistakes. It is always better by far to walk according to his Word.

V. 12. They said one to another, What meaneth this? And so men ask in wonder now when they see the effects of grace in the heart and life. When they see men and women turning their backs upon home comforts and joys, trampling under their feet the garlands of honor which an approving world offers them, risking comfort and life itself that they may bear the gospel to the destitute, they are amazed and cry out, What meaneth this? The answer to it all is, that the word of Christ is so burned into the heart that they cannot refuse to go upon his bidding; they have no other wish but to glorify his name.

V. 13. Others, mocking. Let us not think it strange if wicked men make light of revivals as they did on Pentecost. But let all so live that they can successfully refute false charges of the adversary.

V. 14. Peter . . . lifted up his voice. See here another marvel grace has wrought. How different is Peter on the day of Pentecost from Peter in the judgment-hall, on the night of Lord's trial. The Holy Spirit has given him liberty, has made him free from the fear of man. Nor do we see him the same impulsive, overconfident Peter as before his fall. He is bold now for Jesus, but not rash. He is free indeed whom the truth makes free. Let those who say they are so timid naturally that they cannot testify for Jesus, learn that he is able to make all grace abound in them.—The Bible Teacher.

—All women, cripples, young men under 21 years, all Mongolians, Indians, negroes and old men are excluded from the benevolent institution of Odd-fellowship. Perhaps four-fifths of the whole world is by law excluded, and yet we are asked to believe the monstrous assertion that it is a benevolent institution. More than this the Lord Jesus Christ is quietly excluded, and still we are asked to believe it to be a religious institution.

—Times of Refreshing, one of our best exchanges, a special advocate of holiness and faith healing comes out in a new dress with four added pages.

Books and Magazines.

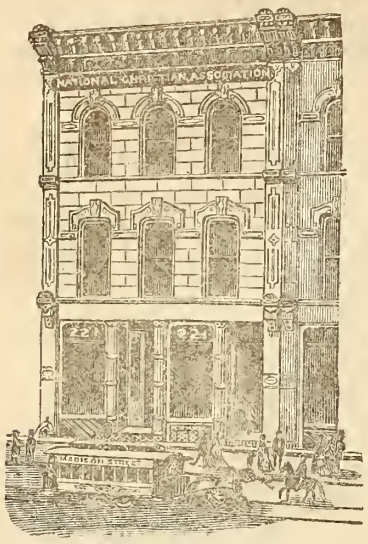
The Century for January confirms the words of Christ that "the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." Scores of our religious exchanges, who would treat with Pharisaic scorn any questioning of their piety, plunge into the festivities of "Christmas" with a zeal that forbids the entrance of a reason into their thoughts. If these editors have not time to read a few words from Christ and Paul which directly bear against this superstition and evil, they may be willing to open this magazine and read an article which begins:

"The almost universal observance of Christmas can hardly be accepted as an indication of a growing interest in the Christian fact which it celebrates, when we remember that it is the one religious festival which not only combines the pagan and Christian sentiments, but in which the pagan sentiment speaks with a more obvious appeal than does the spiritual to the purely secular side of our nature."

The is Cynosure blamed by a few good brethren for saying so much about sects. But we may, at least, commend to them and all another Century article which is one of the most severely anti-sectarian we have seen in print. Will the stones cry out if Christian papers professed hold their peace? "Hydraulic Mining in California" is a very interesting and finely illustrated description of this industry, and Edward Eggleston continues his sketch of the "Planting of New England."

"The Jewish Nature Worship" is the title of a small pamphlet by J. P. MacLean, a writer on prehistoric science, and especially upon the archaeology of our own country. Many interesting facts are presented showing the unity of the ancient heathen systems of worship; but the author aims especially to prove that by contamination with the nations about them the worship of the reciprocal principles of nature existed among the ancient Hebrews before the time of Moses, and in to their abominable rites they often fell in the centuries after. The document has some interest also in its indirect testimony respecting the Masonic theology which follows so closely that of the ancient mysteries. Robert Clark & Co., publishers, Cincinnati.

The Missionary Review, Princeton, N. J., in its last number for 1882, has a review of foreign missions in 1880-81, continuing previous articles on the subject until 100 societies have been brought before its readers. These societies represent a home strength of 117,699 ministers and 26,704,853 communicants, and a yearly contribution to foreign missions of $8,447,991, with a cost for administration of $703,587. The native communicants number 574,721, and 23,199 were added to their number during the year under review. On "The Property of Mission Boards in Foreign Missions," the Review calls attention to the fact that if missionaries are left to provide their own buildings, the results are excellent in every way, whereas large and costly buildings often have a reactionary effect upon the natives and hinder their conversion. "Government Education in India," "Woman's Mission Boards and Works," "How the Money Reaches the Foreign Field," are articles that should be widely read in churches of whatever name.



Mr. Longfellow received $4,000 for his poem, "The Hanging of the Crane," which was a payment at the rate of $20 a line. Mr. Bonner of the New York Ledger was the purchaser. The Cornhill Magazine paid Mr. Tennyson $15 a line for his "Pythomus," and when Thomas Moore was living in Paris with Washington Irving he used to walk up and down the garden two hours a day composing verses. He made ten lines at $5 a line his daily task. But literature is not always so remunerative.

In Grand Lodge reports of Indiana for 1864, we are told that "Odd-fellowism may punish its members even after death." Do ministers of the gospel believe that blasphemous lie? What does the Bible say? "Vengeance is mine; I will repay saith the Lord."

—Faith's eyes can see through a frown of God, and under it is read God's thoughts of love.

The Transfer.

We hail our subscribers with the greetings of the NEW YEAR with new and cheerful prospects.

Mr. Cook took the Cynosure when no one printer in Chicago would have it; and he and his wife, agent and actuary, Mrs. Cook, have deserved well of the country and the cause. The N. C. A. had no house in 1871 when he took the paper. It now has one and the means to run it. And though the names of Mr. and and Mrs. Cook will be sorely missed by many from the old places, they will still co-operate with the friends of the cause, and Mr. Cook retains the book-publishing department, which grows larger every hour. Messrs. Stoddard and Kellogg, as business manager and office editor of the paper, will have their hands "o'erfull," as the Scotch say, with the work of putting the Cynosure, now transferred to the Carpenter building, into the zenith of the firmament of our cause.

It is a grand token of God's approbation that these important changes can be made by the National Board of Directors without disturbing the harmony or jarring the co-operatien of our great work, which, with increased expenditures and the increase of papers devoted to the reform, will need more than ever the prayers and labors of every reader on its list to keep the Cynosure in its place as the POLE STAR of the Reform constellation.

What Lies Before us.

The next issue of the Cynosure will contain some changes which we trust will meet the approval of our friends and add to its usefulness. Our office is now fitted up at the Publishing House of the N. C. A., where all communications should be addressed and where friends visiting the city will find a cordial welcome and meet familiar faces, and we trust feel at home in the building that has been secured for the cause by the generous donations and united prayers and efforts of many pious friends.

While no radical changes will be made in the editorial character of our organ, its readers will be pleased to know that arrangements for a Washington department of the N. C. A. are well under way, and that movements at our nation's capital will be noted and reported by a live man already on the ground. The able communications of our New England Secretary at Worcester will be re-inforced by special contributions from New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Oberlin and other centers of influence. We are profoundly grateful to long-tried and ever faithful helpers, who, as God's chosen instruments, have aided in making the pages of our organ shine as a light in the midst of darkness, and we hope to merit, at least in some measure, and receive their hearty co-operation in future.

When the next issue of our paper reaches you, with such changes as means in hand will permit us to make with safety, you can judge of their appropriateness for yourselves, and determine whether you will make special efforts to render yet other improvements possible by adding new names to the subscription list.

We accept the situation as evidently ordered in the providence of our only hope, and all-sufficient Saviour who is causing "all things to work together for good to them that love him," and whose kingdom shall come and whose will shall be done in earth as in heaven, when all principalities and powers pay gratefnl homage and render willing obedience to Christ, and honor the Son even as the Father, claiming his promise, "Lo I am with you always;" and asking your co-operation and prayers in meeting the increased and responsible duties of the lot that has fallen to me, I am in the love and fellowship of all who are disciples of the "One Master."

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

Kansas and St. John.

LYNDON, Kans. Dec. 24, 1882.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On the morning in which I left Emporia for this place I went np to the Normal Institution by invitation of its President Taylor, and addressed its 310 pupils, with their large and able Faculty. I enjoyed my visit very much, and from the reception of my remarks I think the satisfaction was mutnal.

I took tea the evening before at Dr. Barnett's, along with Mr. and Mrs. Collins, late of Washington, D. C., and who think of returning there again. Mrs. Collins read an exceedingly able paper before our Convention, which was published in the Emporia Daily Republican, I read the paper at the hotel, but cannot get one here or I would send it for publication in the Cynosure. Our host, Dr. Barnett, has a beautiful home, a large and well arranged library, with a collection of curiosities; and better than all, an agreeable wife and sweet children. They are relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Collins.

Literally, a nation has been born in a day here. Its agricnlture is a prolific, continuous garden; its towns and cities have all the modern improvements, and learning and schools which in Europe would have required ages to bring them to present culture and perfection. An English or German university, all things considered, would pale before a Kansas Normal School in the power and impression made on visitors by its buildings, its advantages and occnpants. Of conrse, the historic splendors of university are wanting here. But the Bible is here, and Victoria, as truthfully as gracefully, said to her oriental Prince visitor, pointing to the Bible, "That book has made the greatness of England."

The lodge (Masonic) members here in Lyndonare almost entirely Repnblicans, and are in deadly feud about St. John and prohibition. The lodges are made up of two classes of Masons, viz., those who have joined to get secret advantages from their fellow men, and those who have joined in self-defense, to keep the first class from getting secret advantages of them. The first class is made up of that class of preachers who are the natural born descendants of Simon Magus and Elymas the Sorcerer, and the black-leg gentry generally, who make Masonry their trade. This class are death on St. John. They are not the majority, but they control the lodge, and, though I cannot testify to or prove it, I have no doubt they have received, in cipher, the mandate of Albert Pike and his Sovereign Grand Inspector General, to defeat St. John and prohibition, simply because, though a Mason, he will not (and they know it) answer their purpose. I have not yet seen the Governor. He was out of the State when I came through Topeka. I hope to see him. He is defeated for two years, and if he has the penetration and courage which he has credit for, he, by this time, knows he has nothing to expect from the lodge, henceforth and forever. The lodge, like the anaconda, desperate and savage from our sustained attacks, will drive such men as Pomeroy and St. John into the American party, as the border ruffians forced every Democratic governor sent here by Buchanan, into the Republican ranks.

Still we must not be too easily or hastily satisfied with friends who will come to us. If St. John is an adherent Mason after this defeat, I would as soon vote for Shakespeare's "Eternal devil," as vote for him. Ex-Senator Pomeroy has been long under fire, and can be trusted.

"Well, but what hope is there? The American people are mad upon their secret idols, and we cannot hope to elect a President till the year nineteen hundred, if we can then." The answer is: The minorities have done the good in this world: majorities only register it.

But selfishness completes what the fear of God begins. Abraham and Zacharias had no children until all hope of children was past. But they had children; and Isaac was the ancestor of Christ; and John the Baptist was greatest of woman born! God is neither limited or restricted. And the overwhelming slavery majority of a few years since, is vanished and disappeared.

AT THE HOME OF FATHER CHITTENDEN.

LYNDON, Osage Co., Kansas, Dec. 27.

I preached here all day Sabbath in Rev. Mr. Alexander's United Presbyterian church, and last night, (Tuesday) I addressed a large and excellent congregation in the Lyndon courthouse. I see joy giving tokens all around here. Of course, the people about the county seat have been bewitched with lodge sorcery. The M. E. preacher, as too often, is a Freemasons, and the General Assembly Presbyterians have a large stone church crawling with Masons, but both those churches have members who are enlightened as to the abomination that maketh desolate, standing in the holy place!

Mr. Linus Chittendon presided at the courthouse last evening, and followed me with an excellent and effective speech. He is above eighty, and his good wife is partially paralyzed, and nearly as old as her husband; but she walked with him to hear me preach on Sabbath; "leaning on her staff." Mr. Chittenden has achieved wonders, and there is a crowd of fine young men here whom he is enlightening, and who will reverently take up and put on his mantle when it falls.

Rev. Mr. Alexander was at our meeting in Syracuse, N. Y., in Shakespeare Hall, where the American party was named. He is a precious and excellent man, born in Tennessee, and though his early advantages were imperfect, he gained a college education, and the profound and God-exalting teachings of Scotch Presbyterianism, have made him at once fearless and logical, and he is surrounded with excellent families here, whose members will characterize and control religious sentiment wherever they are; while the children of the time-servers about here, whose religion is taught as a mere expedient to get to heaven by, instead of a code of God, as the Bible actually is, will float like sea weed on the ocean of life.

I am still studying Kansas politics, and will report from time to time. I go to-day to Topeka, and thence tomorrow morning to North Cedar, where I expect to spend the Sabbath with Rev. J. S. T. Milligan. Thence I have contingently promised to go up and speak at Sabetha in a county on the north line of the State, and if my health and heart hold out, I will thence go back to Topeka, and attend the great Prohibition convention Jan. 9th and 10th, and see, and, if possible, understand St. John, whom I still regard as a wonderful man, after looking at him through the eyes of friends and foes, and he has both. The conflict is to be terrific before we are done.

"And the strongest and the bravest will be often heard to say,
My heart my heart is weary for the greatness of the way."

But storms are nothing while Christ is on board of the ship. In much love to our readers I am etc.

POMEROY AND HIS HYENA.

TOPEKA, Dec. 28, 1882.

The colonel, lawyer and State senator, who invited Senator Pomeroy to bribe him, said that Pomeroy did bribe so, and then pretended to betray him, has quit the practice of law and politics and gone to selling fruit-trees. Of course people would not trust their business with a lawyer who said, publicly, that he sold his surplus rascality for $8,000, took $7,000 of it, and then failed to deliver over the rascality for which he had received the pay. I have conversed with honest, capable and God-fearing men here. They say that, if dealing with Senator Pomeroy, they should unhesitatingly trust his integrity. They think he differed from other Kansas politicians only in being more frank and unsuspecting than they, in using money to promote the Republican party and return himself to the U. S. Senate. His real crime was making an Anti-masonic speech in Farwell Hall before our association in 1869. And though he may have erred in his Republican zeal to go back to the Senate, and done some acts which he would not repeat, the virtue of Kansas Masons against him is like the outrageous virtue of unreformed prostitutes who condemn the errors of innocent women.

Yours in Christ. J. BLANCHARD.

—The Legion of Honor.

Inquiry is made after the objects and character of this branch of the lodge family. "By their fruits ye shall know them;" the one single peep behind the curtain given below is worth more than a thousand volumes of lodge-written stuff about charity, faith, purity, etc., from lips that next moment may pour out obscenity and oaths. A lodge ~~of this order~~ in St. Louis was initiating a clergyman and one or two others, when the former got a new view of the ceremony not down in the ritual. The dispatches to the daily press tell the story thus:

Two or three prominent citizens were to be initiated, among them a clergyman. The latter had been blindfolded, but the eye closets were not tight enough and he could see what was going on. The members were in roars of laughter. A candidate who was clad only in his underclothes was furnishing all the fun. The clergyman protested vigorously. He made a very violent speech, the substance of which was that he was a gentleman; that he had been led to believe that the organization he was joining was one composed of gentlemen. "Keep quiet" said one of the members, who tried to readjust the blinders.

"I will not," said the candidate. "I cannot take part in any ceremony where such practices are allowed. I demand to be taken out of this room. I will not stay another minute. I have been misled as to the character of this organization. As a gentleman I must withdraw."

A rumpus began at this point; some of the members insisted on detaining the candidate. Others agreed with him that the vulgarity was all wrong. Among these latter was M. R. Cullen, who made a vigorous fight against the vulgar horse-play. The discussion became very lively. The meeting was disorganized as the members on opposite sides disputed the question. Finally a resort to fisticuffs was had. Almost a rough-and-tumble fight occurred during which the candidates escaped, the gas went out and the meeting adjourned without the usual formalities. The gentleman who objected to horse-play is still angry and is on the war path.

—The Cynosure is promised a copy of the Thanksgiving day sermon of Rev. C. H. Hobart of Aurora. It will appear soon.

—Our thanks are due to Elder A. L. Post of Montrose, Pa., for a copy of the Thanksgiving discourse by Rev. A. L. Benton, preached at a union service in that village. It very ably and boldly discusses many of the evils that beset us as a nation and proposes radical remedies.

—On Sabbath evening Dec. 24, Pres. C. A. Blanchard preached one of his forcible sermons against the observance of the 25th of December as the birth day of our Lord Jesus Christ.

—Bro. E. Tapley of Columbus, Miss., acknowledges the receipt of $2.00 sent by Mrs. Sholes.

—The Cynosure is happy to report the following contributions for Bro. Stewart of Molino, Tenn., who was lately burned out: H. Wykhuysen and James Smith $5 00 each, I. Daboll $1.00.

—Some good brethren misapprehend the Washington movement altogether. The headquarters of our reform are in Chicago. Here are they rooted, God helping us not to be transplanted. The object in going to Washington was only to open an auxiliary office, like that so well managed by Bro. Bailey in Worcester, from whence should issue a stream of influence that should be for the healing of the nation at its head and center of political life and power.

—The Odd-fellow General Grand Lodge at its meeting in 1882, ordered that five per cent of the receipts of all local lodges should be paid into its treasury. Will some member of the clan venture to foot up the amount?

—In a recent lecturing and preaching tour through New England, Bro. H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, Boston, stopped at Providence, Rhode Island, and found Mr. T. N. Doutney engaged in the Gospel temperance work with zeal and success. Mr. Hastings and Anthony Comstock of New York addressed large audiences in Music Hall with marked effect. Several years ago Mr. Doutney visited the West, speaking for temperance. The friends whom he made here will be glad to learn that he is yet engaged in the good work.

—Hon. Godlove S. Orth, member of Congress from Indiana, died lately at his home in Lafayette with Christian resignation and hope It was reported during his life that he was a Freemason, but it is very significant that the notices of his death make no mention of the subject, and at his funeral Christian ceremonies only were allowed.

—Dea. John Christie, a trustee of Wheaton College, and an officer in the College church, died after a short sickness on Saturday last at noon. He lived some three miles south of the village upon a large farm which his native Scotch industry and thrift had improved into a property of great value. His death is lamented by a large circle of friends to whose loving esteem his death will be a sore loss. He was buried on Tuesday in the adjacent village of Naperville, Pres. C. A. Blanchard conducting the funeral services.

—Our esteemed co-worker in Christian reform, the Signal, celebrates, with the Cynosure, its New Year by becoming the property as well as the organ of a national organization. The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union has for years published a monthly, Our Union, in New York. The need of a weekly organ becoming great, and the Signal being already established and ably maintaining its right to be, the two papers have come together as the Union Signal, like the chemical combination of oxygen and hydrogen, and all for the sake of pure water. The new temperance journal retains Mrs. Willard as editor, and will henceforth be the national representative of the most hopeful and successful movement against the dram-bar.

BEGINNING WITH NEXT CYNOSURE we shall publish a series of entertaining sketches for our boys from Mrs. Hardie of Minnesota, who wrote for us last year the instructive "Talks with my Boys." During the year we hope to give to our younger readers also a series of biographical sketches of men and women who have been celebrated for noble lives and great accomplishment in philanthropic, religious and reform work. The new type which has been procured will permit the printing of a sermon every fortnight, and an endeavor will be made to continue the high standard of these discourses as in the past, which have been, we are happy to know, almost universally appreciated. We hope to secure also from a talented and experienced lady a number of articles on home training, in which the perplexing question of what to do Sabbath afternoons will be among the practical themes discussed. Materials for a sketch of some interesting periods in the life of Samuel D. Greene, not before published, are at hand and will be used during the year; and we also hope that a plan for some time cherished of a historical sketch of each of the testifying churches will be carried out. Every effort to enlarge the circle our correspondents, at home and abroad, will be made, and in all our endeavors for the enlargement of the Cynosure in these particulars we confidently expect the hearty co-operation of all our friends.

A BOOK FOR OUR FRIENDS.—The subscription book Christian Cynosure is now open for old and new subscribers at No. 221 West Madison Street, Chicago, awaiting their orders.

—Now is the high tide of church fairs, Christmas sales, musical entertainments and devices of all sorts to attract and unchain the attention of old and young. What time is there left for Christian living?

HOME CIRCLE.

A Dedication for 1883.

I take God the Father to be my God. 1 Thess. 1:9.
I take God the Son to be my Saviour. Acts 5:31.
I take God the Holy Ghost to be my Sanctifier, 1 Peter 1:2.
I take the Word of God to be my rule. 2 Timothy 3:16-17.
I take the people of God to be my people. Ruth 1:16-17.
I likewise dedicate my whole self to the Lord. Rom. 14:7-8.
And I do this deliberately. Joshua 24:15.
Sincerely. 2 Cor. 1:12.
Freely, Psalms 110:3.
And forever. Rom. 8:35-39.

New Year's Hymn.

Beneath the moonlight and the snow
Lies dead my latest year;
The winter winds are wailing low
Its dirges in my ear.

I grieve not with the moaning wind,
As if a loss befell;
Before me, even as behind,
God is, and all is well!

His Light shines on me from above,
His low voice speaks within—
The patience of immortal love
Outwearying mortal sin.

Not mindless of the growing years,
Of care and loss and pain,
My eyes are wet with thankful tears
For blessings which remain.

Be near me in my hours of need,
To sooth, to cheer, or warn,
And down these slopes of sunset lead,
As up the hills of morn!

—J. G. Whittier.

Week Day Sermon.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

"To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven." This text from the wise Preacher has a peculiar force and meaning which few people stop to consider in these days of hurry when the words so often made an excuse for the neglect of duty, "I have no time for it," are heard on every side.

Many a school-girl finds "no time" to lighten domestic burdens with even the tips of her fingers, yet does contrive to find or take the time for devouring an incredible quantity of foolish fiction. Many a business man, full of the shop and the counter, "cannot find time" to read a portion of God's Word daily with his family, yet strangely enough, always has plenty of leisure to con the morning newspaper. Many a care-laden mother has no time to devote to the special training and instruction of her children, yet perhaps spends in the embroidery of a sack, or in some other equally fashionable and useless labor, precious hours that, turned to better account, might have blessed the world and gladdened eternity.

I remember hearing a gentle, sweet-faced woman, one of the most prominent temperance workers in this country, say with reference to the great problem that is agitating the land from center to circumference—How to destroy that devouring dragon, the rum traffic—"Home education must do it."

Now what means this rising tide of intemperance, Sabbath breaking, contempt of law, and general laxity of principles, except that a good many mothers fifteen or twenty years ago did not find time to train their children in the love and practice of those simple Puritan virtues which are the foundation of our national life, and the best, the only safe-guard against national decay?

What means this wail that goes up from every religious newspaper that the church is losing ground; that conformity to the world is taking the place of living piety; that only a small percentage of college graduates enter the ministerial, a still smaller ratio, the missionary work? It seems that many a Christian mother has not found time to emulate the example of Susannah Wesley, the wife of a poor non-conformist minister and the mother of twenty children, who let no day pass without its hour of regular instruction. It means not only that she has failed to hold constantly before them the grand Christ ideal of self-sacrifice, but it means that in very many cases she has found no time to gather her brood about her in quiet twilight hours, and by stories of prophets, apostles and martyrs, impress on their tender minds the grandeur of his service, and the glory of the reward.

My beloved sister, ought these things so to be?

"If a thing is necessary, life is long enough to do it in," says Mrs. Stowe's New England matron of the old times, Mrs. Katy Scudder. But I do not quote this simply as a wise observation, but because it breathes so entirely the very spirit of our text that there could be no better commentary.

When the Infinite Father saw fit to call us into being he portioned to each his life-work; to one manifold duties and distracting cares, to another comparative ease and leisure. But is it possible that Omnipotent Wisdom could give us one single duty and forget to provide its appropriate niche in our lives? The real question should be not, "Have I the time," but, "Is it something God has given me to do?" Answer that question in the affirmative, and then be sure that he has also provided room for this particular duty somewhere in your life. But if you choose to fritter away even a small portion in needless cares, frivolous occupations, or in heeding the exacting demands of fashion, what reason have you to expect that Providence can or will make your life large enough to hold both?

Give up this useless needle-work, O overtasked wives and mothers, this fine tucking and ruffling and trimming. Dress your children in plain, substantial garments, and be yourself contented with a more simple style than fashion at the present day demands. Let no so-called "claims of society" interfere for one moment between you and the duty you owe your children. Be willing to be called singular now, that hereafter they may rise up and call you blessed.

It is astonishing how easily we can clear a space for every daily duty, if we only see to it that something else which is not duty but mere servile obedience to foolish customs does not usurp its place; how soon we can realize in the new freedom for mind and soul and body that Solomon's words are true. There is "a season to everything, a time to every purpose under the heaven."

Christianity and Womanhood.

The curse of sin lies heavily upon her who was first in the transgression; and it is not necessary to consider this as a mere arbitrary infliction. It springs from the very nature of things; for when woman has succeeded in seducing man from his allegiance to God, she has undermined the foundation of her own peace and happiness, and the temple which should have been her shelter and her home comes tumbling down over her head. So long as man continues in rebellion against God, so long woman is the degraded victim of his depravity, ungodliness and brutality. She not only partakes with him the degradation which sin entails, but she is degraded by him; her helplessness and dependence bringing her under his absolute control.

The only way to elevate woman is to elevate man, and bring him back to his allegiance to God. When this is done, and when woman takes the place of obedience which God has appointed her, then her elevation is secure. It is only where the influence of the gospel is felt that woman is in any measure redeemed from the curse which sin has brought upon her; and womanhood only begins to attain its proper position in lands where the gospel is preached and obeyed.

Throughout the heathen world women are crushed and down-trodden; but when the gospel comes an improvement immediately commences. In China and India the murdering of daughters the burning of widows, and the perpetual degradation of those that survive their husbands; the indescribable tortures caused by the bandaging of the feet of the Chinese girls, and all the disabilities connected therewith, show the woe which sin has imposed upon womanhood. And the beneficial changes which are wrought in the manners, customs and habits of the people are wrought, not by directly assailing their prejudices and their institutions, but indirectly by introducing the gospel of the Son of God among them. In China, for example, the missionaries could not at first set themselves to abolish the practice of binding and crushing the feet of the little girls, and if they had excluded from the church persons who bound the feet they would never have had a church established. But since the gospel has reached the women of China they have taken hold of the matter, and hundreds of them have entered into a league, pledging themselves that they would not bind their daughters' feet, and that, in spite of all the sneers and obloquy and reproach, they will marry their sons to women whose feet have never been bound and distorted.

The zenana missionaries, who are working their way as teachers of reading, embroidery, and gospel truth, among the women of the East in the seclusion of their zenanas, or homes, are sowing seeds which spring up and bear fruit in the amelioration of woman's condition, and in her elevation from the bitter bondage that she has borne for so many ages. Wherever the gospel goes it lightens woman's lot, and removes from her that shadow of death which has rested upon her heart and her life. Jesus of Nazareth was woman's truest and most faithful friend; and his gospel has been and still is, her light and joy and hope. Well may she trust and follow that Saviour who has done so much for her. Well may she distrust those skeptics and scoffers who seek to lead her astray from God, and rob her of her best friend, her greatest comfort, and her only hope of life and joy immortal.—The Christian.

—The interior beauty of a soul through habitual kindliness of thought is greater than words can tell. To such a man life is a perpetual bright evening, with all things calm, fragrant, and restful. The dust of life is laid, and it is ever cool. All sounds are softer, as is the way of evening, and all sights are fairer, and the golden light makes our enjoyment of earth a happy preparation for heaven.—F. W. Faber.

Bible Thoughts for the New Year.

Henceforth LIVE:
Not as those dead in sin.....Eph. 2:1, 5
Not as in times past.....1 Peter 4:2, 3.
Not as those without God, without Christ, without hope.....Eph. 2:12.
Not unto ourselves.....2 Cor. 5:15.
But in newness of life.....Rom. 6:4.

Remembering
1. Jesus came that we might have life....1 John 10:10.
2. That true life is only in Him.....1 John 5:11.
3. That believing in Him we may know we have life.....1 John 5:13.
4. That His life is to be manifested in us..2 Cor. 4:11.
5. And like Paul, we may be able to say, "The life I now live I live by the faith of Jesus," etc.....Gal. 2:20.

Shall we not ask ourselves this solemn question: "What is my life?".....James 4:14.
And shall we not pray that we may be able to answer, "Christ is my life?".....Col. 3:4

Henceforth SERVE.
For there can be no true life without service.
1. Not sin.....Rom. 6:6.
2. Not divers pleasures.....Titus 3:3.
3. Not the two masters.....Matt, 6:24.

But
1. The Lord.....Josh. 22:24; Matt. 4:10.
2. This service is to be without fear.....Luke 1:74.
3. Acceptable.....Heb. 12:28; Rom. 12:2.
4. Spiritual.....Rom. 1:9,
5. With a sincere heart.....1 Chron. 28:9.
6. Will produce love to one another.....Gal. 5:13.

The choice is to be made now.....Josh. 24:15.
This service will be rewarded.....Col. 3:24.
It will be continual.....Rev. 7:14; 22:3
Yet there will be perfect rest.....Rev. 14:13.

"Who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?".....1 Chron. 29:5.
Can we say, with Paul, "God, whom I serve?" Acts 27:23.
May each one be able to say, this coming year, that he is a—
1. New creature in Christ.....2 Cor. 5:17.
2. That he has a new heart.....Ezek. 36:26.
3. That he can sing the new song of deliverance from sin.....Psalm 40:3.
4. That he is obeying Christ's new commandment.....John 13:34.
5. That he is looking forward to dwelling in the new heaven.....Rev. 21:1.

The time is short. Be in earnest. The Lord is at hand. Be ready now, and work as one who believes his Master is coming.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

The Book of the New Year.

The Book of the New Year is opened,
Its pages are spotless and new;
And so, as each leaflet is turning,
Dear children, beware what you do!

Let never an ill thought be cherished,
Keep the tongue from a whisper of guile,
And see that your faces are windows
Through which a sweet spirit shall smile.

And weave for your souls the fair garment
Of honor, and beauty, and truth;
Which will still with a glory enfold you,
When faded the spell of your youth.

And now, with the new book, endeavor
To write its white pages with care;
Each day is a leaflet, remember,
To be written with watching and prayer.

And if on a page you discover
At evening a blot or a scrawl,
Kneel quickly and ask the dear Saviour
In mercy to cover it all.

So, when the strange book shall be finished,
And clasped by the angel in light,
You may feel, though the work be imperfect,
You have tried to please God in the right.

And think how the years are a stairway,
On which you must climb to the skies;
And strive that your standing be higher
As each one away from you flies.

Minnie's New Year's Gift.

"Mother gave me a Bible last New Year's," said a little girl, complacently, "and Aunt Lou gave cousin Harry one at the same time. Just look at them now, and see the difference!"

Harry's was worn. Its gilt edges were tarnished, and the newness was gone from the cover, but it looked as if it had been read very often. Here and there I saw pencil marks near favorite verses, and in one or two places it seemed as if tears might have fallen. Little Harry Gorden had become a Christian lately, and his Bible had evidently been very precious to him.

Minnie said triumphantly, after I had finished my look at Harry's, "Now see mine!" She unfolded the tissue-paper from it, and there it was, just as fresh and fair and uninjured as when it came out of the shop.

"I've never had it out of the drawer but once," said Miss Minnie, "and that was to show to somebody."

"Minnie," said I, "if your father were away from home, and should send you a letter, telling you just what he wanted you to do and be, would it be good treatment never to break the seal, and to lay it away in a drawer unread? Would it not be better to take it out every day and read it over and over, trying each time to obey its injunctions?"

"Yes," said Minnie, blushing, as she began to see my meaning.

"This is God's letter to you, my love. Like the man who folded away his talent in a napkin, you have folded up your precious Bible. Hereafter, my child, use it as God wants you to. It was given to us to be read and studied."—Exchange.

The New Year.

"A place where two ways met."—MARK. xi. 4.

Have the children come to such a place at this New Year? Are some little ones standing wondering which way to take—whether to go on the old way and the broad way, or to turn into the new way and the narrow way? Very quietly but surely the days and the weeks have brought them to this spot were the two ways seem to meet, and bright eyes search in vain for any sign-post plainly marking the road to heaven or the road to hell; and perhaps even to-day the prayer is trembling on some youthful lips, "Show me the way in which I should go."

One day last summer a father, mother, brothers and sisters, started for a long country ramble, but Fanny, the eldest girl, was not ready to start off with them, and was to follow. Directions were left with her which road to take. At last she started, and for a time there was no difficulty in following the others; but after a little she came to a place where two roads met. She had now to stand and think; but the more she thought the more difficult it seemed to decide. Both roads stretched out into the sunshine; both led into the country; but which was the right way?—which would lead to the father's side?

As she stood puzzled and wondering, her eye rested on the sandy path, and there, written in round, childish hand, were the words, "Fanny, this is the way." All doubt was at an end; she simply believed the written message, obeyed and followed, and soon had the joy of reaching those "gone before," and learned that her little sister had lingered behind to write those words on the dusty road.

Oh! children, does not the story remind you, as, it did me, of the pierced hand that long ago traced on the narrow path to heaven the words, "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the father, but by me?" And reading the message to-day, will you not start at once for heaven?

Fanny never thought of doubting the truth of her little sister's writing, and shall we doubt the writing of Jesus? He is the Life also; and not only our life eternal, but the very life we should live in this world.

You, girls, know what it is to match the beautiful shades of wools and silks, so as to copy a piece of work exactly, and just in the same way we should try to copy every shade in Christ's life and character. There is a text in the Bible that seems just a help for boys and girls in matching the colors; it is this: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and it there be any praise, think on these things." Had you not better learn the text, so that you may know just the right colors to ask for? It is in Philippians iv. 8.

Has not the little story a beautiful lesson in it for any who are walking on the safe way to heaven? Perhaps a brother, or sister, or friend is following you, and they have come to the place where you turned into the narrow way, but they do not know which road to take. Won't you try to make the writing clear for them, and won't you so live that they may read in your lives the words, "This is the way," and, following you, may soon rejoice in the loving embrace of the heavenly Father?—The Christian.

The Power of the Gospel.

BY EDNAH SHAW.

The Fiji Islands number more than two hundred, and much of the scenery is described as very beautiful, but the people were vilest of the vile. They were cannibals of the worst sort, and every kind of iniquity flourished throughout the group. A few incidents in the life of one man will show what the Fijians were as heathen, and what they have become through the gospel of Christ. Thakomban was born in 1817, being the son of Tanoa, the savage ruler of Ban. When he was six years old he was taken on a warlike expedition, and, his party being victorious, a young lad was captured and held down before him while he beat him to death with a club. This lesson was not forgotten by the young chief, and his cruelty increased with his years. The facts concerning this heathen king are too revolting to relate, except, as contrasted with his present gentle, Christian character, they show that "The gospel is the power of God unto salvation." A rebel having been captured, the young chief had the tongue of the offender cut out which he devoured raw, and laughed in great glee as the sufferer begged for speedy death. When his brother offered him a canoe for the lives of the two captives, he replied, "Keep your canoe; I want to eat men." He made the poor men dig a hole in the earth for an oven and cut the fire wood. He then had their arms and legs cut off, which were cooked and eaten in the presence of the men who were yet living. After this, even, he tortured them in many horrible ways. It seemed for many years as if this chief would succeed in keeping the Christian faith out of his dominions. When the missionaries would plead faithfully with him, he would reply "I hate your Christianity." Once he exclaimed, "Wonderful is your new religion; but will it prevent our having men to eat? Not it." The ovens of Ban, used only for cooking human bodies, were seldom cool, and this hard-hearted king still delighted in the greatest atrocities. At last in 1853 he allowed the missionaries to begin their labors among his people. He now heard much of the religion of love and peace, and was urged by the Christian chiefs of other islands to renounce the false gods and accept the religion of Jesus. On Sunday, April the 30th, 1854, he appointed a great service in which heathenism was renounced and Christianity embraced. Hundreds of the people at once commenced family prayer. The king yielded more and more to the Gospel and his cruel practices were entirely forsaken. Three years after the missionaries were received he put away his many wives, was publicly baptized, taking the name of Ebenezer. In the presence of those whom he had injured most, he made most humble confession, saying, "I have been a bad man, I disturbed the country. God has singularly preserved my life. I desire to acknowledge him as the only and true God." Twenty-five years have passed and Thakombar still honors the Christian name. He and his people have become loving and gentle and have altogether ceased from cruelty. There are churches with crowded congregations on every island, and morning and evening prayer may be heard in almost every house. There are 1,400 schools and 900 native preachers in Fiji, and Thakomban, the once blood-thirsty cannibal, is now an intelligent Christian, loved and respected by all who know him. Herein is this Scripture fulfilled, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold all things are become new."

The Box.

A Letter to the Chicago Christian Association Band of Hope, from Mrs M. A. Tapley.

One evening after dark a youthful voice shouted "The box!" at my door and soon it was set down beside me and the lid off. Just while the books, pictures, papers and other articles were coming out and there was a high glee, in stepped two gentlemen from Alabama. They supposed my husband had just returned from an auction house. "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" was handed them and they soon became deeply absorbed in reading. One seemed as if he cared for nothing else for a time. Afterward they began to talk of the prohibition movement. They said that in the country they lived in there was a great deal of drinking and there were in it about a hundred men who drank, who are about as wild as any Comanche Indians. They were not sure that this county would go for prohibition, but quite a number of the counties in Alabama had voted for it and they hoped that the State would be all right yet on the temperance question. Do you ever think, dear children, that your prayers may have helped those counties away down in Alabama, to take the stand they have in favor of temperance? I hope those books will do good also.

I thank you for all that you sent. I liked the pictures very much. They are much admired, especially the "Forget me not." The colored people were very glad to get the clothing sent them. I wish you could have seen them going to church with them on. They sent thanks and "more than obliged to you." The picture books afford great delight, also the papers. You would be suprised to know how much pleasure you have given in many places.

—A Christian's heart should be practically more at-home in heaven than on earth.

—You cannot do to-morrow the work of to-day. He whom you would save will be elsewhere, you will be elsewhere, or other things will engage you.

Letters from the General Secretary.

WASHINGTON.

Washington, I suppose, is not unlike to other large cities in having an inside and outside view. It has been my fortune during my five days stay in the city, to get an occasional glimpse of that side not visible to transient visitors. If you contemplate visiting Washington to see the sights, a few suggestions of how to "to take it in" may not come amiss.

You will of course begin with the Capitol building and grounds, and in making a tour of inspection you will find it greatly to your advantage to give the young man in livery a quarter to show you around and explain the various objects of interest. From the Capitol you will find it convenient to pass southwest to the Botanical Garden, containing plants and flowers of every variety and from all parts of the world. Crossing the Park you come first to the Bureau of Agriculture and a little further on is the Smithsonian Institute with its annex; and a little to the east is the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, where the U. S. bonds and greenbacks are manufactured. Turning to your right and going north you will pass near the Washington monument, which, when completed, is to be the highest structure of the kind in the world. The next public building of interest is the White House, which is near a mammoth building containing the Treasury, State and Navy departments. Turning to the east you will pass on F street to the Patent Office and U. S. Postoffice. Between Seventh and Ninth streets, northwest, beyond and two squares to the right is the City Hall and court rooms, and still beyond and a few squares to the left is the Government Printing Office, which is an immense building filled with busy presses, tons of documents and hundreds of men, women and children, stamping, stitching, folding and packing the wisdom of the present and future generations. By the time you have spent days, or rather weeks, in these places accessable to the public, and driven along the principal avenues of the city, you will have a fair idea of the outside of Washington. But your knowledge will be incomplete until you catch at least some glimpses of the inside. To do this I would recommend that before leaving the city, you take the morning paper and mark a few of the advertisements of desirable properties offered for sale. Then go to the agent who has them in charge and ask him to send one of the clerks to show you the property; visit the most pretentious ones you find and call wherever you see "For Sale" posted in the window or tacked on the door post. Insist on making a thorough examination from cellar to attic, and you will find that Washington has an inside and outside view which are very unlike, unless your experience is quite different from mine. While looking for suitable headquarters for our reform work I may have been unfortunate in my selections, but from what I have seen I must conclude that any man who buys property in Washington relying on outside appearances runs a fearful risk of getting a "whited sepulchre," full of all manner of serious defects. It is not unlike to joining the Freemasons, Oddfellows, or other secret societies, whose active members, like some unscrupulous real estate agents, show up only the advantageous, the attractive and the exterior, to insure sales and secure commissions, while the dilapidated apartments and skeleton closets are only accessible to the man who pays his money and takes his chances.

IN NEW ENGLAND.

BOSTON, Dec. 23d.

I came to this city yesterday, and have been making numerous calls. I find everywhere evidences of growth in reform ideas, and believe the time is approaching when the conservatives as well as the radicals will speak their sentiments. I have arranged for correspondence in Washington and New York, and have a fair prospect of adding occasional articles from the "Hub" that will give variety and increased usefulness to our paper during the coming year.

I am disappointed in not meeting Joseph Cook or his wife, who are both absent and not expected to return until after January 1st. Wendell Phillips is in the city and I hope to obtain an interview with him before leaving for Worcester, where I expect to spend Sabbath with Bro. Bailey. Unless unexpectedly detained I shall call at Oberlin on Tuesday and reach Chicago on Wednesday.

Of my visit to Washington, I can only say at present that the waters are troubled and there is much to encourage. I will give our readers a full report at the right time; for the present we have only to watch and pray, and wait the Lord's time. When that time comes we must "go up and posess the land" in the name of Immanuel. Meantime the effort of every friend should be to introduce our reform and its principles in as many homes and churches as possible, and wherever practicable secure the weekly visit of our paper, through which we hope to keep every reader posted on the general topics of interest to the church of Christ and free government, and especially to record the movements of the "Secret Empire."

J. P. STODDARD.

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

Nominations for 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
of Illinois.

For Vice-President.
JOHN A. CONANT.
of Connecticut.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE VOTE IN ILLINOIS.—On application to Hon. Henry D. Dement, Secretary of State for Illinois we are informed that from the official returns Peter Howe received 139 votes for State Treasurer and H. A. Fischer 129 for Superintendent of Public Instruction. T. W. Baird received 41 votes in the 8th district and 4 in the 5th for Congressman.

S. Ransom, Lawrence, Mich., There "were seven votes cast in this town for State officers."

M. L. Worcester's American vote was thrown out at Sycamore, Ill. this fall.

—One section of the resolutions adopted by the late Republican convention of Missouri is in favor of local option and reads thus:—"We affirm that the undivided liberty of the citizens should be subject to Governmental control only so far as demanded by the general welfare; that it is the duty of the State to so legislate as to do the greatest good to the greatest number of its inhabitants. Recognizing these principles, and recognizing that the intemperate use of intoxicating liquors jeoparizesd the safety, health, and morality of any people among whom they are tolerated, we believe and declare that it is the duty of the State to restrain the use of intoxicating liquor and reduce its harmful effect to a minimum. To this end we demand a vigorous enforcement of the existing license laws, and the immediate enactment and faithful execution of such further statutes as shall enable the people of the several localities and subdivisions of the State to determine for themselves whether dram-shops shall exist among them or not: also, a large increase of the cost of licenses, so that the liquor traffic shall bear its just proportion of taxation and be conducted by responsible persons: also that persons engaged in said traffic shall be made civility liable at law in damages for injuries to persons resulting therefrom, and for the effective punishment by imprisonment of all persons violating said laws, so that a strict and adequate control of said traffic may be maintained wherever it is permitted, and we further believe that a rigid and impartial enforcement of laws such as are above proposed would furnish a more complete and practical remedy for the evil of intemperance than any attempt to enforce general prohibitory laws against adverse local sentiment."

Governor Elect of Kansas.

Rev. M. A. Gault, in writing from Atchison: Kansas, to the Christian Statesman says: "The city, which is strongly anti-prohibition, was jubilant over the election G. W. Glick, who was a resident of the city, for Governor and the defeat of St. John. The principal streets were illuminated with bonfires. An excursion train came up from Leavenworth bringing a large delegation. A procession was formed headed by Mr. Glick and three prominent citizens in a carriage led by a military band. They went to the German Turner Hall, where it was announced that several hundred kegs of beer had been contributed to the occasion. The new elected Governor and several others addressed the half drunken crowd, in the beer garden behind Turner Hall. Mr. Glick in his address emphasised the statement that he considered his election not merely a personal honor to himself, but an expression on the part of the people of Kansas of the triumph of individual liberty over fanatical tyranny. The air was suffocating with the fumes of whisky and tobacco, and the enthusiastic yells of the crowd, apparently composed of the worst elements of the city, made a scene of bacchanalian revelry seldom witnessed. "The Saint Scooped," was the heading of the election news in the daily papers, and on the lips of many, referring to the defeat of St. John. Mr. Glick is not a member of any church. He is an anti-Prohibitionist and Bourbon Democrat. But the fact that he will be obliged to take an oath to support the Prohibition amendment of the State Constitution, before taking his seat at the Capitol, is one of the strange things in American politics.

Wiles of Politicians.

BY GEO. H. WILLIAMS.

It would in many places be very interesting to know how many men, and who have been approached directly or indirectly, some time before election by political leaders, intimating to these men that possibly, or probably, they may be nominated at their party caucus to some office, larger or smaller when there is not the least intention of so nominating them, but only by this bait to hold them to the party, and especially to prevent them from joining others to form a new party. Men reputed sensible, are doubtless often by this devil's bait hindered from speaking and acting their convictions, which are, perhaps, that their party is doing, or upholding Freemasonry, or both, and that a small and perhaps very unpopular party is right; and perhaps its members are suffering because they do and maintain that which is right.

What office or honor, or pecuniary gain can pay a man for failing to speak and act his convictions? Lowell's lines are true,—

"They are slaves who will not choose
Hatred, scoffing, and abuse,
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth they needs must think,

They are slaves who fear to speak
For the fallen and the weak;
They are slaves who dare not be
In the right with two or three."

Jehovah is always with the right. It is wicked to say that "One, (man) with God is a majority." Jehovah is an infinite majority. His word is (Isaiah 40:15-17.): "Behold the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance."

"All nations before him are as nothing; and they are counted to him less than nothing and vanity."

Talk of majorities of a nation! How he overturns the choice of a so called "mighty nation!" What such has accomplished at great expense and effort, he brings to naught in a moment. His plans will be carried out fully. "The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice." Clouds and darkness are round about him: Yet righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne." (Ps. 97:1-2.)

WANTS.—If you want your orders promptly attended to send them direct to No. 221 West Madison Street, Chicago, the home and headquarters of anti-secrecy reform and henceforth the publication office of the Christian Cynosure.

Faith's eves can see through a frown of God, and under it read God's thoughts of love and peace.

Set your heart on the inheritance. Go up beforehand and see your lodging. Look through all your Father's rooms in heaven. In your Father's house are many dwelling places. Men take a view of lands before they buy them. I know that Christ hath made the bargain already, but be kind to the house you are going to, and see it often. Set your heart on things above, where Christ is, at the right hand of God.—Rutherford.

Knight Templarism is having a rush of business. The Pacific railways and the Pullman car line have been subjected and draw its chariot. Next August the Triennial conclave meets in San Francisco, and all Masons of this rank may visit California for less than half fare. It costs a hundred or a hundred and fifty dollars to get into this select ring of lodge aristocrasy, but a young man who is anxious to visit California finds that he can both get his Templar toggery and his round trip ticket for the price of the latter alone; hence he will take the degree, unbiassed by any pecuniary motive; and the number of Greek crosses which are coming out, like buds in spring, upon the persons of flashy young men shows that the bait is taking.

—Let amusements fill up the chinks of your existence, and not the great spaces thereof. Let your pleasures be taken as Daniel took his prayers—with his windows open; pleasures which need not cause a single blush on an ingenious cheek.—Parker.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The new brick seminary building at Spring Arbor, Mich., is to be dedicated Jan. 7. Rev. B. E. Roberts, of North Chili, N. Y., one of the superintendents of the Free Methodist churches, officiating on the occasion.

—The Rev. John Griffin sailed from Philadelphia on the 20th of December for the United Presbyterian mission in Egypt. He was accompanied by Miss Ella O. Kyle, of Xenia, Ohio, who goes to the same mission. Mr. Griffin left Egypt on the breaking out of the rebellion, and came to this country with his three children. He has succeeded in securing for them a good home, and now returns.

—Prof. Stratton's class at Wheaton Theological Seminary numbers ten, two of them being temporarily absent engaged in preaching. This gives proportionally a larger number of students than any of the great seminaries of Chicago and vicinity, except possibly the Methodist Episcopal at Evanston.

—Prof. Monhanna Barakat, of the United Presbyterian College of Osiout, Egypt, is in this country. He will spend a few weeks in addressing the churches on the evangelization of Egypt.

—The United Presbyterian church has as yet only three institutions among the freedmen, located at Knoxville, Tenn., Chase City, Va., and Abbeyville, Va., with a total enrollment of about 700. It is estimated by the secretary of of the Freedmen's Board, Rev. J. W. Witherspoon, that 2,500 scholars have been taught in these schools and by teachers who received education in them.

—In Utah territory the "Gentiles" are remarkably active in their endeavors to Christianize the "saints." The Episcopalians, Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, and even the Romanists work hand in hand to fight polygamy and its attendant evils. The Lutherans are now in the field. The Swedish Augustana Synod sent a missionary there to work among the Scandinavians. A site for a school house and church, centrally located, has been secured at the cost of $2,500. A congregation when first organized numbered but five persons. Like all the other missions, this too is a union of school and church. There are supposed to be 40,000 Scandinavian Mormons in Utah and surrounding settlements, and of these about one-fourth are Swedes.

—Major D. W. Whittle, who began a series of evangelistic services in Dayton abont two weeks since, has been compelled, says the Telescope, to abandon his labors on account of throat affliction. At this time he is unable to leave his room; and the meetings which were continued for a time by the city pastors have now been discontinued. Mr. McGranahan, the leader of song in Mr. Whittle's meetings, has also been in poor health since he came to Dayton.

—In addition to the meetings conducted by Dr. Earle in conjunction with Dr. Fulton, Brooklyn, will be the field of several distinctively evangelistic efforts this winter. Rev. E. Hammond is to work with Mr. Talmage. The Sunday afternoon meetings of Mr. Pentecost are large and earnest, and a wide-spread religious effect on the masses outside of the churches will be diligently labored for.

The Charches vs. Lodgery.

The following statements were made in the late Kansas State Convention as to the position of the different denominations represented toward secret societies. They were collated and kindly forwarded by the secretary.

S. Collins, D. D., of the United Presbyterian church:

We declare that all associations, whether formed for political, or benevolent purposes, which impose upon their members an oath of secrecy, or an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws, are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christ, and church members ought not to have fellowship with such associations."

Rev. W. Hibbard of the Free Methodist church:

"Evil works instinctively incline to darkness. Good works grow up in light. A bad institution need not be secret. Therefore all secret societies are to be eschewed. Any society requiring an oath, affirmation, or promise of secrecy as a condition of membership is held to be a secret society; and any member joining or continuing in such, violates his covenant obligations and shall in due form be excluded from the church."

Rev. R. Loggau of the United Brethren church:

There shall be no connection with secret combinations, nor shall involuntary servitude be tolerated in any way. Any member or preacher who shall connect himself with a secret society shall be regarded as having thereby declared that he prefers such society to the fellowship of our church, and shall be considered as having withdrawn from the church. No person shall be permitted to join our church while holding membership in a secret society."

Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, Reformed Presbyterian:

Christians should walk in the light. Their doctrines, their purposes, and manner of life, their rules of action and conduct, should not be concealed. The formation of secret associations for the prosecution of ends, however good professedly, is inconsistent with the requirements of Christian principles.

We therefore condemn the following errors, and testify against all who maintain them: * * * 7th. That members of associations, either sworn or pledged to secresy in regard to the nature and doings of such associations, may be admitted to ecclesiastical fellowship."

—In a recent sermon Spurgeon used the following significant language. If some people on our side of the Atlantic did not shut their eyes to the truth they would take warning from his weighty words: "It needs but little to degrade the Christian into a Ritualist, and still less to turn the Ritualist into a Romanist. We shall go far if we once start on the downhill road. I would to God, in these degenerate times, we had back again somewhat of the stern spirit of the Cameronians and the Covenanters; for now men play fast and loose with God, and think that anything they please to do will satisfy the Most High. Mischief will surely come of this lax state of things to the churches of this day, as surely as affliction came to Israel of old."

HOME AND FARM.

Shut out the Cold.

The temperature of the living animal body cannot vary greatly, and therefore when the weather grows colder there is an increased demand for food to be consumed in keeping up the natural heat. A low temperature is an expensive condition, as every farmer who has wintered his stock well knows. There are two general methods of overcoming the wearing or exhaustive effects of severe cold weather: giving the animals an abundance of rich and palatable, heat-forming food, and securing them from exposure in warm and comfortable stables. A happy combination of these two methods is the one to be provided by every stock raiser who looks both to comfort of his animals and their profitableness.

If stables generally could be warmed with safety by stoves, there is no doubt that a saving in the amount of fodder would result. Much can be done in this direction by keeping the animals in well-built stables, and free from all currents of frost-laden air. The writer has in mind a stable, where a long row of milk cows suffered, almost to the point of freezing, on many winter nights, because the stable was full of large cracks, and the doors only partly shut out the drifting snows. A few hours of patching the walls, flooring, and doors, with very little expense for lumber, would have made its good effects evident within a single week at the dairy-room. A cow is not at her best when she must shiver with the cold and have her rough coat covered with frost and snow of a severe winter night. Looked at in simply a pecuniary light, the method of keeping farm stock does not bring the best returns. There is no farmer who, being able to own a herd of cattle or a flock of sheep, can afford not to house them well. He may let them eat at will from the stack of the best hay that is made, but if they have no more shelter than the stack affords, he may come to the conclusion common to all bad agricultural practice. that farming does not pay. Let this be a word in season for all those who may profit by it. Stop the cracks in the stables, and save pain for your animals and money for yourself. Take special care not to have the farm stock exposed to the chilling winter blasts; in short, shut out the cold.—American Agriculturist.

They have at one of the leading restaurants in Paris a Chinese cook whose sole and exclusive duty is to cook rice. It is claimed that he can prepare and serve it in two or three dozen different styles. When Lord Lyons gives dinner parties he hires this culinary Chinaman for the special purpose of cooking a dish of curry and rice that is described as delicious.

When Humbert of Italy—famed for his admirable horsemanship—visited Vienna, his horse, one of the finest in the imperial stables, was so utterly unmanageable that he had, to his great mortification, to take his seat in a carriage. A groom, since discharged from the Emperor's service, now confesses that he, by cruelly flogging the horse on showing him white plumes such as the king wore, had been the author of the difficulty.

Oil of Peppermint in Neuralgia.—Dr. Meredith, in the Birmingham Medical Review, recommends oil of peppermint as an external application for allaying neuralgic pain, so often complained of in cases of herpes zoster. He has used it with great relief to the patient even when the eruption was out in a fresh florid condition. He thinks that the value of this remedy in relieving neuralgic pain deserves to be better known.—Exchange.

It is one thing to raise a goodly number of promising pullets and to carry them successfuly through the summer and fall, but if we neglect them now and do not provide good house quarters, grain, animal and vegetable food for their use in winter, the summer labor will much of it be thrown away.

Callas should not be forced immediately after planting, but should be kept in a cool room until well rooted, before moving to a warmer place. The pots must be well drained, for, although the Calla requires much moisture, it does not flower well with stagnant water at its roots.

The London Gardner's Chronicle closes a lengthy notice of several fruit tree maladies, with the caution never to use artificial manure, with the composition of which the cultivator is not thoroughly acquainted.

Hens properly handled will lay as many eggs from November to May, as from May to November. But few hens do it, to judge by the rate at which eggs are now selling per dozen.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich, and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can donbt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Masou," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry & League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen $1 25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated expositiou of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. Each of these able writers in clear, forcible language treats the subject in one or more of its varied phases. Rev. David McDill in six chapters treats of 1. "Their Antiquity; 2 Their Secrecy; 3. "Oaths and Promises;" 4 "Profaneness" 5. "Their Exclusiveness;" 6. "False Claims." Prest Blanchard handles the topic: "Shall Christians join Secret Societies?" in a masterly way, showing clearly that they are all opposed to the genius of Christianity; and Dr. Beecher closes with his Report on Secret Societies, which was adopted by the Congregational Association of Illinois at Ottawa in 1866. In cloth, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.25. Paper cover, 15 cents; per dozen, $1.25

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfers with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

FOR SALE BY

EZRA A. COOK,

No. 7 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

In the Coils; or the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historial sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of every-day life, and showing how individual, domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. Parents who wish, not only to keep their children out of these night-schools of Satan, but to give them arguments against them in the most attractive dress, will do well to purchase this book. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen. $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Stearns' Review of Two Masonic Addresses. In this scathing review the lying pretensions of the order are clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Letters on Masonry. Showing the antagonism between Freemasonry and the Christian religion. Paper cover, 30 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers; price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen. $7.50

Freemasonry and the M. E. Church. Let every lover of truth and justice read this report of the trial of Rev. J. T. Michael, showing how he was driven out of the M. E. church for opposing Masonry and loving Methodism. 10 cents each; per dozen. $1.00.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate, and afterward in pamphlet form. The Evangelical Repository, reviewing it, says: "This pamphlet consists of a series of articles originally published in the Church Advocate, Lancaster, Pa. Elder M. S. Newcomer opposes secret societies, and especially Freemasonry and Elder G. W. Wilson defends the system. We are free to say that Mr. Newcomer has thoroughly routed his opponent at every point. Mr. Wilson speaks by the book, as he is a Royal Arch Mason." 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The Senate on Wednesday passed the Civil Service Reform bill with important amendments which require the action of the House.

—The report that General W. T. Sherman had joined the Roman Catholic church is denied.

—Chicago stands fifth on the list of our cities as a port of entry. New York, Boston, Philadelphia and San Francisco are the first four.

—Alexander H. Stephens, the new governor of Georgia, since he took office, less than eight weeks ago, has pardoned and turned loose upon the community forty-eight convicts, twelve of whom were murderers and five were convicted of rape.

—As a consequence of the failure of the City Bank of Rochester, N. Y., whose President speculated in oil with the depositors money, a run has begun upon some of the local savings banks.

—While Mrs. Barker of Brookings, Dakota, was absent from her house engaged in doing some work at the barn, her three little children were left alone. It is presumed they were playing with the fire, for upon the mother's return two of them were found burned to death, and the clothing of a third, an infant six months old, was on fire. The heroic mother's efforts to save the little one nearly cost her life, as the baby died of its injuries, and the mother was so badly burned that her life is despaired of.

—The bark Gembok reports in New York that during a southwest gale and a thick snow squall, a ball of fire passed across the ship, injuring three seamen and breaking both gunwales and ripping the planks from the stern of the starboard boat and exploded about twenty yards from the ship with a loud report, sparks flying from it like a rocket.

—It is reported that the water famine in Western Pennsylvania is becoming a very serious matter. In McKean, Warren, Venango, Butler and Clarion counties over 1,800 oil wells are shut down from want of water. The mills operated by water power power stand idle. Live stock in many places has to be driven several miles to water.

—Census statistics of 1880 show that the average wages earned and paid to operatives in American cotton factories that year was $245.93 for each employe. This was the compensation for a year's work. In Great Britain the average wages paid employes in 1881 was $250.33, or nearly $5 a year more than was paid in this country!

—The entire population of Vienna celebrated the 600th anniversary of the founding of the House of Hapsburg, on the 27th ult. Reports from all parts of the Empire show that the anniversary is being celebrated with the greatest enthusiasm.

—On an average over one hundred persons are searched nightly in the city of Dublin under the curfew clause of the Repression act.

—Egyptian revolutionists, Arabi, Toulba, Abdelal, Mahmoud Fehmy, Ali Fehmy, Yakoub Sami, and Mahmoud Sami condemned to exile in Ceylon, have gone to that island. A number of their comrades have been condemned also to banishment.

PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.

The last week of the old year makes a good record in the publisher's department and if workers for subscribers keep at work the ten thousand subscribers will in time be made up, which with a home at Washington is a "consummation devoutly to be wished."

Iowa is now the leading State as regards the number of subscribers, and J. W. Modlin sends a bugle note as he mails to us a club of fifteen subscribers for a year each:

"I AM STILL ON THE WAR PATH.

This is the first installment of my club which I hope to make larger than ever this year." I. Leadbetter sends $15.00 for a club of ten and seven of the names.

James Miller, and A. M. Paull each send ten for a year each.

Mrs. M. B. Nichols, nine, completing her club of ten.

Moses Ferrin, sends eight for a year each. He is persevering and successful.

David Horning, sends in six for a year each. Many send in encouraging words and are at work.

MASONIC BOOKS

FOR SALE BY

EZRA A. COOK,

7 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

Books sent post-paid on receipt of retail price, but books by mail are at risk of person ordering, unless 10 cents extra is sent to pay for registering them, when their safe delivery is guaranteed. Books at retail ordered by express are sold at 10 per cent. discount and delivery guaranteed, but not express paid. Postage stamps taken for small sums.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicographer, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority because they tell too much.

General Ahiman Rezon and Freemasons' Guide. By Daniel Sickels, 33d degree. The most perfect Masonic monitor published in the United States. Embellished with many engravings and containing monitorial instructions in the degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Masons, with explanatory lectures, the ceremonies of consecration and dedication of new lodges, installation of officers, laying foundation stones, dedication of Masonic halls, burial services, Masonic calendar, ritual for a Lodge of Sorrow, Masonic trials, etc. Bound in fine cloth, extra large 12mo, $2.00.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the entire ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Scores of Masons have privately admitted that this is a standard text-book in the lodge and is strictly correct; but publicly it is not acknowledged as authority, though many officers of the lodge make use of it. Price, in cloth, $2.50.

Sickels' Freemasons' Monitor. Containing the degrees of Freemasonry embraced in the Lodge, Chapter, Council and Commandery, embellished with nearly 300 symbolic illustrations, together with tactics and drill of Masonic Knighthood. Also forms of Masonic documents, notes, songs, Masonic dates, installations, etc. By D. Sickels; 32mo. In tuck, $1.50; cloth, $1.00.

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. A practical guide to the ceremonies in the degrees conferred in Masonic Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated edition. In cloth, $1.25; in paper, 75 cents.

Although this Monitor is extensively used by the lodge, especially in conferring the higher degrees, it is publicly called an exposition, and not allowed as authority.

Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, or Monitorial Instructions in the Degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Mason, with Ceremonies relating to installations, dedications, consecrations, laying of corner-stones, etc. Price, $2.00.

Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry. Containing a Definition of Terms, Notes on its History, Traditions and Antiquities, and an Account of all the Rites and Mysteries of the Ancient World. 12 mo., 526 pages, $3.00.

Female Masonry. Manual of the Order of the Eastern Star. Containing the ritual, symbols, lectures, etc., of the five degrees of "Adoptive Masonry," Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, profusely illustrated and handsomely bound. Price. $1.50.

Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, or Monitorial Instruction Book. By Albert G. Mackey, Past General High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of the United States, Knight of the Eagle and Pelican, Prince of Mercy, etc. Price, cloth, $1.25; tuck, $1.75.

Mackey's Text-Book of Masonic Jurisprudence. Illustrating the laws of Freemasonry, both written and unwritten. This is the great law book of Freemasonry. 570 pages. Price, $2.50.

Allyn's Ritual of Masonry. Illustrated by a large number of engravings, and containing a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, Orange and Odd-fellows' Societies Price, $5.00.

A WORD TO PATRONS.

There are many ways in which you may aid in the care and labor of publishing your paper without material inconvenience to yourselves.

1. Send in your renewals the week before your time expires as marked on each number of your paper.

2. Write each name and the Post Office address of new subscribers very plainly.

3. Write all matter intended for publication on separate sheets of paper, and only on one side of the sheet.

4. Address all letters relating to money matters and make all Drafts and Money orders payable to W. I. PHILLIPS, Treas.

5. Address all communications intended for publication to the Editor of the Christian Cynosure.

6. Address all letters relative to the general management of the Cynosure suggesting changes, additions, omissions, or plans for increasing its circulation, etc., to J. P. STODDARD.

7. Put the name Christian Cynosure upon every envelope and so advertise the paper.

By giving a little attention to the above, you will relieve your employees of much inconvenience and save time and expense that otherwise must be paid for with your money.

SOME CHANGES in this week's issue of the Cynosure will be seen, we hope, with pleasure by all its readers. The new and handsome type, while it is easily read, permits the insertion of fully one-fourth more matter. Other improvements are contemplated, and the increased usefulness and value of the paper will more than make up for the extra labor and expense. In all these efforts we expect of all the friends and owners of the paper a hearty co-operation in its circulation to make receipts correspond with added expenses.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

The customary New Year's reception at the White House was abruptly terminated by the sudden and alarming summons of death. Judge Elisha Allen, the minister of the Hawaiian government and Dean (since he was the oldest member) of the diplomatic corps, became suddenly ill during the brilliant ceremonies and died in a few minutes after being removed to a cloak room. The present administration has had such warning of the mortality of man as it may well heed.

The House of Representatives seemed pushed by some overpowering providence upon the horns of the perplexing Civil Service Reform bill on Thursday, and almost before the members realized the fact the measure was adopted intact by a vote of 155 to 47. Like almost all reform measures which have passed Congress of late years the bill is full of compromising features. It is, however, a turning point and such a point must be found somewhere if the abuses of the appointing system are to be abated. The work is not yet complete nor will this measure effect anything if the President is not disposed to let it. He can, if he so pleases, make it more of a dead letter than even the Edmund's Anti-Mormon law, by simply letting it alone. Or he may appoint the commission for which it provides, and then by giving them nothing to do make them a public laughing stock. The bill does not correct the evil of arbitrary removal, nor does it entirely prohibit the vicious political assessment business, but only so far as the tax is demanded by an officer or employee of government. It makes, however, a competitive examination instead of the recommendation of Congressman the method of entry upon public service, and opens a door through which some useful amendments may enter when the people are heard on the question.

On the same day the Senate by a bare minority passed what is known as the Bonded Spirits bill, which has for weeks been the special care of John Sherman of Ohio. It would be named more truly an act for the relief and encouragement of the makers of whiskey poison. The case is this: Distillers are allowed a certain time during which their whiskey may remain in a bonded warehouse without the payment if the revenue tax. This period has now elapsed as to some 100,000,000 gallons on which about $80, 000,000 tax is due. If the tax is to be collected the sale of the stuff will be necessary, but the market would break if so much was at once forced upon it and the whiskey makers would break down with it in one grand financial smash. What is more, many banks and capitalists have loaned money to these distillers, so their vile business could go on while their barrels of liquid poison were accummulating under bond. If the tax is collected they will fail also and a general panic is sweeping upon us with this tidal wave of whiskey, and only the trembling breakwater of a Congressional vote protects us. That is the reason John Sherman is on the anxious seat. He is by no means sure that the House will pass a measure so closely contested in the Senate, and many discerning men claim that the bill is only a scheme of the distillers by which they will largely evade the tax and walk off in the end with $60,000,000 of money due the government. The repeal of the whiskey tax entirely is widely urged, and in a year or two they expect this to be accomplished. O for a man of courage in Congress to baulk this scheme, panic or no panic.

Work has been begun on a new building for the accommodation of the secret labor lodges of Chicago. The city council has given a site, and through the structure is to be temporary, it will stand long enough to fix a broad mark of condemnation upon the act. Suppose Mr. Jacobs or Col. Clark, whose labors are abundant for the physical and spiritual relief of the city's poor, should ask the council for a lot to build a Sabbath school room. The proposition would be heard with a howl of indignation from two-thirds of the aldermen. Much louder would be the condemnation if a Methodist or Presbyterian church should ask for space to build a meeting house Yet why are not their claims as good as the trade unions, which are private organizations managed by ambitious, and frequently ignorant and reckless men, and continually threatening the peace of the city by organizing strikes and maltreating laborers who will not go all lengths with the unscrupulous leaders. This act of the council is a menace to the business interests of Chicago and could only have been passed by a body under the influence of the lodge.

Leon Gambetta, the leader of French Republicanism, died as the old year went out. His countrymen mourn his loss as of a man upon whom great interests of state depend. True, Gambetta has for ten years been the best known man in France, and next to Thiers, his opposition to the remnants of monarchy in 1871 and 1877, and to the clique which hoped to establish a military despotism under cover of McMahon after the death of Thiers, were most useful in continuing the struggling life of the Republic. But he failed as a minister, and saw also the desire for military glory, with which he hoped to scourge the Germans, expiring in the breasts of his countrymen. Revenge for the Rhine provinces was so great a part of his public policy, that his death is taken as a guarantee of peace in Berlin.

—It has often been quoted that 1500 lodges collapsed under the Morgan pressure, but the authority for the statement has either been forgotten, or there is a dim recollection that the most conscienceless of Freemasons in respect to truth, Rob Morris, is responsible for it. It appears that the figures have more reliable backing—no less than the Grand Lodge of Iowa, in whose annual report for 1858 appears the following:

"Fifteen hundred lodges went down in the strife! The ranks of the craftsmen were reduced in numbers from rising fifty thousand to less than five thousand. The songs of the temple builders ceased. Grass grew in the quarries."

THE ONE ORGANIZATION THAT CANNOT BE INVESTIGATED.

Freemasonry is the one institution of this country that will not bear investigation. Schools are inspected, churches throw their doors open and invite the strictest scrutiny; political parties are examined, searched and riddled, if anything like corruptness is seen or suspected in connection with them; all these institutions simply ask a fair field and no favor. The infidel may criticise Moses, the Protestant may criticise the pope, temperance men may criticise the rum-seller, the Republican may denounce the Democrat and the Democrat may denounce the Republican; every man is privileged to say his own say on his own premises, and the people listen and judge whether the man is too severe in his denunciations or not; but freedom of speech is not abridged.

This is a characteristic of a republican form of government. A despotism, knowing that the right of free speech fraught with dangers to tyrants, denies free speech and criticism, and in consequence thereof secret combinations are formed to effect in the darkness what they have no opportunity to accomplish in the light. But in such a country as this, with free speech and a free press, and equal rights before the laws, what under heaven have we to do with secret combinations and oath-bound associations?

And what is this institution which is above all criticism, which cannot be talked about, revealed or exhibited? Is it something which hides itself in the darkness as the private property of individuals with which outsiders have no concern? By no means! It pitches its tents like an army in our midst, it parades our streets with drums, with trumpets and banners, and weapons of war. We look out upon these armed hosts in battle array and inquire what power is this which marshalls armies and prepares to levy war? Are these armed men the defenders of the nation, the upholders of free institutions, the soldiers to whom the people turn for defence in the hour of danger and invasion? By no means. What then is the meaning of all this military parade? Is it a sham a cheat, a delusion and a snare? or is it another government sustained by force which rules upon the same soil and in defiance of the authority of "the powers that be, which are "ordained of God?"

We look again at this procession and we see priests and ecclesiastical dignitaries, with symbolic emblems, with robes, keys, crosses and mitres, and with the holy Scriptures borne in pompous procession before them, and we ask, "What means all this?" Is this a religious institution, which parades itself before the public, and if it is, what is this religion which is thus represented by medieval symbolism and barbaric pomp? It is not Christianity, for Christ's name must never be mentioned in connection with its ceremonies. It is not the Mosaic religion for infidels participate in its rights and observances. It is not a religion which makes men truthful, or temperate, or chaste, or honest; as the conduct of many of its votaries plainly proves; and yet to all intents and purposes this is undeniably a system of religion.

Now when an army of men are marching through our streets, have we not a right to know whence they come and whither they go? When a new religion erects its gorgeous temples in our midst, and seeks to win us to worship at its shrines and swear allegiance at its altars, is it not our right and our duty to know what its true character is?

But how can we know? We are told when men secede from this institution and reveal its secrets that they have broken their oaths, and they are perjured scoundrels. Then it appears that they have taken oaths. What kind of an institution is this that thus binds men with oaths? Christ has said, swear not at all; but here is an institution which from beginning to end is beset by the most terrible oaths. And this institution beguiles our boys within its lodges, leads our young men away from their homes, takes the husband and father from his family, and convenes them in a secret lodge with doors barred, bolted and guarded by a tyler with his gleaming sword, and we as men of common sense and public spirit, want to know what is going on inside. It is not a matter of mere curiosity, it is a matter of duty and of right. If these men are swearing terrible oaths, what are they binding themselves to do or not to do? What are they binding themselves to conceal and never reveal? We meet these men day by day; we trade with them, do business with them, vote for them and worship with them. They act as judges to decide our cases, they enter into our politics and into the destinies of our government; they so control matters that while they number perhaps a tenth of the legal voters eligible to office, they manage to control from three-fourths to nine-tenths of the public offices, and to consume almost all of the salaries which we, in common with other outsiders, are taxed to pay. And now we inquire, what is this secret combination which flaunts its banners through our streets, lays the corner stones of our court houses and post offices, and then slams its doors in honest men's faces and then conspires and raises mobs to prevent all investigation of its affairs. They charge men with breaking their oaths. We want to know just what those oaths are; perhaps it will appear that they are oaths which ought to be broken.

The Freemasons charge that the expositions of Freemasonry are catch-penny affairs. When, as in Boston, a Masonic mob filled the Chambers street church with riot and uproar, throwing missiles, and it is said drawing pistols and aiming them at the speaker; and when the proprietors of Music Hall required that an admission fee be charged at an exposition of Freemasonry, in order to keep out the mob and preserve order, and the city authorities required the National Christian Association to pay sixty dollars for the services of twenty policemen to keep order and prevent high toned Masons from mobbing and murdering the speakers, then the fraternity after having filled the hall with organized uproar for two hours, set up their howl about its being a catch-penny affair.

This accusation comes with much grace from the votaries of an institution which charges from ten to one hundred dollars for initiating men into its membership, causing them to swear in advance to conceal they know not what, and obey the commands of a fraternity of the nature of which they have not the slightest idea; and when honest men wish to know the actual truth about this arrogant and impudent institution, they are told there is only one way to find out and that is to join the lodge and bind themselves by the same obligations. And when we say we wish to look before we leap, and know in advance precisely what this institution is, they tell us that there are many good men belonging to the lodge. But what of that? Not one of these good men knew what Freemasonry was until they had joined the lodge; and every one of them has bound himself by oath never to tell friend or foe about it since joining. And besides if the presence of good men prove that Freemasonry is a good institution, then the presence of bad men proves that it is a bad institution and the presence of drunken men proves that it is a drunken institution; for there are a plenty of all these classes connected with it.

We are told that many ministers are members of Masonic lodges. This is true, but none of them knew what Freemasonry was before they joined, and none of them can tell what it is now, without being branded as perjurers by all the Masonic fraternity.

"But there are ministers who say that Masonry is a good institution."

Yes, and so ministers have said the same of war, and slavery and whisky-drinking. If the institution is a good one why swear a man to keep it secret? If it is a philanthropic institution why not open the gates and let the public in? If it embodies great truths and glorious principles, why not publish them upon the house-top? But instead of that, when men, having seen the pompous parades and listened to the eulogies of Freemasonry, decide that it would be well for them to know for themselves just what this institution is that would lead their sons, hood-winked and haltered, to bind themselves with horrid oaths and barbarous obligations, and when they say, We propose to ascertain the true character of this concern by asking those who have joined it and left it, behold "hell from beneath is moved," and all the powers of darkness are let loose and organized mobs and Masonic menagerics turn out to deprive men of their constitutional rights of free speech and free discussion, and to prevent men from knowing the truth in the case.

Freemasonry shuts the public out of its secrets, but it advertises itself by laying corner-stones, beating drums, waving banners and marching in processions, and no one interferes with it. No one storms their temples or trespasses on their rights; but when a few Christian men, who believe that the Masonic institution is fraught with untold evil, hire a hall, and honest men and women pay for their tickets and come to hear lectures on Masonry, lo, a band of trained Freemasons take possession of the hall and fill it with uproar, defeating the order of the meeting and then seek to mob and beat and maltreat persons who are simply doing what they have abundant right to do. Such is the character of this institution, and of persons making such professions joined with such practice it may be said: "Let them alone, they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind both shall fall into the ditch." Mat. 15: 14.

To this brotherhood may be applied with special emphasis the solemn words of the dying patriarch Jacob to his rebellious sons:

"Simeon and Levi are brethren; instruments of cruelty are in their habitations.

O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, my honor, be not thou united; for in their anger they slew a man, and in their selfwill they digged down a wall.

Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel: I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel." Gen. 49: 5–7.

COMFORTING SODOM—EZEKIEL 16 :54.

BY REV. WM. MOERDYK.

The prophet Ezekiel had been commissioned to "cause Jerusalem to know her abominations," 16: 1. Of all sin God saith, "That abominable thing which the Lord hateth." But especially is the sin of Jerusalem, the people of God, abominable in the sight of the Lord. A sinful act committed in the temple was a greater evil than the same act done in a private dwelling, because the temple was a sanctified place. Christians are a consecrated people, and by their sins the temple of God is profaned. Weeds in a garden are more odious and unsightly than weeds in waste places or by the roadside.

The abominations of Jerusalem were exceedingly great. She was corrupted even more than her sisters or neighbors, Sodom and Samaria. Her guilt was greatly aggravated by the fact that by her abominations she had justified Sodom and Samaria—"In that thou art a comfort to Sodom."

Jerusalem had by her abominations encouraged Sodom to continue in her sinful course, instead of shaming her out of it. She had quieted the conscience of the men of Sodom, had made them feel quite comfortable and respectable because they could say, "Jerusalem is no better than we, who make no pretension to piety."

Are not many Christians of the present day guilty of the charge against Jerusalem, namely, of comforting Sodom?

The professing Christian who visits the saloon or the theatre, or who takes part in the dance, makes people of the world feel perfectly comfortable, who reason that if the Christian may do these things, there is certainly no wrong in their doing them. Christians comfort Sodom when they make sin respectable and fashionable.

How it must please the devil and comfort his servants when some professing Christian, some honorable member of the church, or especially when some minister of the Gospel applies to the lodge to become a member of the fraternity! Any family would feel honored and think itself quite respectable if such good men join it. If there is any member of that lodge whose conscience smote him or was ill at ease for taking that awful oath and for joining in those sacrilegious ceremonies, he is comforted at once when a minister of Christ (?) becomes a member of the lodge. Christian ministers and members make Freemasonry respectable by becoming members thereof. They help the wicked. When a Christian minister writes, as one did not long ago, "that our best Christians and foremost preachers are members of the Masonic order," he certainly "speaks comfortably to" Sodom, and grieves many dear children of God. Certainly "there is joy" in hell and in the lodge.

No wonder that ministers are not required to pay initiation fees and annual dues and are gratuitously given a large life insurance besides; the lodge can afford to pay them well for the advertisement they give to the order by their membership.

Without hesitation I affirm that every professing Christian and every Christian minister who joins the Masonic fraternity, thereby aids and abets and comforts the enemies of Christ.

LIGHT ON MASONRY FROM AURORA BOREALIS.

Having moved my great telescope from "Pike's Peak" to Morris Heights and set up. with vision directed for Aurora's sublime theatre, with enthusiastic hopes, I find my most sanguine anticipations supremely outdone in her celestial readings.

In the multitudinous scenes pressing upon my bewildered eyes, all Masonic, I am forced to select, if possible, what will best conserve our "sublime order." In case of any lack of Masonic symbols in Aurora's scenes, I can (Morris like) supply them by putting them there. As the question of Morgan's absence has greatly perplexed our divine institution for many years, and one of our All Puisant Grand Inspectors General is now on the anxious seat in search of light on the question, "Who was Wm. Morgan and what became of him?" we turned our vision in this direction. The question is at last solved. The Batavia monument is founded on a myth.

As one Thurlow Weed just gone away from earth, —if he had gone sooner, we as Masons would have been reconciled to the sad dispensation, but he must live long enough to just nail the Morgan murder to our sublime and honorable institution. Masonic peace to all such cowans.—we are rendered shouting happy in the timely and unmistakable evolution of the truth on this perplexing question by the light of our Aurora Borealis. Amen, "So mote it be."

To add to our embarrassment the papers had joined in tacking this crime to our benign order. Even the New York Weekly Witness, whose reticence on the question of Masonry for a year or two we had begun to admire, is now out before a hundred thousand subscribers with the following alarming caption —"Morgan's Death — The Anti-masonic Mystery Cleared up—Thurlow Weed's dying Revelation—The Secret that he kept for half a Century."

Shades of Knighthood, save us!

The prayer is answered. The question must be carefully analysed. First then, we demonstrate in Aurora's light, the absolute fact that no such man as Wm. Morgan ever was. The whole tragic story of the Morgan murder is an Anti-mason lie, and the records made and gone into history and put on the Morgan monument, are a base fabrication, as our Sublime Prince, Rob, will show in his forth-coming book.

Second, be it known by our holy order, that Wm. Morgan was a "wife-beater, a drunkard, a thief, and a perjured wretch." The first three counts were true while a Mason, and the last became true when he revealed the character of our sublime institution by telling the truth. The last named crime is truly un-Masonic. We could tolerate the others.

Third, Morgan's absence from 1826 to the present, being a fixed fact, it devolves on some true Mason to account for, and so take away our reproach. How Bro. Rob will solve the question remains to be seen, but we have the needed information with which he will substantially concur.

Suffer a little delay while we adjust our Masonic telescope. (The universe is all Masonic.)

There! How plain! The Morgan absence is solved. Aurora Borealis (he is a 33 ° Mason, as our sublime brethren of that grade know) runs the sublime, grand, universal, electrical gasometer of the universe, in company with our G. A. O. T. U. This establishment engages an immense army of departed Masonic omnifics, many of whom were charitably and beneficiently translated by Masonic law to the Grand Lodge on high. One of the fortunate ones of this happy band was Wm. Morgan. A few times in each year, a grand dress parade is in order, and once in many years is a pan-conclave in which all departed Masons are permitted to join—even such as fell victims by un-Masonic conduct, to our benign laws. By our sublime Masonic labratory, Wm. Morgan's bones were made into Masonic jewels, his skull is used in initiating Knight Templars, while the intangible part is made into gas to illuminate our halls. Thus we utilize everything that nothing be lost.

Behold a mystery to understandings un-Masonic, to "All Puisants" of the sublime 33°, a common fact. By the fiat of the order, by one rap of the gavel on the rings of Saturn, Aurora's gong, all the scattered parts of the legions of the G. L. above are instantly brought together in "due form and order."

The profane cowan sees the grand exhibitions in the midnight skies at low twelve, and ignorantly calls them "Northern lights." With my instrument fully adjusted here on Morris' Heights I saw Miller of Belfast, Ireland, Morgan of Batavia, N. Y., and scores more whom Masonry in different ways translated to the G. L. A. I saw and recognized Morgan and by him was introduced to many others of similar history from among the great army which our sublime order has demitted to our celestial abode.

PIKE'S PEAK.

TEXAS WEARS A LODGE BRAND.

A correspondent of the New York Herald writes of a disgraceful affair at Belton, Texas, whereiu eleven ladies invited to the house of a Christian sister, Mrs. Henry, to hold a religious meeting were arrested at the instanee of Henry himself and a jury fined them eaeh twenty dollars. The Free Methodist eomments forcibly upon the case thus:

"It is a matter of history well known, we suppose, to our readers, that Texas was settled under grant from Mexico. While it was a part of the territory of that eountry, its foundations were laid in Masonry. In 1836 she gained her independence, and from that time until the first day of Mareh, 1845, she existed a separate republic, at which latter date, by vote of Congress and signature of President Tyler, Texas became one of the States of this Union. During the war of her independenee the five-pointed star, a Masonic emblem, was adopted as her insignia. It was understandingly adopted, because its leading spirits were Masons, and it became the sign to adventurous 'craftsmen,' and men who ought to have been hung, and others who should have served their country in a State's prison; but Masonie influence got between them and their deserts. They knew where to go to, and they went by the hundreds, thus replenishing the Christ-hating, woman-degrading element of the new republie.

"That this is no fancy sketch is proven on good Masonie authority. 'At a eelebration of the Festival of John the Baptist in 1844, [while Texas was an independeut republie, but knoeking at the door of the Union for admission,] at Portland, Maine, Right Worthy Bro. Teulon, a member of the Grand Lodge of Texas, in reply to a toast eomplimentary to the Masons of that republie observed: 'Texas is emphatieally a Masouie country; all our Presidents and Viee Presidents, and four-fifths of our State offieers, were and are Masons; our national emblem, the Lone Star, was ehosen from among the emblems seleeted by Freemasonry to illustrate the moral virtues—it is a five-pointed star and alludes to the five points of fellowship.' (See Moore's Freemason's Magazine, Vol. iii., page 309.) We suppose this seed has been seattered not far from the immediate vieinity of Belton. As the tide of emigration has been pouriug into that State, its Masonie quality has likely been toned down as a whole, and there are localities where sueh an outrage would not be tolerated; but it is where the old leaven has been pushed out by the new, or in some region where the new lands were not preoccupied by Masons rather than Americans.

"It was here in the town of Belton, Bell County, that two good men, the Dow brothers, a year ago or so, met with similar perseeution for preaehing and holding holiness meetings. First they were taken from a house at night by a mob and whipped and warned to leave the eountry. Failing to do this, they were arrested under State's warrant aud tried before a justice's court on the charge of insanity, eonvieted and sent to the lunatic asylum, notwithstanding the proof was made that they were men of sound miuds. On being conveyed to the lunatie asylum the authorities refused to admit them, knowing, as they did, that the prosecution was simply perseeution for their preaching, when they went about their business.'

"Let us pray God that this abomination may be swept away, so that men may be free to obey the dictates of their eonseiences, aud the messengers of Christ may not be prevented by this thing from doing their whole duty."

—John B. Gough, began leeturing in 1842. Between that time and May, 1882, he delivered 8,480 addresses to 8,500,000 people.

REFORM STORY.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS.

BY THE AUTHOR] OF "LITTLE PEOPLE," "A SUNNY LIFE," ETC.

CHAPTER XXXV.—VOX POPULI, VOX DEI.

One night about a week after these events there was a meeting of two men at a cross road a little way out of the village; which meeting was evidently not accidental, for one of the two had been pacing restlessly back and forth for some time in a state of mingled agitation and expeetancy, and now greeted the other with only these three abruptly spoken words:

"She is dead!"

His eompanion started and a quick change passed over his face. To a man accustomed to taking a good position in society and being flattered and smiled on accordingly, the vision of possible arrest at the hauds of the law eould hardly be an agreeable subject of contemplation; but there is an old saying which tells us to give even the prinee of darkness his due, and I am willing to believe that Maurice Jervish felt for one instant a real pang of remorse—though only a passing sentiment, quiekly overpowered by selfish considerations for his own safety.

"This is horrible business," he finally auswered. "There will be a tremendous fuss made I suppose when the affair comes to be looked into."

"I shall have to lay low till it blows over," returned the other. "So now Jervish, you must let me have a hundred dollars, I can't go without it, my affairs are in a devil of a fix."

"Haven't got more than fifty by me."

"Then borrow the other fifty, can't you?" said his companion impatiently, "I must clear out of here to-night, or it is a jail matter."

"You forget that this confouuded ugly business is likely to get me into a tight box as well as you," said Jervish, uneasily. "But I'm willing to do the best I can. There's a private room in my office. Come down there with me, and we'll talk the matter over."

"I know you are thinking of your own skin, but I've got some regard for mine," answered the other with cool eontempt. "And I want you to understand that the sooner I'm off and out of the reach of pursuit the better for you. I might prove a very ineonvenieut witness before the coroner's jury."

"Oh, eome," said Jervish, alarmed at the threat. "What is the use of talking like that. I'll get the money of Montfort or some other member of the lodge. They won't get wind of the affair before to-morrow morning, and that will give you plenty of time for a fair start."

"I've got the night before me, and, luckily, a good fast horse," returned the other, after a moment's reflection. "Perhaps I had better go down to the offiee, and you ean bring me the money there. Only be quick about it."

Jervish handed him the key of his offiee iu sileuce, and the two separated.

While this eonversation was going on, in a house that stood a little way back from the road and not far from their plaee of meeting lay all that was mortal of Mary Lyman. The seal of the death angel was on those fast elosed lids, and the lines of weariness and pain left by the last struggle made the beautiful faee look even sadder than in life, as, framed in its rippling abnndance of tawuy gold hair, it looked up white and silent, bearing unute but awful witness that a deed of murder had been done.

Let Infinite Pity judge her, for though she had listened anew to the voiee of the tempter who, whispered of a way by which their mutual sin might be covered up—a need rendered more urgent on his part by the faet that he was a married man with wife and children—who shall dare say that the betrayed, deeeived soul may not have found eveu at the eleventh hour pardon and peaee? But what shall I say of him who wrought this ruin, to whom all the saered mystery of awakening womanhood was only a means for the attainment of his own base ends? Charity herself turns away. Better for that man if he had never been born.

Meanwhile Mauriee Jervish in no euviable frame of mind was directing his steps toward the house of Colonel Montfort. It was decidedly the largest and most pretentious in the village, for the Colonel was a man of eonsiderable property, gained not so mueh in lawful bnsiness, as by certain shady transactions already referred to. Ringing the bell he was soon admitted into a room styled the library, though the Colonel was not a man of scholarly tastes, and spent more time smoking than in reading anything older than the morning newspaper—and proceeded at ouce to state his business, with which the reader is already familiar.

"The deuce! This is going a little too far, Jervish. Of eourse the lodge will do its best to bring you off all right, but the truth is we have got about enough to shoulder already. A good many here in Granby are all ripe for an Anti-masonic excitement, and a less affair than this would be quite sufficient to kindle one. That infernal seceder, Severns, is capable of turning the whole neighborhood upside down, to say nothing of the Methodist parson, his brother-in-law. And with an amiable wish that he might see us both consigned to regions unmentionable—for I must stop to remark that the Colonel was a man of deeidedly profane habits of speech, which is nothing very surprising considering the fact that at one time and another he had taken a matter of several hundred oaths, each one far surpassing iu studied insult to Jehovah's name the profanity of an ignorant Irish drayman—he took out his pocket-book with a rather disturbed air and proceeded to count out some bills which he handed to Jervish.

The latter clutched the money eagerly. He had in truth been rather impatient of the preceding lecture, and cared little for the possible "Anti-masonic excitement," so vividly present to the Colonel's imagination, in the narrower and more personal subject of alarm which now absorbed his thoughts.

The Colonel left alone, lit a cigar and puffed away uneasily. What was it to him—this foul murder of an unprotected orphan girl? He was sorry the affair had happened. It was really unfortunate. But with all his Masonic degrees of knighthood did a single thrill of indignation at this double outrage on the weak and defenceless, attest to one faint spark lingering within him of the true knightly spirit of old? Did this "Prince of Mercy" who had dared to take at the same profane shrine one of the divinest titles of the crucified Redeemer—a title the most precious to the heart of his church on earth, aud his brightest crowu of glory among the shining ranks of heaven—feel even a throb of pure human regret or sorrow for the young life whose lamp had gone out forever in such starless gloom?

I trow not. He finished his cigar, sat down and wrote a few hurried lines, addressed to the village sheriff, also a member of Fidelity Lodge, and having sealed the note, transmitted it by a trusty messenger. He had learned by certain former experiences that it is not impossible to make an affair even more "unfortunate" than this redound to the glory of the lodge by a skillful use of those seeret tactics which such men know so thoroughly.

Among the many profane boasts by which Masonry and its kindred order, Odd-fellowship, seeks to "exalt itself above all that is called God or that is worshipped," we hear it sometimes said, "the members of seeret lodges hang together better thau the church." Now this matter in the light of the above scene is certainly worth inquiring into. It is a deplorable fact that a band of thieves and murderers will sometimes "hang together" when a party of philanthropists will split asunder over some miserable shibboleth; but the reason for this is not hard to seek. Selfishness is a strong cement of union, and is it strange that with our imperfect human raee it is often stronger than the bond of the most disinterested love? Besides, it must be remembered that a band of philanthropists do not need to "hang together" for the purpose of shielding each other's erimes—for this is really all the argument amounts to, though like other pieces of lodge sophistry it palms itself off on many an honest but unreflecting mind for the truth. But how long, oh ye Christian pastors, will you let "the simple perish for lack of understanding?" How long shall these false teachers "bring in damnable heresies," and you, Gallio-like, "care for none of these things?"

The night wore away. Like a queen in gold of Ophir, all her garments smelling of myrrh and aloes and cassia, rose the fair regal morning without a eloud on its glory; aud the light of day fell at last ou the white, upturned face, and slowly the village of Granby woke to the fact that murder had been done.

A eoroner's jury was speedily impanneled and a post mortem examinatiou left no doubt of the eause of Mary Lyman's death. The sudden flight of the physician at whose house she died pointed him out conelusively as the guilty tool, aud a warrant was at once issued for his apprehension.

A nnmber of men started in pursuit, the majority being good and honest eitizens who owned allegiance to no power but their lawful government, and to this eireumstance, quite as much as the delay eaused by an aecideut to "the good fast horse" on which he had relied for safety, was due the fact that the doetor was overtaken and brought back to Granby.

His witness before the jury cleared up all remaining mystery about the case. Perhaps he thought it would be better for himself if he made a clean breast of the whole affair seeing that the evidenee of his guilt was too overwhelming to be denied; and the result of his testimony was most damaging proof against Jervish who stilt stayed about town knowing that his flight at this particular juncture would only point suspicion towards him as the real author of Mary Lyman's death.

The proceedings were ex-parte,—the jury's business being simply to obtain evidence against the guilty parties. While we were in session—for, reader, I was on that jury, and know whereof I affirm—at precisely the point when this new witness, whose name was Dr. Forsyth, though the name is immaterial as he has no after connection with my story, was about to give his testimony, we were joined by lawyer Burroughs, a practicing attorney of the village and a member of Fidelity lodge, who apparently dropped in for no other purpose than to kindly aid with his legal knowledge the examinations of the jury. He was a man whose words were softer than oil and smoother than butter, though at need they could be sharper than drawn swords. A thrill of suspicion shot through me when he entered, but it seemed like a breech of charity to think him actuated by any other motive than the simple desire to serve justice, so intently did he listen to the testimony, so earnest did he appear to have all the facts elicited which had a bearing on the case. But when the closing of the prisoner's testimony left us nothing to do but to draw up a formal warrant for the arrest of Maurice Jervish, the before-mentioned attorney looked at his watch, and quietly remarked,

"I need not stay longer now the witness is all in. I see it goes hopelessly against my client but as I am counsel for Mr. Jervish I felt bound to stop and see it through." And so saying he left the room unmindful of the indignant surprise which was visible on every face, unless I except the only Masonic member of the jury who sat in a corner busily trimming his nails from which engrossing occupation he did not take the trouble to lift his head as the door closed behind the retreating attorney.

But another surprise awaited us. The coroner had just penned the warrant, and it only waited our signatures when information was brought to the jury room that Jervish had fled; having learned, no doubt through the Masonic lawyer of Forsyth's arrest and his own danger. Then and not till then did we realize in what an impudent and shameless fashion the jury had been sold.

"Just like Burroughs to serve us such a trick, the mean, sneaking rascal!" broke out one of the jurors, ordinarily a quiet man, but just now roused to a perfect white heat of indignant wrath over this example of Masonic double-dealing.

"Well, the mischief is done," said another; "the best thing we can do is to sign the warrant right off and get it into the hands of the sheriff as soon as we can."

Quickly each man wrote his name—all but the Masonic juror. Oh, that precious hour and a half wasted in trying to argue with one whose stupidity if it had been real instead of pretended, ought to have consigned him to an asylum of imbeciles! But I have understood better ever since how one Mason can so obstruct the wheels of law as to cause "truth to fall in the streets and turn justice backward." For that hour and a half was improved to the utmost by Jervish in making his escape.

The next thing was to put the writ in the hands of the sheriff; but in vain we waited to hear news of Jervish' arrest. Sheriff Simonds had his own notions of Masonic duty which agreed very well with those entertained by Colonel Montfort. The latter's note the previous evening had done its work, though my knowledge that he influenced the sheriff to betray his official trust by a reference to his Masonic obligations, and a promise that the lodge would shield him from consequences, as well as other incidents here related, has been pieced out from the various disclosures that leaked out at different times either through legal investigation, or the less formal process of hearsay.

Hour after hour passed. Men gathered in knots, excited, indignant, and talked the matter over indulging in free comments on the shameful inactivity of the sheriff, as well as the conduct of Burroughs in contriving to possess himself of all the testimony against Jervish, and then going straight from the jury room to warn his client. And as the talk went on it was easy to see that the smouldering fires of popular indignation needed but slight fanning to burst into a fierce flame. There is something awful in such a rising of outraged justice when the people unite as one man to execute vengeance. I know of but one thing more terrible to meet—the face of the Judge in the Great Day of his wrath.

Before the sun set Colonel Montfort and his clique were likely to get such a dose of Anti-masonic excitement as they little calculated on.

"The sheriff is a Mason and an Odd-fellow. He don't want to arrest Jervish, that's plain to be seen," I heard remarked in one of these excited groups. Masons and Odd-fellows are bound to stand by each other. That's what they all say."

"Well I don't know much about the Odd-fellows, only they and the Masons seem to be hand and glove together," observed another. "I've heard it said that Masonry was a good thing for some of our men when they fell into the hands of the rebels in the war, but when it comes to secreting and running off criminals there's two sides to the question."

"I've got a story to tell on that point," spoke up a man who wore a soldier's coat. "When I was in the army I used to see a good deal of Masonry—from the outside, I never was one myself. I know one of our colonels that in the battle of South Mountain would have been cashiered for cowardice if he hadn't been a Mason. Somehow the court martial didn't convict, and not a great while after he was promoted. But that ain't the story I was going to tell. I was in Custer's command and a batch of us were taken prisoners by guerilla General Mosby. He ordered that seven drawn by lot be hung in retaliation for the hanging of seven of his men by the Unionists. Among those that drew the marked ball was a lieutenant that I knew very well. I never saw these men again. They were carried off to a place near Sheridan's headquarters and hung. I and some others got exchanged after awhile, and about a year afterward I met this same lieutenant alive and well. 'I thought you wan't in the land of the living,' says I when we came to speak. 'I shouldn't have been,' says he, 'if I hadn't been a Mason; that saved my life.' I tell you I thought Masonry was a mighty good thing after hearing that, and I had a great idea of joining them myself, but there's a sequel to it as they say. When the war was over I fell in with a man that had been a Confederate soldier, and knew all about the hanging of these men—saw it done. Well, I asked about the lieutenant. 'He was a Freemason,' says he, 'I saw him give the sign to my colonel, and saw him return it. The colonel went off and a little while after he come back with two prisoners of his own that he handed to the officer who had charge of the affair. They were placed on the fatal line instead of the lieutenant who was set free, and their two lives went for his."

A thrill of horror ran through the group which was now considerably enlarged. The soldier's story had only added fuel to the fire. Every minute the excitement deepened as fresh cause in the continued inactivity of the sheriff or some rumor of a new attempt on the part of the lodge to thwart justice, fanned the flame.

Suddenly the cry rose up, at first from a single throat, then caught up and repeated by others, "Tear down Burroughs' office! Lynch the Masonic scoundrel!"

The mob spirit was fast taking possession of the crowd which now swelled to hundreds had gathered about the court house, when a clear, commanding voice addressing them from the steps of the building made a temporary silence.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.

E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec'y.

NOTES.

—Mr. Spaulding visited during the past week Milford, South Farmingham, Holliston and Saxonville, meeting with good success in finding friends and selling books.

—D. C. Durgin of New Hampshire, has been active since the State meeting, which he attended. He writes: "I have been at work in the cause of the American party, with what success time alone will tell. I find many that believe in the truth of the doctrine that we advocate, but it takes a good deal of moral courage to go against the tide of popular sentiment. We need to be steadfast for the right, looking forward to the recompense of the reward, for He is faithful who hath promised."

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard spent the Sabbath, Dec. 24th, with us, preaching a grand sermon in the morning at Washburn Hall, at South Worcester in the afternoon, and speaking, with others, again in the evening at our "People's Service." He came unannounced Saturday evening and some failed to hear him, who would have been present had they known of his coming. His visit did us good, as might be expected.

—The new temperance mayor, Mr. S. E. Hildreth, was inaugurated at Horticultural Hall Jan. 1st. The hall was densely packed with citizens.

—Rob. Morris has been lecturing in Maine, telling the people of his wonderful Masonic record and endeavoring to break the force of Mr. Weed's testimony by oracular utterances to the effect that the Masons did not kill Morgan but only hired him to leave the country. His statements are unsupported by anything but his own word which has too often proved false to be trusted now.

THE SOUTH WORCESTER CHAPEL.

A REFORM CHURCH IN THE HEART OF MASSACHUSETTS.

WORCESTER, Mass., Jan. 1st, 1883.

Another piece of work has been successfully consummated. The new chapel was yesterday dedicated free from debt and forty dollars in the treasury! Such an announcement, it is said, was never made of any church or chapel previously erected in the city. Friday evening the committee met to dispose of a deficit of $78. This was quickly provided for and the following day two partial pledges were redeemed which left us a balance in the treasury.

At the dedication services the house was literally packed with people. Every available spot in the audience room, entry and prayer room was occupied by an interested audience and some were turned away without gaining admittance. Three pastors, Rev. Dr. Gould, Rev. C. M. Samson and Rev. W. G. Sleeper participated in the services. Rev. Dr. Marshall, pastor of the first Baptist church, who was also invited, sent a congratulatory message but could not be present by reason of a previous engagement.

Four of the five superintendents of the Union School in former years were on the platform and spoke briefly—Mr. Anson Bangs, Mr. Henry Brannon, Mr. Charles Harwood, Mr. S. A. Pratt and Mr. F. B. Hayward. The services were exceedingly interesting throughout and we were all devoutly thankful to God for the achievement of such a success.

I entered upon this work in So. Worcester with many misgivings, fearing it would interfere with my work outside of the city and not especially inure to the advantage of the reform, but, like the Morgan monument in our national movement, this has proved in the providence of God one of the best things to be done. For a few weeks it has required an extra exertion which temporarily interfered with my lecture work, but I could in no other way have gained an equally important acquaintance in the city and presented our cause to more men of piety and means than by this agency. Doors that formerly were locked easily opened, and once opened our reform had made a gain which is destined to have an important bearing in the future. Conservative New Englanders look with suspicion on any movement which does not reach them through ordinary channels. Things cannot be done here by a "hop, skip and a jump" method, and he is wisest who learns this soonest. Providence in this case has planned for us better than we could have asked.

I shall now be free to make such excursions abroad as give promise of usefulness. I am first to go to Connecticut and repeat the tour of the State which last year proved so helpful. It is not certain that I shall do a great amount of lecturing for I find it very profitable to visit candid men and personally introduce to them the reform, putting them into an inquiring attitude. If we can move the springs that move the people we shall not be long in raising a popular activity that will prove certain destruction to the lodge.

I am most troubled at the fact that the foundation principles of Christianity are so far lost sight of by the people. Our reform movement will never completely succeed till it becomes aggressive in teaching the fundamental doctrines of the Gospel. Brother Bacon of Connecticut insists that there must be a reformation of the preaching, and he is right. There is a popular ignorance of the Word of God which is appalling. The people are receiving the Gospel by tradition and like all tradition it is losing some of its most essential features.

We had a large meeting at Washburn Hall Sunday evening. I wish I could impress upon our readers in Worcester the importance of sustaining by their presence this meeting. Deacon David Whitcomb told me, when he heard about the meeting, that without doubt it was one of the best opportunities in the city. Men can be reached there who could not be reached in any other way. The purposes of the meeting are wholly reformatory as to method and aim. All with whom I have conversed believe in the movement and express a belief in its success. Brethren, let us lay hold of it in earnest and take a personal responsibility for its success.

E. D. BAILEY.

—Will Rev. S Collins please send his address to this office.

—The friends in Chambersburg, Pa., are contemplating a general convention for the south-eastern section of Pennsylvania, and the plan may yet develop into a State meeting. Bro. Hinman, who has been visiting the city, will have probably a month's work in the State if the plan is carried out.

REFORM NEWS.

WORK IN MICHIGAN.

PONTIAC, Mich.

I expect soon to speak in Ingham and Eaton counties. I hope the friends along that line will write me at once so that I can speak at as many points as possible on the way. Let me hear from friends in other parts of the State, as I intend by the Lord's help to drive this battle on.

Those who are willing to assist in establishing an Oakland Co. Association will please write to Dr. L. I. Wicker, Holly, Mich. When you write him, make such suggestions as are likely to help on the good work. Let us work with all our might and do all things to the glory of God.

A. H. SPRINGSTEIN.

A CALL AT WORCESTER.

December 24th I spent with Bro. Bailey at his home in Worcester, Mass. The kindness of himself and wife will be fondly cherished for days to come. I was on a business trip via Washingtou, New York and Boston and found it convenient at 7 P. M. on Saturday to halt for a Sabbath of refreshment and worship in this center of manufactures, commerce, culture and religion. Christmas was near and loyal Catholics were of course jubilant in anticipation of "high mass" and absolution, but it was a little surprising to find Protestants and clergymen of Pilgrim ancestry entering into the spirit of this religious festival with all the zest of the most devout Papist. I did not visit any of the churches where special attractions were advertised in the daily papers, but was told by some who were present that the simple services of the Gospel were pushed aside by performances rivaling the elaborate displays of Rome itself. I was glad to know that such an appropriation of God's Sabbath was quite distasteful to some, who seek out the old paths, and much prefer the simplicity of their fathers, the early Christians and of the Divine Master.

At half past ten on Sabbath morning I accompanied Bro. Bailey to Washburn Hall where we met a band of pilgrims, and at his request preached to them. They received the Word attentively, and greeted me heartily at the close of our services, indicating that it was no new thing to hear the truth spoken in the plainest terms. At three o'clock we repaired to the school house in South Worcester where Bro. Bailey has gathered another band of worshipers to whom he preaches when in the city. The evening gathering was in Washburn Hall, and more spiritual and profitable, as it seemed to me, than either of the others. The subject was the enduement of power. Quite a number took part and all seemed to realize the presence and power of the Holy Spirit upon the people. The day was to me blessed and I was specially rejoiced to find that God was honoring the work of our brother and giving him favor among the people.

In considering the needs of our work at Washingtou and the importance of having a discreet and experienced general at the center of political power, I had thought it possible that a field for wider influence might be calling for Bro. Bailey's skillful hand; but I am convinced after looking over both fields that New England needs Bro. Bailey and that Washington must be provided for in some other way. The work already done has given him an influence which can not be transplanted, and which, rightly directed, will secure for him access to many places not open to strangers or readily reached by transient lecturers. He is recognized as an able and devout minister, a successful advocate of temperance, an effective speaker, an uncompromising opponent of the whole lodge system and a thoroughly Christian gentleman; and is accorded an honorable place among the ministers of the city and the Christian society of the place. He has gathered about him a band of workers who are not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ and predict for our cause a healthy and steady growth under his management in New England. Let us rejoice and take courage as we see what has been gained for Christ in the face of terrible opposition by the enemies of his bride the church, and pray in faith that a man qualified for the difficult work at Washington may be raised up and firmly established where he may speak from the nation's head to the nation's heart and conscience.

J. P. STODDARD.

TO THE FRONT. KANSAS!

DODGE CITY, Kans., Dec. 23, '82.

The Emporia convention has come and gone. I am glad for the acquaintances formed. I feel encouraged by the counsels taken and strengthened by the sweet hours of social prayer. There was an air of business in the meetings which could not well be mistaken and if there are not large results, my expectations will not be realized.

I have consented to act as State agent until the new board would have time to canvass the subject and see what could be done, or until my duties might require me to go elsewhere. And now

WHAT NEXT?

I propose that the friends throughout the State who wish the degrees worked in their several neighborhoods would write to me at once. Write whether you have written before or not. A postal don't cost much. Let us see just what amount of degree work is needed and then we will better know how to lay our plans. If we could have the degrees worked in all the leading cities of the State and at such other points as might be desired, it would prepare the way grandly for the political discussion which would immediately follow. The difficulty in the way is that it costs money, and money is scarce. It would go far to lighten the expenses if we could have the stopping places arranged in order so that there will be no extra traveling.

Write to me at my home, Pearlette, Meade county, Kansas.

P. S. FEEMSTER.

BRO. HINMAN'S LETTERS.

A BENEFACTOR OF LIBERIA.

Among the good men I have found in Philadelphia no one seemed to me to be a more earnest and faithful laborer for Christ than Edward S. Morris, who is consul for Liberia. His great work is the education of Africans in Africa, and the development of agriculture and legitimate commerce. He is his own missionary society, and sustains a school for native boys in Liberia, which he tells me has now sixty-five pupils and is conducted by educated Liberians. He is also sending to Africa the seeds of the Cinchonia tree (from the bark of which quinine is made) and also other valuable plants. He imports pure palm oil and African coffee which is of a superior quality. He has spent several thousands of dollars in perfecting a machine for hulling the dried coffee berry. It is usually separated when it is in the pulp, and that which becomes dried is discarded.

This machine, which I saw in operation, gives promise of adding much to the value of the coffee production. I regard the work of Mr. Morris as one of great practical importance and which should have the support of all who desire to see the evangelization of Africa. His address is No. 6, S. Merrick St., Philadelphia.

CHAMBERSBURG AND ITS CHURCHES.

CHAMBERSBURG, Pa., Jan. 2, '83.

It was wise generalship when Lee chose this Cumberland Valley for his Northern invasion and made Chambersburg an objective point. It was a great mistake to have burned the town. It was soon rebuilt and better than before, and the burning but added to the prosperity, intensified the loyalty of the people, and made his disaster at Gettysburg more inevitable.

Here is a valley of singular beauty and fertility. Ten miles either way is a low range of mountains and through the interval run two important railroads, connecting the cities of the North and of the South.

This city, which has about 10,000 inhabitants, is quite old. The market house was built in 1780, but most of the old buildings were burned. Nearly all the people who live here are natives of this valley, but originally they were Germans. Now they all speak English, and generally with much correctness, yet many speak German and they often have religious services in that language. In a wonderful meeting held on New Year's morning in the King street church one brother spoke in German. The congregation was much moved, and commenced singing a German hymn in which nearly all joined. It was wonderful. It seemed to me that the Pentecostal gift of tongues had been restored. Surely the Divine Spirit was there in power.

This people have a substantial prosperity and a good degree of wealth. They have, more than people elsewhere, preserved their simplicity of life, but are subject to the same evil influences that prevail elsewhere. There is here a fine Masonic temple. It stands beside the M. E. church, and overshadows that, and nearly all the rest. There is an exception. The King Street U. B. church has a good house of worship and a membership of about 200 and they are about building a parsonage. They are a people of great simplicity and Christian earnestness, and are enjoying at present great spiritual prosperity. They steadfastly adhere to the old landmarks of doctrine and discipline, and have suffered much for righteousness' sake. It will be an evil day for the authorities of the United Brethren church when they count them out; but to me it seems highly probable that they will find themselves cast out from their chosen denominational counections, and be enabled by Divine grace to rejoice greatly in the liberty of a free people of God. They are much interested in the missionary work and the ladies have already organized a missionary society and are planning a mission school in West Africa. Several adjoining congregations sympathize with, and are aided by them, and their work enlarges on all sides. The United Brethren in Christ is an able paper now published fortnightly, and edited by Rev. W. O. Tobey, formerly of the Telescope. It represents those who insist on the enforcement of the anti-secrecy law as a condition of co-operation. It does not shun to declare the whole counsel of God and though proscribed by those who love peace more than purity it is true to Christ and will prevail. It is proposed to have an anti-secrecy meeting to-morrow night nor do they feel afraid of grieving the Holy Spirit by any honest effort to oppose sin and maintain Gospel purity. Many leading men in the city are in sympathy with our reform, including Hon. John Stewart, candidate for Governor J. M. Pomeroy, editor of the Franklin Repository, the oldest paper in this part of the State, and now entering on its ninety-third volume, is a seceded Mason, and publishes a notice of our meeting. The outlook is full of hope.

Yours for Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

MINNESOTA STATE MEETING.

The fifth annual convention of the Minnesota Christian Association opposed to secret societies met at Blue Earth City, Dec. 6th, but it seemed as though the winds had gathered up their power, and were blowing what is familiarly known here in the West as a "blizzard." Owing to this fact, trains were behind, so that no delegates from abroad reached the place of meeting until nearly midnight of the 6th. The morning of the 7th dawned cold, but clear. We gathered together in the court-house and called upon the name of the Lord. The weather was exceedingly cold and few dared to venture far from home; but the evening brought together a good congregation to hear Pres. C. A. Blanchard lecture. The 8th was spent in prayer and conference, addresses from different ones, business, and in the evening a second lecture by Pres. Blanchard. Although the weather was so cold, and but few out, still the Lord was with us, and we had really a refreshing time. We were somewhat disappointed at not seeing General Agent Stoddard, but nevertheless it has been a profitable convention. The business of the convention was transacted in a way creditable to the Association. The expenses of the convention were all met on the spot. A State Lecturer were provided for at a salary of $500 per year. Rev. Robt. J. Williams of Winnebago City was engaged, a man full of the Holy Ghost and zeal. May God bless his labors. Local lecturers were appointed to operate in different parts of the State, inasmuch that we are looking for great results from this year's labor. We were also cheered on in our work by the presence of Charles Hoover and wife from Iowa.

The convention adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the work against the secret empire is of God, and is of the utmost importance, inasmuch as the influence of secrecy is against the spread of Divine truth.

WHEREAS, To successfully carry on the work of destroying the lodge and its influence, we need the undivided effort of one person; therefore,

Resolved, That we as a committee recommend that a lecturer be put in the field who shall be full of the Holy Ghost, and otherwise qualified for the work.

WHEREAS, We deem that Freemasonry and its kindred institutions are not only detrimental to good society, but are among the greatest evils of our land; sapping the foundation of the Christian religion, and sealing the lips of many who profess to be embassadors for Christ, and tending to drift our churches into formalism and spiritual death;

Therefore we, as Christian men and women, do resolve that we will use every means in our power to oppose and expose these sinful and wicked institutions, in all places we may have opportunity being directed by the Word and Spirit of God.

Resolved, That as members of this Association we will put our pledges into practice by being active workers in this reform, by the use of our temporal means and the circulation of such books and tracts as we may obtain that bear on this subject; that we may by this means be able to enlighten the people on this great evil. And, furthermore,

Resolved, That we not only talk and pray against this great sin, but that we vote as we talk and pray, that all our acts may be in accordance with our theory, that God's blessing may rest upon us as a society.

Resolved, That inasmuch as we have chosen Bro. R. J. Williams, one of our members, as our State Agent for this Association, whose duties will be to travel among the people of the State to lecture, and otherwise enlighten the people in regard to Freemasonry and other kindred societies, and also to solicit aid in carrying on this work of reform; and furthermore, we will do all in our power to sustain our agent by soliciting and raising sufficient sums to sustain him in his work.

Resolved, That we tender our thanks to all the people of this vicinity, who have opened their doors and have so kindly entertained the members of this Association.

THE KANSAS STATE CONVENTION.

OFFICIAL REPORT.

The Kansas State Christian Association met in the Congregational church, Emporia, on the evening of Dec. 19th, 1882.

In the absence of the president, J. S. T. Milligan, the convention was called to order by the secretary, and Rev. W. W. McMillan, of Olathe, was called to the chair pro tem.

After a brief invocation, President J. Blanchard, of Wheaton, Ill., was called upon to give a brief statement of the objects of the association and of this meeting.

An address of welcome was given by Rev. W. N. Hibbard, and was responded to by the chairman.

Bro. Feemster made a statement corroborating the remarks of President Blanchard that secession in the South was plotted in the Masonic lodge.

President Milligan was present on the next day and presided. During the season of devotional exercises Father Chittenden, of Lyndon, spoke of his first public effort in exposing Masonry.

The committee on nominations presented the following report, which was accepted, amended and adopted, as follows:

PRESIDENT, Rev. J. A. Collins, United Presbyterian.
VICE-PRESIDENTS: Rev B. F. Worrell, Congregational.
" " H. Curtis, Wesleyan Methodist.
" " Rev. R. Loggan, United Brethren.
" " John Motter.
TREASURER, H. Curtis, Olathe, Kas.
SECRETARY, W. W. McMillan, " "
Place of next meeting, Topeka. Time, October, 1883.

The officers of the association were constituted an executive committee.

The association in the afternoon listened to reports from different laborers engaged in its work.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NO DISPUTE ABOUT THE BODY.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Some things have appeared in the Cynosure of late, which are also referred to in the published reminiscences of Thurlow Weed, which I greatly desire to see explained. It is in regard to the body of the murdered Wm. Morgan.

It was my fortune to enter upon the work of the ministry in western New York, while all the exciting scenes connected with the atrocious murder, the abortive trials, the discovered corpse, etc., etc., were facts of which every one talked and none denied. That Wm. Morgan was kidnapped, and sunk in the Niagara river by Freemasons was as fully and generally believed by the people of that region, as the existence of that river!

Not only the scores and hundreds who left the lodge forever, professedly on account of the murder, but even Masons who continued to adhere to the order, admitted that Morgan was foully murdered.

Not very many years ago, I remember calling on one of this class of men in company with Pres. Blanchard, and he was asked why, if he admitted the murder—"the deep damnation of his taking off," he did not come out and renounce the order, as so many others did? His reply was that there was no order to renounce!—the lodges all went down and there was no more Masonry there. The Anti-masonic party rose on its ruins, and for years gave notoriety to all the facts of the murder and especially to the humiliating and abortive efforts of the Attorney General and the courts to bring the murderers to justice. Who could imagine that a generation would arise before the end of the century, to deny and quibble about matters so widely and universally known! It only confirms the Scripture assertion, that anti-Christ in every form and guise is a "mystery of iniquity," for of all the murders ever perpetrated in our country, this stands out unique and unrivalled in its prodigious wickedness.

The victim was a good man, kind and benevolent, who had committed no crime, either against the laws of God or of man. The conspirators against his life were many—were men of intelligence and influence, husbands and fathers like their victim, and for days and nights they kept him in their prison near Lewiston and heard his piteous entreaties to spare his life, for the sake of wife and children dependent on him, and then with a heartless cruelty, which always seemed to me no less than infernal,—deliberately sunk him at night in the mighty river!

But I did not take my pen to call back these terrible reminisences so indelibly stereotyped upon my memory, but to inquire about the finding of the corpse. According to the best of my recollection, the body of Wm. Morgan was found at Oak Orchard Creek and was fully identified by his widow, by infallible signs, and by many others besides herself.

But this paper purporting to contain Mr. Weed's understanding of the matter, involves the subject in doubt and speaks of another body found on the lake shore which was so manipulated by Masons as to throw doubt over the whole affair. In the article I refer to, Mr. Weed seems to be misled, or has the subject, somehow, confused in his own mind.

M. N. MILES.

PLUNDERING COWANS NO SIN.

GOODWINE, ILL., Dec. 25th, 1882.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Lately quite a prominent business man and Mason who resided near here failed,—liabilities reported at about twelve thousand dollars.

It is a common remark that "wine and women" will get away financially with the best of men. But in this case from what I can learn, another factor (beside wine and women) started this man on a downward career. He ran off leaving near twelve thousand dollars of a loss to those who had placed too much confidence in him. Some of these losses fell upon non-lodge men. One man, a Mason, just before he ran off, went to him, not knowing he was arranging to leave, and offered him $200. It was taken; he held it in his hand for a minute or two, seemingly in deep study, then handed it back, saying, "I'll not take it, though I need it." But he went directly across the street and borrowed $400 of a man not a Mason and kept it, and immediately absconded.

This was told me by a Mason who is young in the trickery of the lodge, having just joined. He thought it a good argument for the "square" boys, that they would not rob, defraud or steal from each other but only from out-siders! Here is an institution, yes, a clan, a cabal, chartered and their charter printed in our statute books, whose legitimate business is to make raids upon society, and this order is ready and does defend its members in the courts.

Let the people arise in their might and wipe out such charters from our statute books.

The Masons are to have a public installation soon in the M. E. church at Hoopeston, and now the non-Masons ought to have lectures in this church or some hall to offset this bid for popular favor. I think arrangements can be matured for such lectures.

J. S. HICKMAN.

WHO KILLED HIM?

Mr. E. E. Wheeler, of Plainwell, Allegan county, Mich., says that his father, Colonel Edward Wheeler of Norwark, Ohio, (now deceased) was a Freemason for forty years or more, and that he heard him say repeatedly that the Masons took Captain Wm. Morgan to Fort Niagara, where they kept him some days, and from there they took him in a boat to the middle of Niagara river and threw him overboard; and his father would add, "and they served him right, for he had violated his oath."

Mr. Wheeler also says that a Mason of high rank voluntarily said to his mother at the time of his father's death, "You need have no anxiety about the funeral expenses; the Masons will pay them."

Some time after this an older brother of Mr. Wheeler saw the same man who made the above statement respecting the funeral expenses, and asked him if the Masons were going to do as he said. His reply was, "No, the Masons will do nothing about it; you will have to pay them yourselves." And they did not pay one cent.

LODGE MASTERS NOT NEEDED.

STRAWBERRY, KANS., Dec. 22d. 1882.

Maple Grove, for eight months or so, has been the principle scene of conflict in this county.

Last spring, when Bro. J. C. Johnson renounced Freemasonry, the contest fairly opened, and although he seemed to be highly esteemed by both elements for years previous, the lodge element with little exception denounced him and his wife as being and having been very questionable characters, and would have doubtless inaugurated a system of severe persecution against them had not the Anti-masons rallied to their protection.

The Spirit of God got hold of him finally (although he had been a nominal Masonic professors for years in the M. E. church) and led him out of darkness into light. Naturally enough he gave his testimony in class meeting which created a great sensation immediately. The leader tried to close the meeting, but it would not close; one after another rising and giving their opinion of Masonry. Finally the class leader got the floor and said he was not a Mason, but declared that he was in favor of Masonry, and that he would take the Masons, and those who were in favor of Masonry could come with him, etc. Soon he and a corporal's guard met at another school house and had class meeting; except on preaching days, when the whole lodge force within reach seemed to pour in to hear the Masonic minister. Thus the lodge element almost entirely deserted Maple Grove class, soon appointing their meeting on the same hour; which, however, did not result in quashing the class proper. On the contrary all the means of grace were kept intact, principally by the Anti-masons, and seemed to be blessed; while the other class dwindled to nothing. Even the minister seemed to play into the hands of the lodge by publicly announcing their meetings and taking the class book away from our leader turning him out of office and giving the class book to the leader of the other class and leaving us without a leader.

At this time a lecture was pending on the subject of secret societies by Rev. R. Loggan of the United Brethren church, who was also invited to establish an appointment here which was placed at the hour (3:30 P. M.) that had been, deserted by the lodge. At this the lodge suddenly discovered that it was just spoiling for class meeting and must have one. The United Brethren not being scared by the misrepresentations set afloat, the lodge by the aid of their minister appointed class at 11 A. M. This maneuver was also a failure, and the time having arrived for the lecture, it now came off with a reasonable degree of success.

At the close of the lecture proper a Mason undertook, instantly, to spring a Christmas tree project, but was invited to wait till we were through. Among other questions, answers, suggestions, etc., the obligation of the first degree was called for and read. At the close of the obligation the Masons were asked if it was correct.—Silence. Bro. Johnson defied any one to deny it.—No denial. Although the lodge had been invited to furnish any one to defend their side, they made no defense.

The following Sabbath the lodge was evidently not happy. The Masonic Sunday-school superintendent suggested a change of Sabbath-school to the forenoon. He was aided by the leader and encouraged by the Masonic minister and the lodge party voted it through. This also miscarried, for they failed to draw all the congregation from the U. B. preaching in the afternoon, and the Lord's work goes on.

"A silver-tongued orator" met objections to the Ancient Order of United Workmen a short time ago at Clifton. Very plausable, and many are carried away; but thinking, conscientious men can see many thin places. "Ancient!" Is not that a lie at the very start? And if it starts with a lie, then what?

S.

A FRIENDLY TALK TOGETHER.

We shall have, as heretofore, a department where all the friends of the reform may have a free conference and became better acquainted with one another. As the best meetings of a church are generally where the hearts of all are too full to speak long, and every one has a word, such a meeting we must have in the Cynosure. The chairman will ask Bro. Geo. Heaton, a seceded Mason of Fairfield, Iowa, to begin:

In the address of Gen. A. C. Dodge to the old settlers in this place, he told this incident: "Many years ago my father was engaged in flat-boating down the river to New Orleans. He was once captured by a band of land pirates, like the John A. Murrel band, and was about to be put to death, when he gave a Masonic sign which saved his life, the leader of this band of cut-throats being a Mason." This rule of saving a Mason in extremity is practiced everywhere and for all Masons for they are obligated to do so.

M. B. Nichols of Hillsdale county, Mich., agrees with the Cynosure in a recent note:

The short article you copied in Cynosure of Dec. 28 from the Boston Congregationalist concerning the killing of Morgan and closing with these words, "Better drop the subject," reminded me strongly of the plea of a certain class in the time of our Saviour: "Let us alone, what have we to do with thee?"

I had ever thought that all that was good and true sought investigation; the more the better, and that it was only the evil that sought the darkness, and do not the words of our Saviour confirm this? "For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth, cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought of God."

A student in the Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, O., whose acquaintance we are all happy to make, has the floor:

Now I write you concerning another "fraternity" which has been a pest, and still is a pest, in colleges, and especially at the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, O. Their schemes are seen boiling and bubbling for little petty college honors, seeking a place on every committee, desiring the offices of every class organization and pushing themselves wherever they are least desired by students not "Frats." In short, they seek and endeavor to control everything of any importance in the college. Just now there is a considerable strife between fraternity members and anti-fraternity men. I think a judicious use of some of your books on anti-secrecy might be the means of keeping out a few whom they are trying to seduce, by their schemes, into their good-destroying society.

The pamphlet on College Secret Societies is just the thing for this work. We hope to hear again from this institution. Our good friend Dr. Clark of Carthage, Ind.:

I think there is an effort being made by some of the ladies appointed at State meeting to canvass for subscriptions. Hope they will report before long.

They shall have all the help possible from the Cynosure to make that report a good one. From Pleasant Grove, Sutter county, Cal., Morgan Banta sends word:

Secret societies are doing a great wrong to this country. Religion can't live where Masonry and Odd-fellowship predominate. Therefore, I will do all I can for the rising generation. Anything that you send me will be distributed.

Bro. G. W. Donaldson of Washington city, who has been co-operating with Bro. Hinman, says:

Praise the Lord for the article in the Cynosure about Christmas. I received light on it; it is a holiday made by man and not by our Lord. I don't keep any holiday but God's holy Sabbath. Bro. Hinman is here and I am out every day with tracts exposing these secret orders; by the help of the Lord, going from house to house. I don't want to be at ease in Zion. Oh how the secret order gentlemen would put me out of the way if they could! But my Father takes care of his children. Glory to his name. I am glad to see there is another brother in this work for God, of the same name as myself. I pray God, to make him an iron pillar, and give him great boldness to stand up for Jesus. Washington is a corrupt place. There is a great work to do, but so few to do it, yet God has a few faithful ones who are out doing his work and think it a great privilege.

OUT DOOR WORK.

LAW FOR FARMERS.

Some time since we gave an article on humbugs. The country is full of adventurers who prey upon two classes distinctively, First, those who believe that all newspapers are liars, and second, that class who subscribe for the paper that is sold for the least money, without reference to the reading matter it contains. Among the most successful swindlers are those who take a promisary note for some swindle they have to sell, either drawn in such a manner that it may be altered or separated, or else under the pretense that it will not be presented until the article is tested. A good authority says:

A promisary note is a written agreement to pay a certain sum of money at a certain time. It must be definite and unconditional. It is therefore in the nature of money; being negotiable, and when payable to bearer, the property in it passes by mere delivery of the paper on which it is written. It is not subject to all the defences that are good as against other contracts. For example: It is generally good in the hands of an innocent holder, no matter though the maker of it had lost it, or it had been stolen, or obtained from him by fraud. This may be the case, even though it had been altered or "raised," as where I gave my note signed in blank to a person, authorizing him to fill in a certain amount, as $10, and he fills in a larger amount, as $100, and sells it to an innocent purchaser. I must pay the larger amount, for it was I who enabled the fraud to be committed; and an old maxim of the law holds that where one of two innocent persons must suffer from the wrongful acts of a third, the loss must be borne by the one who enabled such third person to occasion it. The justice of this is obvious, and any sensible man will appreciate the necessity of protecting, in the largest degree, the rights of bonafide holders of negotiable instruments, which form a part of the currency of the country, and if subject to all the defences of other written contracts, would be deprived of their main value.

Our advice is never to give a note unless written in ordinary form, and you should know perfectly the contents thereof. The great number of frauds that have been perpetrated on farmers of western States and Territories by patent right men and worthless agricultural machinery agents, should be sufficient excuse for you to have nothing to do with men, especially in important transactions, who cannot satisfy your banker, lawyer or merchant that they are all right.

Another fraud is that of conveyance. The following decision is a case in point: Where a party conveys his property to a third party when judgments are outstanding against him, and such conveyance is with the intent to defraud his creditors, and the fraud is participated in by the purchaser, his title will not be protected, even though he paid sufficient consideration. William vs. Nachenheim, Sup. Court of Iowa.

So, again, whenever a note is executed by two or more parties, any alteration in it without the consent of all, notwithstanding the alteration was entirely honest, and with no fraudulent intent, will be deemed a material one. Craighead vs. LeLonep, Sup. Court of Pa. Leg. Intel. 280.

In relation to mortgages, there always has, and always will be difficulties. A careful man will never mortgage his home except as a last resort to raise money for legitimate purposes. In this connection, a system of mortgaging farms in Switzerland will be interesting:

A farmer may borrow money of a dozen men successively, the official book showing their orders. If he fails to pay, a successor is found for him by beginning at the bottom of the list of debtors, and calling on each in his order to assume all the debts and manage the farm, or step aside and lose his claim.—Prairie Farmer.

WHAT GOES WITH THE FARM.

Mr. H. A. Haigh, of the Detroit Bar, gives the following valuable information in the December American Agriculturist:

When a farm is bought or sold, questions often arise as to what goes with it, and disputes may often be avoided if farmers know just what their farm deeds include. In brief, where no reservations are made in the deed, the conveyance includes the land, the buildings upon it, and all such chattels or articles as have become so attached or fixed to the soil or to the buildings, as to become what is known in the law as "Fixtures."

What constitutes a "fixture" depends largely on the intention of the owner in putting it there, and also upon the manner in which it is affixed. Anything so fixed to the soil or buildings that it cannot be removed without injury, nearly always goes with the farm; and anything of a permanent nature, fitted for permanent use, and annexed thereto by the owner with that intention, generally goes with the land, though it might be severed without injury, as the following examples will illustrate: All fences upon the farm go with it, but not fencing materials, as rails, etc., if bought elsewhere and piled upon the farm, and not yet built into a fence; they have never yet been "annexed." But rails cut from timber on the farm and piled up for future use, go with it; their original annexation is not severed by being changed from the standing trees to rails. If, however, they were cut with the intention of using elsewhere than on the farm, they would then be personal property, and would not pass. The bare intention in the mind of the owner in this instance makes the difference in the real estate and personal property. Hop poles, if they have been once used upon the farm, are regarded as a part of it, though at the time of sale they are stored away for future use. Loose scaffold poles, however, laid across the beams of a barn, have been held not to be a part of the realty. Standing trees, of course, are part of the farm; so are trees cut or blown down, if left where they fall, but not if corded up for sale; the wood has then become personal property.

FOR FARM BOYS TO LEARN.

How many of the boys who read this paper could "lay off" an acre of ground exactly, providing one of the dimensions was given them? Now I have taken some pains to make out a table, and I would like to have every one of the farm boys to learn it. There are 160 square rods in an acre, and there are 30¼ square yards in one rod. This gives 4,840 square yards in one acre:

5 yds wide by 968 yds long is 1 acre.
10 yds wide by 484 yds long is 1 acre.
20 yds wide by 242 yds long is 1 acre.
40 yds wide by 121 yds long is 1 acre.
80 yds wide by 60½ yds long is 1 acre.
70 yds wide by 69⅛ yds long is 1 acre.
60 yds wide by 80⅔ yds long is 1 acre.

Again, allowing nine square feet to the yard, 272¼ square feet to the rod, 43,560 square feet to the acre, and we have another table:

110 feet by 369 feet—1 acre.
120 feet by 363 feet—1 acre.
220 feet by 198 feet—1 acre.
240 feet by 181⅛ feet—1 acre.
440 feet by 90 feet—1 acre.

Since the National Christian Association met at Oberlin in 1872 its organ has been owned as individual property. Agreeable to a resolution offered by Elder A. A. Phelps and adopted by the first National Convention, Pittsburgh, 1868, Pres. J. Blanchard, Philo Carpenter and others undertook the publication of a paper that should set forth and maintain the principles of the Association. Arrangements were made for the editorial department, and Ezra A. Cook secured as printer. The first number issued is dated July 25, 1868, a fortnightly at $1.00 per year. It was found that expenses were in excess of receipts and individual donations were often needed to meet current bills. This deficit was promptly met by Mr. Carpenter and other friends for a time in the hope that a liberal patronage would be secured and a self-sustaining basis reached.

At the Worcester Convention, June 7, 1871, a weekly edition of the paper was approved, to begin so soon as the Executive Committee could meet the additional expense. But the Committee, deeming a personal ownership would better establish the business interests of the paper, at their meeting June 30, 1871, gave it into the hands of Mr. Cook, who henceforth became proprietor, subject to the action of the succeeding National Convention at Oberlin. The paper, clear of all indebtedness, was thus passed over to Mr. Cook, the Executive Committee relinquishing all legal control and Mr. Cook assuming all financial responsibility in its future publication. It was, however, agreed that the paper should continue as the organ of the Association, and maintain the principles of our reform, and that the Association should co-operate with Mr. Cook in extending its circulation. No one who has read the paper will question the publisher's fidelity in maintaining our principles. For eleven years and more this POLE STAR of reform has shone steadily on, amid the numerous changes that have swept over our city and country, until the mists are giving way and the day-dawn appears. It was a hazardous undertaking for a young man with little experience or capital. Older men and well established firms declined to make the venture for any consideration within the power of the Association to bestow. It was an act such as men perform only from a sense of duty, leaving results with God.

With facilities at his command, Mr. Cook has not been able to cover expenses with receipts from subscriptions, and an indebtedness has been accumulating from year to year until his books show a deficit of $6,142.81, which all must concede to be more than one man's share of the burden, and he was seriously contemplating a reduction in the size of the paper. Having announced this purpose to the N. C. A. Board we were compelled to consider whether or not the cause in its advanced stage in other departments could afford to allow the contemplated reduction in its organ. Some felt that it would be a backward movement and a great mistake.

Aided by the Cynosure, with its columns always open for appeals, and the generosity of friends, many of whom had been won to our interests by the weekly visits of our organ to their homes, the National Christian Association, has by economy accumulated a small amount of funds; and by the liberality of Mr. Carpenter owns a building suitable for the publishing business; and besides, it has from the first been the understanding and wish of friends that 221 West Madison street, Chicago, should be the publishing house of this movement. After much individual conference the Board of Directors met Nov. 29 for consultation. Mr. Cook stated the case at length and the whole matter was canvassed without finding a satisfactory solution of the difficulties. It was deemed advisable to appoint a committee to investigate, report results, and recommend what action they deemed necessary. Messrs. D. P. Baker, E. A. Cook and J. P. Stoddard were appointed such a committee and instructed to report Dec. 2nd at an adjourned meeting of the Board.

Pursuant to instruction the committee looked over accounts of expenses and receipts for publication of the Cynosure as far as they were able, and having taken into account the whole case, submitted with their report the recommendation that Mr. Cook be paid three thousand dollars in cash and allowed the use of one page in the Cynosure for advertising purposes for four years. This recommendation, after careful deliberation, was approved by the Board as in their judgment the most equitable adjustment of the whole case. Rev. L. N. Stratton, for some ten years editor of the American Wesleyan, and Rev. D. P. Baker, eight years on the staff of the Free Methodist, were present and spoke freely, greatly aiding the less informed members of the Board by their clear and comprehensive views derived from long experience in newspaper publication. Mr. Cook accepted the offer, and at the time specified turned over the paper with its list of over 4,000 subscribers along with the good will of its publisher, and the Board by its proper finance committee carried out the agreement so far as the nature of the contract would permit.

A change so radical and in which so many independent, positive minds were directly interested, could hardly be made without some slight abrasion, but with the blessing of the Master and an effort on the part of each to put aside all personal considerations and do the will of Him who calls and commissions His workers, harmony and good feeling have been maintained, so that our entrance upon the new year and new era of publication is in the unity of the Spirit and bonds of brotherly love. We believe that the change has been ordered by One wiser than mortal and that it will increase the usefulness of your paper, meet the approval of friends, relieve an over-taxed brother from unequal burdens and inspire friends with new zeal to work, and more faith to pray for its greatly increased circulation. On hearing of the change a brother beloved writes as follows: "I suppose we (I will not say you) are in our own publishing house, which with yourself I believe will be more satisfactory to the friends. Not perhaps that the way the paper has been published was not the best financially for the N. C. A. for time past, and might have been for some time future, but I am content that the change has taken place and especially, so that it has been effected without involving the Association in debt, and also for the intention to keep out of debt. We now occupy the position I have always advocated and I think by this time somebody in whom we can confide has been found to conduct this particular branch of the reform work so as to make it financially successful, as failure should be stricken from our vocabulary."

The above views of a brother who has stood firmly by our reform with his labors, his prayers and his purse from the very first, and who has been present, I believe, at each annual meeting of the Association, are so sensible and just that they will repay a second reading. While East on my last trip, substantially the same views were expressed to me by experienced practical friends, and I have yet to find or hear from the man who seriously objects. We are all agreed that the paper ought to pay. The way to make it pay its own bills is to send in subscribers, and the way to get subscribers is to pray and work for them. It pays financially, in spreading the light, and is a blessing on your own soul when by dint of perseverance you add another name to the list.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

TEMPERANCE POLITICS.

TOPEKA, Dec. 27th, 1882.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I called on Gov. St. John in company with Rev. Mr. Cordley, of Emporia, Kansas, to learn from headquarters the intent and meaning of the convention which is called to meet in this city Jan. 9th and 10th prox. Gov. St. John opens with a set speech on Tuesday evening, followed by other distinguished speakers. John B. Finch makes a speech on Wednesday evening, Jan. 10, followed by a list of honorables from Leavenworth and elsewhere. Each church, Sabbath-school and temperance society in the State is entitled to three delegates. The Topeka Capital thinks it will be the largest meeting of the kind ever held in the State.

Gov. St. John says that the convention is not, at least professedly, political, but is simply a prohibition convention to take measures to organize every family in the State in the interest of temperance. Rev. Mr. Cordley thinks the defeat of the Governor in the fall election will inure greatly to his advantage with the public. He says that the people favored and the politicians disfavored his nomination; that the speakers in the canvass killed him with "faint praise," and there is already a decided reaction in his favor. And Mr. Cordley thinks that if he should run for Governor in two years he would be elected by an overwhelming majority. As Mr. Cordley's large society at Emporia are strong St. John men, his and their judgment is important, representing the opinion of the more intelligent part of the Kansas population.

I do not think St. John will ever be chosen by the Republican party to any office. The temperance discussion is not going back; and when that cause has shaken off the incubus of the secret temperance orders, as the anti-slavery cause threw off the secret Know Nothings, once rid of the element of weakness, it will carry the country by its facts and arguments. Nine-tenths of the crime and pauperism of the country is too heavy a load for a political party to carry; and the lodge and liquor coalition will break down under it. At the end of two years from last November the whiskeyites and the temperance wing of the Republicans will rend the Republican party into two hostile fragments, as the Whig and Democratic parties were split in two on the slavery rock; and the Republican party, formed from the Barn-burner and Wilmot-Proviso Democrats and anti-slavery Whigs, has ruled the country now twenty-two years.

The new party which thousands of discerning men are predicting will not be Greenback or Prohibition. This government cannot stand on legs part iron and part clay, secret lodges and open, fair-dealing citizens. Both of those parties are composed of such iron and clay. Nearly every governor sent to Kansas as Democrat was driven into the Republican ranks; and the lodge and liquor power will drive every sound prohibitionist into the American party, so surely as the Washington movement now on foot, succeeds in placing the American platform before the American people.

The offices are now generally in the hands of 500,000 Masons. The subsidiary recruiting lodges will find that they are mere hewers of wood and drawers of water for the Masons. Schuyler Colfax's Rebecca degree and Rob Morris's Eastern Star lodge have utterly failed of their intended object, which was to yoke the women of America to the Juggernaut car of the Masonic lodge. There are only about one in fifteen of the voters of this country Freemasons, and when once they are forced to "bolt out of their holes" they will sink under popular contempt.

KANSAS VOTE SECRETLY CONTROLLED.

Jan. 1st, 1883.

I spoke at Lyndon, Osage county, twice on Sabbath the 24th ult., and once in the court house. I then stopped over night at Topeka, and called on Governor St. John. I liked him before, but much better after seeing him. I have this morning written him, and sent him "Freemasonry Illustrated," by the hand of Rev. Mr. Milligan who attends the Topeka Prohibition Convention on the 9th and 10th inst. Our good Mr. John Thompson is here from Sabetha, Nemaha county, forty miles north, to take me there to speak on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 2nd and 3d. We stop on the road to-night to hold a meeting at Banner. I have spoken to fair congregations, considering the cold and rough weather, here at North Cedar, on Fri- Saturday, and twice on Sabbath, yesterday. My personal friends will be interested to know what I am doing, and the rest of our readers must bear with this writing.

As I go from place to place facts and proofs accumulate that "The Supreme Council of Sovereign Inspectors General," headed by Albert Pike, the scalper-general, has defeated St. John and prohibition. When I was at Capt. Wilson's, Menomonee, Wisconsin, I learned through those who drank of it, that Pike carried a hamper of proof brandy, in his travels in that State. His daughter was travelling with him. The presidents of the liquor associations in Milwaukee and elsewhere are high low Masons. We know in ten thousand ways that lodge and rum are like Siamese twins. And as we know by reductio ad absurdum, that the straight line between two points is the shortest line, simply by showing that no other line is the shortest, so we know by moral demonstration that the lodge defeated St. John. It is able to do it. It runs through the State and plots nightly in every village and hamlet. His defeat took every one but the Pike Masons by surprise. They say, sotto voce, "St. John is not much of a Mason." A secret anti-prohibition society, with branches, had its seat in Topeka. Such secret societies could meet nowhere but in the Masonic lodge-room. The anti-third term Republicans generally voted for St. John. Nothing else defeated him, and the reductio is complete. The lodge did it with liquor money.

—The Christian Instructor, lately removed from this city to Philadelphia to be nearer its United Presbyterian constituency opens the New Year with a dress of handsome new type and sixteen-page form. The Christian Statesman is now issued from the same office. A happy and prosperous New Year to them both.

—Geo. W. Clark, the "Liberty Singer," has lately removed from Detroit to Rochester, N. Y.

—It is expected that the editor of the Cynosure will return this week from his prolonged visit in Kansas.

—The saddest news with which we begin the New Year is word of the death of the aged and beloved ISAAC PRESTON of Lockport, Ill., who passed away to God on Thursday, January 4th, at an extreme age, having but lately celebrated his 90th birthday. The virtue, the moral courage, the love of truth, the piety of this humble but noble man is too well known by all our readers to need any encomium. The vigor of his constitution was wonderfully preserved by his temperate habit of life, so that up to extreme old age he has been able to render valuable counsel and assistance in the deliberations of our conventions and in the business management of the National Association. We regret that he must leave us, but to him our loss is blessed and eternal gain.

—In our correspondence Bro. Miles concieves a discrepancy in Mr. Weed's letter to the Batavia Convention respecting the body of Morgan. Mr. Weed expresses no doubt about the body. The evidence was clear that it was that of Wm. Morgan; but the clothing was of some other man. The abductors had evidently anticipated an exposure of some kind and planned to make themselves as secure as possible. This question about the clothes is all the ground the Freemasons have for their vicious denials of Mr. Weed's letter. As if they grew with the body and were an indispensable part of it. Rob Morris, McMurdy, Vincil, Carson, et id omne genus, may agonize through columns of denial and vituperation of a dead man to whose honor and probity themselves are strangers, all the ground for their dispute is the manipulation of the Masonic murderers to prevent Morgan's recognition if ever his body should be found.

THE SITUATION AT WASHINGTON.

"Give me a fulcrum for my lever and I will overturn the world," expressed the faith of Archimedes in the power of mechanical forces which by searching he had found out. Give us a foot-hold in Washington and with Christ for our helper we will overthrow the Secret Empire and bring to an end its bloody reign, just so sure as the Masons made Mrs. Morgan a widow in 1826, as the National Era and the old line Abolitionists abolished slavery, and as the "promises" are "yea and amen in Christ Jesus."

THE WAY OPEN.

God has opened an effectual door and thereby indicated his will. A house and lot, less than three blocks from the Capitol and only five doors from Pennsylvania Avenue, near Dr. Sunderland's church, just opposite the offices of the city government and under the shadow of the Metropolitan M. E. church, is within our reach. The frontage on 4½ street is twenty-five feet with a depth of 164 feet to an alley. The building is a substantial four-story brick with a basement, and contains sixteen rooms besides bath trunk rooms, closets, etc. It is the property of Vice Admiral Rowan and he stated to me that it cost him $12,000. It is assessed for $11,973. The title is said to be perfect, and it can be bought for $7,000 cash.

CONDITION OF THE PREMISES.

The foundation and walls are sound so far as I could discover. The slate roof showed no signs of leaking, but the inside is badly out of repair. It will probably require a thousand dollars at the very least to arrange an audience room, book room and office, and thoroughly renovate the whole structure and put it in prime order. Buildings of similar size and in the same locality rent readily to responsible parties at from eight to nine hundred dollars per year. A further sum of from one to two thousand dollars would be needed for the purchase of furniture and a full stock of the books, tracts, and publications required so that the final footing cannot safely be put much below $10,000.

WHERE IS THIS MONEY TO COME FROM?

I answer: Five thousand dollars have already been provided for, on condition the whole sum is raised; and if God wants you to give the whole or a part of what remains you are going to give it cheerfully or lose your peace of mind. If it is your duty to give a hundred, a thousand, or five thousand dollars to this enterprise, God will show it to you, and you will be thankful for the privilege. I want, because I believe God wants, some of our wealthy friends to take hold of this business with a will that scorns seeming impossibilities, and send to W. I. Phillips, Treasurer of the National Christian Association, within the next thirty days (before Feb. 10th) either in cash or negotiable interest-bearing notes, the second $5,000 of the whole $10,000, as estimated above. Every dollar will be credited to this account, and where requested will be reported in the next issue of our paper after its receipt.

In case the property is secured

WHAT SHALL IT BE CALLED.

Unless some one friend will pay the remaining $5,000 and give it such a name as he prefers, I am in favor of calling it "LEUTY HALL." Next to Philo Carpenter, Esq., Rev. Wm. Leuty has aided financially in the Association's work more than any other one man. Oberlin has its Tappan Hall, which recalls the memory of that noble but despised reformer, and is of itself an inspiration to every student who visits that institution to emulate his excellencies. In Chicago we have "Carpenter Hall" which will perpetuate the name of the generous donor when the lodge shall have succumbed to public censure, and given place to Christ's kingdom on earth, and why should not Father Leuty have a monumental building in Washington to perpetuate his name when anti-secrecy and its advocates shall become as popular as the once despised and hated Oberlin and Tappan are to-day.

WHO WILL OWN THE PROPERTY?

You ask this question as business men, and wish to know who is to look after this property if purchased. I answer: It will be deeded to the National Christian Association, to be used for a branch office and quarters for the Washington department of its work, and will of course be controlled as other property of the Association is. Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, Milton Ford, Joseph Bowes and Isaac T. Gibson will act with the General Agent as an auxiliary Board if requested to do so. These gentlemen all reside in the city and they are men of experience, with religious convictions, and are widely known as active Christian workers, and willing to give their services for the love of the cause. These men (if appointed) will be aided by others deserving our confidence.

FROM THE FIRST.

From my first practical knowledge of the anti-secrecy work I have felt and often said the great mistake of 1826 to 1832 was in not anchoring their work and making it permanent. An evil so deeply seated and strongly intrenched in state and church as Masonry cannot be conquered without a struggle. An election may be carried by an outburst of enthusiasm; a small boy may create a panic and move a large audience by crying fire, but surface ebullitions quickly subside, and the enthusiastic or panic-stricken crowds settle down into convictions or ascertained facts. If the workers in the Morgan era of Anti-masonry had done as the Young Men's Christian Associations and others are now doing, by securing headquarters with branch societies and publishing houses in fee simple, the whole land would not have been burrowed by the blind-moles of secrecy as it is to-day. They did some things well; aided by their example and admonished by their mistakes we must do better. Without an anchorage in the "bed rock" of a warrantee deed, I should have little heart to work, or little hope of success in Washington, but with a sure footing I believe it is the most promising point at which to plant a battery in the whole arena of conflict. In my experience of over fourteen years and with facilities for knowing and judging equal perhaps to those of any other one man, I consider this opportunity one without a comparison. The time, when the whole land is stirred by the testimony of the late Thurlow Weed; the place, a center of all eyes in this country and in foreign courts; the friends providentially stationed on the ground, with a hundred other indications all point to its importance as a means of speedy recognition among Christian societies, and an agency in the ultimate success of the anti-secrecy, anti-rum-shop, Gonstitutional reform and Christian Sabbath movements, which, though differing in name are one and identical in principle, and are all embodied in our reform platform.

TO THE LORD'S STEWARDS.

To you brethren, who are the Lord's stewards, and soon to give account to our "One Master," do I as your agent and Christ's servant submit this question for decision. I have given you the leading facts that you need to act wisely. I have expressed my opinion freely upon which you will place your own estimate. It may be your duty to give or it may not. God knows; but if your thoughts are established allow me to ask if it would not be much better for you to do yourself whatever your can afford rather than leave to others the disposition of your means after you are gone? Beloved, I feel earnestly but peacefully about this matter. It has been with me a subject of thought, planning and prayer for months, and having done what I could I am resting in the "Precious Promises," and shall rest however you may decide; and my prayer is that your Father and mine may give each of you like assurance in knowing and doing his will on earth.

THE HOME.

THE LAND WE LOVE.

The land we love is under blight,
The watchmen cry "What of the night!"
How long before the morning ray
That heralds in the coming day.

The vilest tyrant of the race
Has here a throne, a dwelling place;
Again our frightened eagle flies,
Distressed with loud and warning cries.

My countrymen the hour is near,
The battle ground of time is here;
And this the hour when hero hearts
Shall arm with truth's unerring darts.

Let not the wily oligarch
Becloud our future: freemen hark!
The tocsin sounds, the drum beat hear,
And muster for the battle near.

No skirmish is this fray of ours;
It is a battle of the powers;
No British lion's stare,
No grip of Russian bear,
No French battalions wheeling quick,
No fortress walls of limestone thick.

Yet in the field whereon we fight
The victory must crown the right;
With loyal hearts and true,
Gird ye with strength anew
To vow again for earnest strife
For heart and home, and nation's life.

Angel of light, speed now thy wing!
The day of truth and beauty bring;
And with thy light disperse
The darkness of the curse
That folds us in the clouds of ill,
The victims of oppression still.

THE BENEVOLENCE OF THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANS.

They were men of enlarged philanthropy. Their hearts not only burned with fervent charity one toward another, but swelled with the wish of benevolence toward all men. The apostle of the Gentiles earnestly enjoined his converts to remember the poor; he taught them to provide a common fund for this purpose by weekly contributions of all, as God had prospered them, (1 Cor. 16:2;) but himself in the wide range of his missionary tours, became the almoner of the charity of the churches to afflicted saints in foreign countries. The custom, in these primitive times, seems to have been for every one on the Lord's day, at the close of public worship, to bring to the notice of the assembly the case of the poor, the aged, the widow, or the orphan, of whose necessities he had any knowledge; and forthwith provision was made for such from the public fund created by their weekly contributions. This custom is distinctly specified by Justin Martyn in the middle of the second century, and by Tertullian at the close of it as is indicated in the following paragraphs:

"Of those who have abundance and are willing, each at his pleasure gives what he thinks fit. What is collected is deposited with the president, who succours the fatherless and the widows, and those who are in bonds, and the strangers who are sojourning among us. In a word, he provides for all who are in need.

"What is collected in the public chest is no dishonorable sum, as if it belonged to a purchased religion. Every one makes a small contribution on a certain day, or when he chooses; provided only he is willing and able; for no one is compelled; all is voluntary. The amount is, as it were, a common fund of piety, since it is expended, not in feasting or drinking or indecent excess, but in feeding and burying the poor, and in supporting children of either sex who have neither parents nor means of subsistence, and old men now confined to their houses and incapable of work; in relieving those who have been shipwrecked; and, if there are any in the mines, or in the islands or in prison, provided they suffer for the cause of God's religion, they are the recipients of the bounty to which their confession entitles them. But even the working of a charity like this is made by some a cause of censure against us."—Ancient Christianity Exemplified.

DEATH OR DEEP WATER.

A vessel was once approaching Liverpool. Night was drawing near, the sky was cloudy and there were tokens of a gathering storm. The captain did not seem to understand his business and managed to get his vessel away down on the flats, where it was in imminent danger of being wrecked. A pilot started out to board the ship. He would have been glad to have avoided the job, but it was his turn and he must go where duty called. The pilot boat came alongside, and the pilot jumped into the chains, sprang on deck and said to the captain:

"What have you brought your ship down here for? Call all hands aft."

They came, and he said:

Now, boys, it is death or deep water! Hoist the mainsail!"

The men saw at once that there was work to be done, and a pilot on board who knew his business. They sprang to their places with a will and by putting forth their best exertions, they saved the ship.

Are there not too many Christians who are out of the channel, and drifting on to the shoals of worldliness, and pride, and indifference; who need to hear the faithful pilot's voice, crying out, "Now, boys, it is death or deep water!" A mere theoretical knowledge of divine things will never avail us when the night of wrath and the storm of judgment gather on the world. A dead faith will not save us from shipwreck. If we are to make the heavenly port we must find safer sailing than can be found among the shoals and quicksands of empty profession and religious formalism. Let us heed the pilot's voice and endeavor by God's grace assisting us, to launch forth into deep water and make sure work, both for time and for eternity. "Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure."—Domestic Journal.

KEEP AWAY FROM TEMPTATION.

The only safe course for a young man who would retain his virtue and his correct principles, is to keep away from temptation. How many have fallen who merely ventured to look at vice in her gaudy colors! Her temptation was too strong for them to resist. They partook of the fatal glass—snatched the gilded treasure, or gave themselves up to uncleanness. None are secure who run in the way of sin—who see how near they can venture on the threshold of vice without entangling their feet in the net of the adversary.

Have you ever heard the story of the gentleman who advertised for a coachman? If not, we will repeat it: Three applicants were admitted to the room. He pointed out to them a precipice, remarking:

"How near the edge of this can you drive me without any danger of an upset?

The first applicant replied:

"Within a hair's breadth."

"How near can you drive me?" aksed the gentleman of the second applicant:

"Within a hair's breadth," he replied.

As the third was about leaving the room, supposing he had no chance of competing with the other two, the gentleman stopped him.

"Let us hear what you have to say," said he.

"Why, sir, I can not compete with either of these; if I were to drive you, I would keep as far off as I possibly could."

"You are the man for me," said the gentleman, and he engaged him immediately.

In regard to vice, he is only safe who keeps away from temptation. Those who venture near are often upset and destroyed. We can all point to individuals who are lost to virtue, who when they took the first wrong step, resolved never to take another. It was the voice of a pretended friend, it may be, that urged them on, only for once, but it proved their destruction. Ye who are now safe, whose hearts are not contaminated, listen to the voice of wisdom and go not near the strong allurements to vice. Keep away from the gaming table, the grog shop and the midnight party. Keep away as far as possible, and a life of integrity and virtue will assuredly be yours.—Ex.

WHAT IS ELECTRICITY?

Electricity is the most stupendous force in nature, apparently active throughout the universe the cause of the phenomena described as attraction, gravitation and magnetism, and most probably of heat and light. It is incessantly active, and maintains, it would seem, the physical life of the world. Science can only appreciate some of its results, and apply it on a very limited scale to practical purposes; but knowledge of its adaptability is growing every day, and what a few years since was little more than material for brilliant laboratory experiments or the production of scientific toys, is now becoming a gigantic motive power available for the service of practical science and the progress of civilization. Already it provides a means of instantaneous communication between portions of the earth's surface most remote from each other. It is gradually superseding all other methods of artificial illumination, and it promises to make steam obsolete as a motive power. What other aid it may give, we know not, and we scarcely dare conjecture, although it would seem that the most vivid imagination must fail to apprehend its possibilities. It is in the earth beneath us, known as terrestrial magnetism; it is in the atmosphere around us, and its energy is seen in the lightning flashes which mark the discharge of force between clouds, each of which is a storage of force; and in the vast, indeed inconceivable, kosmos, electricity maintains the relations of suns and systems moving with enormous velocity and unvarying regularity through space. It is a force which, so far as human intellect can appreciate it, knows no cessation or diminution or deterioration. It can be summoned but not created by any skill of man—made apparent in the results of friction or chemical action, but made apparent only, not produced. A spark the eighth of an inch long produced by contact with the small electric machine in the lecture room is precisely similar in character to the terrible flash which splits a tree to fragments, striking it with sudden death, or topples down the most massive tower reared by the skill of man. In Oriental fable we read of lamps, the rubbing of which produced an obedient genius ready to minister to every wrath. We can excite the electric force, and the most stupendous of all the genii nature—if not, indeed, the one master-spirit, of which all known natural forces are but variations—is at our service; our servant, if we will—our most terrible master if we have no skill to conciliate him.—Beeton's Dictionary of Science.

SHAKE hands with somebody as you go out of church. The more of it the better, if it is expressive of real interest and feeling. There may be a great deal of the spirit of the Gospel put into a hearty shake of the hand. Think of St. Paul's four times repeated request. "Greet one another," after the custom then in common use and one which is expressive of even warmer feeling than our common one of handshaking. Why not give your neighbors the benefit of the warm Christian feeling that fills you to the finger-tips, and receive the like from them in return? You will both be benefited by it; and the stranger will go away feeling that the church is not, after all, as cold as he had thought it to be.—Presbyterian.

Mr. Gobat, afterward Bishop of Jerusalem, when engaged as a missionary to Abyssinia, retired on one occasion, in a season of deep spiritual depression and gloom, into a cavern, and there poured out his heart in earnest supplication, beseeching that God would not desert him, but encourage him in his trials. He remained in the cavern some time. When he rose from his knees, his eyes had become accustomed to the darkness, and he saw that he had been there with a hyena and her cubs, which yet had not been suffered to attack him. At the very time when he deemed himself forgotten, he received this striking manifestation that the God of providence was nigh to shield and protect him

ANOTHER WORD FOR THE NEW YEAR.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

WHO PRAYED LAST NIGHT?

Day after day the sun shone out,
Till the earth was choking with dust and drought,
And millions of blossoms on hill and plain
Were almost dead for want of rain.

All through the meadows the heads of wheat
Bent low with the long-continued heat,
And the farmer murmured, "No crop of grain
Shall I harvest this year if it doesn't rain!"

The clouds hung heavy in hearts that knew
How much depended on rain and dew,
And tears were plenty as days went by;
But clouds and tears were not in the sky.

Our Willie noticed the frown that lay
On his father's forehead from day to day;
And longed to banish, with loving art,
The fears that troubled the farmer's heart.

"Mamma, do you think that God would hear
If I prayed for rain?" "Why, of course, my dear,"
Was the mother's earnest and prompt reply.
"Well then," said Willie, "I mean to try."

At bed-time, Willie, o'ercome with play,
Forgot the prayer that he meant to say;
But the angels watching his slumbers guessed
The thought that quivered within his breast.

Next morn, all over the thirsty plain
Was heard the steady drip of rain,
And Willie, o'erjoyed at the welcome sight,
Exclaimed, "Why, mamma, who prayed last night?"

STORIES OF MY BOYS.

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

The residence of a rich uptown merchant was the home of Harvey Horne. I say "home" because I can think of no other term to use, but home means love and kindly acts and sympathizing words, and to all of these Harvey was a stranger. A sort of chore-boy he was, about the house and stables and office uptown. He had been found this place by a kind Christian lady after having—from a most wretched garret—seen the body of his mother borne out to be laid in the pauper's field beside that of her husband, who had died a victim of alcohol.

Let us take a peep inside this home on a Sabbath afternoon. The lady of the house had desired the services of Harvey during the afternoon, and just as her impatience at his non-appearance had reached its height he shuffled into the drawing-room, hat in hand, saying, in his awkward manner,

"Cook said, ma'am, as how you wanted me."

"Yes. I've been wanting you for the last hour. Where do you spend your Sunday afternoons that you're never here when you're wanted?"

"Over at the school in the brick church, ma'am."

"But Sabbath school doesn't hold till this hour," said the lady sharply.

"No, ma'am, but the preacher's wife she has a meetin' for her class after it, in the room where he studies. This here is the last one, though."

"I hope so, indeed," replied the lady. "What do you do at those meetings?"

A frightened look came over the boy's face, and half aloud his lips uttered the thought of his heart in prayer, "O Lord, do help me now, for it's a comin', an' unless Thy great hand'll catch holt o' me, I shall surely topple!"

"What are you saying?" demanded the lady sternly—she had only caught the word "Lord." We never allow swearing in our house!"

"I wa'nt a swearin', ma'am; leastwise I didn't mean it so;" and young Joe, the only son of this house, added in a tone which he meant should savor of wit, "Maybe he was praying!"

"Yes, I'se a prayin'," returned the boy, while the color deepened in his cheek.

Joe burst into a loud laugh, while the lady impatiently exclaimed, "What a fool! Don't you know it's more wrong to lie about such a thing than it is to swear? But you havn't answered my question yet, as to what they have been doing at those meetings?"

"Oh, I know," cried Joe. "I heard Will Slater and Tom Jones talk about it at school. They show up the evil of secret societies, and the teacher has been lecturing to them about what an awful thing Freemasonry is!"

"About what?" came in a deep voice from a portly individual in the corner, while a newspaper behind which his face had been hidden went down on his knees, "About what?"—and he looked sharply from one to the other of the boys.

"Well, I never!" exclaimed the lady with an unpleasant laugh, while the remaining occupant of the room, the "old maid" sister of the master of the house, adjusted her spectacles and looked keenly at Harvey.

In reply to his father's question Joe only laughed as though he had said something too good to bear repetition, and the gentleman said to Harvey very sternly and decidedly, "Don't let me ever hear of anything of the kind again, sir! You will stop going to that Sunday-school. We can find occupation for you at home. That woman, whoever she is, has no right to be talking about any such thing. It is something she knows nothing about whatever. Pretty business for a woman! Can't she find enough out of the Bible to teach to such a numbskull as you?"

"She found it all in the Book, sir, and made it all plain how wicked it is for the Lord to look at; and—"

"Stop sir, immediately! I tell you such folks don't know anything about it, and that's enough. I know, and I don't want to hear you say anything like that again. Do you hear me?"

"I hear yo' sir, an' I won't say anything so yo' can hear it, but I thinks it's wicked!"

The master of the house was angry, very angry. His will was law in small things and in great, and that this street boy, this almost idiot, should set up an opinion against his, was something quite unlooked for. Striding across the room he dealt him a stinging blow, and then opening the door pushed him out with the remark,

"You won't be apt to think your think much longer. Will you?"

A LAMPREY'S NEST.

One day late in spring as I was passing over a bridge I chanced to see two lamhreys, or "lamper-eels," as they are usually called, engaged in building their nest in the creek below me. It was one of the most curious spectacles I ever saw in our stream. They were a few yards below the bridge, just where the water breaks from the still pool beneath it, and flows with a rapid current over the roughly paved bottom. They were distinguishable from the yellowish brown and black stones and pebbles amid which they were working only by their motions. They were tugging away at the small movable stones with great persistence. I went down to the water's edge where they were within reach of my staff, the better to observe them. They would run up to the edge of the still water and seize upon the stones with their suction mouth and drag them back with the current and drop them upon their nest. I understood at once why their nests, which I had often observed before, were always placed at the beginning of a rift; it is that the fish may avail themselves of the current in building them. The water sweeps them back with the pebble in their mouth, their only effort being in stemming the current to seize it. They are thus enabled to move stones which they could not stir in still water.

The stones varied in size from a walnut to a goose egg. When one of them was tugging away at a stone too heavy for it, I would lend a helping hand with my staff; I would move the stone along gently, and the lamprey seemed entirely unconscious of the fact that it was being helped; it would drop the burden at the proper point, and run up for another. Indeed my aid and presence did not disturb them at all. From time to time the larger of the two, which was the female, would thrust her tail with great violence down among the pebbles at the bottom of the creek and loosen them up, and set free the mud which the current quickly carried away. The new material thus plowed up was carried to the nest. Twice in the course of the half-hour that I observed them, the act of spawning took place.

Besides helping move the larger stones with my staff, I several times plowed up the bottom with its point, thus relieving the female of that duty. The fish took it all as a matter of course, and seized upon the pebbles I had loosened with great alacrity. When I thrust my cane beneath them and tried to lift them out of the water, they would suck fast to the stones and prevent me; but they did not manifest any alarm. The lampreys become much exhausted with the spawning and nest building, and large numbers of them die when it is over. In June it is not unusual to find their dead bodies in the streams they inhabit.—The Century.

THERE IS A BOY I CAN TRUST.

I once visited a public school. At recess a little fellow came up and spoke to the teacher. As he turned to go down the platform the master said, "This is a boy I can trust; he never failed me." I followed him with my eye, and looked at him when he took his seat at recess. He had a fine, open, manly face. I thought a good deal about the master's remark. What a character had that boy earned! He had already gotten what would be worth more to him than a fortune. It would be a passport into the best firm in the city, and, what is better, into the confidence and respect of the whole community. I wonder if the boys know how soon they are rated by other people? Every boy in the neighborhood is known, and opinions are formed of him; he has a character either favorable or unfavorable. A boy of whom the master can say, "I can trust him; he never failed me," will never want employment. The fidelity, promptness and industry which he shows at school are in demand everywhere and prized everywhere. He who is faithful in little will be faithful in much.—Band of Hope Review.

TEMPERANCE.

Judges of the Supreme Court in Arkansas prohibit by formal orders the sale of liquors within a distance of three miles from a public or private school.

In Finland there is one Christian denomination, there called the Lœstadian, which binds over all its members to temperance. Its membership is mainly composed of the peasant class.

Prohibition of planting the poppy for the purpose of raising opium under a penalty of $100, is the law in Madagascar.

Since the conversion, in 1874, of Commodore Davidson, of the packet line which runs between St. Louis and St. Paul on the Mississippi river, he has refused a contract which would allow the sale of liquors on the boats though, offered $14,000 for the privilege.

General Woodford, at Lake Bluff, said that a "manufacturer in the West" marked seven hundred dollars in new bills which he paid his workmen on Saturday, and the next Monday afternoon four hundred and fifty dollars of those identical bills were deposited in the bank by the saloon men. This shows where the money goes.

A Philadelphia street railway has put a ban on smoking on its cars. It has found out that there are thirty passengers who do not smoke to one who does, and beside, that to nearly all the thirty the smoke is disagreeable. It has, therefore, wisely decided that there is no good reason why thirty people should be compelled to take into their lungs the smoke out of the filthy mouth of the one smoker, and has therefore prohibited it, even on the rear platforms of its cars.

The Cincinnati Gazette says: "There is a saloon in this city for every eighty-four men, women, and children. Counting five persons to a family, there is a saloon to every seventeen families. This great army of saloon-keepers are engaged in filling the prisons, hospitals, and asylums. Wouldn't half the number be sufficient for that kind of work, or say one for every thirty-four families? And would it be unreasonable to tax those toward lightening the burdens they impose upon society? The brewers, it is true, might not sell so many barrels of beer, but they are already rich enough to stand it."

The official report of the United States commissioners of internal revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1882, shows an aggregate liquor revenue the past year, from distilled spirits, of $69,873,408.18, an increase over 1881 of $2,719,433.30; from fermented liquors of $16,153,920.42, an increase over 1881 of $2,453,679.21. The number of gallons of spirits taxed, distilled from grain, was 70,759,540, an increase over 1881 of 3,333,548; number of gallons distilled from fruit, 1,216,850, a decrease for the year of 484,356 gallons. The number of barrels fermented liquors taxed for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1882, was 15,952,085, an increase over 1881 of 2,641,057 barrels.

—These are sentences from some of the accounts which reach us of the way in which Christmas day was observed: "This has been the most disorderly and disgraceful Christmas holiday ever observed in the city." "Drunkenness is general, and disorder is more prevalent in the streets than for years." "The only noticeable feature of the celebration of the day was the extraordinary number of drunken people on the streets." "Much drunkenness has been seen and many disturbances have occurred, some resulting seriously," and so on to the end of the chapter.

Prof. Adolph Schmitz, Professor in Lake Forest University, and Secretary of the German Total Abstinence Society, spoke to the ladies of the National Convention in most spirited style of the work to which his heart is given. Said he, "To talk of the German vote in America is treason—and I consider every German who comes to this country, takes the oath of allegiance to the government of the United States, and then goes to work to force upon the country the customs and unwritten laws of the nationality he has been so glad to escape from, is a traitor. No German who has agreed as solemely as all do who take out naturalization papers in this country to support its government, can loyally say 'For God and Home and Native Land.' He must if he be a true and loyal citizen be forever willing to shout, 'For God and Home and Adopted Land.'"—Signal.

—The proposition to repeal all Internal revenue taxes and thus give to the whisky and tobacco manufacturers something like $100,000,000 annually, is meeting with opposition from rather an unexpected source. The following from Washington explains the movement: "A New York Association has been and is sending out circulars to soldiers all over the country asking them to write to their Congressmen and protest against the passage of any law to either abolish or reduce the tax on tobacco and whisky, or in any way materially reducing the revenue of the Government. The ground set fourth in this circular as an inducement to soldiers to thus write to their members of Congress is that such a material reduction of the internal revenue as is proposed would in time prevent the allowance and payment of their claims for pensions, bounties and back-pay. Congressmen are already receiving letters from soldiers asking them on the ground stated to withhold their votes on all questions providing for the repeal or reduction of the tobacco tax, or the tax on whisky. If soldiers generally respond to this circular, as they are likely to do, it will form a most potent element of opposition, as Congressmen are still inclined to regard the soldier as a power in the land."

Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, of the Reformed Presbyterian church; Rev. R. Loggan, of the United Brethren church; H. Curtis, of the Wesleyan Methodist church; Rev. P. S. Feemster, State agent; Rev. Alter, of the United Presbyterian church; Rev. S. Collins, of the United Presbyterian church, reported as to the position of their several churches and the work done in their respective bounds.

It was resolved, "That the persons who reported the above and also that other churches which take ground against secret orders be requested to furnish the secretary with a synopsis of the organic law of the several churches they represent on this matter."

The Association, after listening to an able and interesting address by Rev. R. Loggan, on "The Secret of Power in Secret Organizations," agreed to spend half an hour in hearing voluntary addresses. President Blanchard and Rev. J. S. T. Milligan led in spirited speeches.

The convention listened in the evening to a well prepared address by M. N. Butler, editor of the American Freeman, on "The Secret Lodge; Its Power as Related to the Church and State. All in sympathy with the objects of this association were requested to rise; and 32 arose. A vote of thanks was extended to the large number present not in sympathy, for their attendance, patience and courtesy during the evening's exercises.

At the close of devotional exercises on Wednesday morning, a motion was passed allowing Rev. Mackay one-half an hour in asking questions for information or in communicating information on this subject of Masonry to the convention.

The convention spent an hour in five minute speeches on the best manner of opposing secret societies. Brothers Loggan, Alexander, Curtis, Worrell, Thompson. Butler and Blanchard took part in the discussion.

Rev. B. F. Worrell, on motion, proceeded to the consideration of the question, "Does secretism help or hinder the temperance cause?"

The report of the committee on correspondence was presented in the afternoon. Various interesting letters were read, and the chairman was requested to prepare a synopsis of them for publication in the Christian Cynosure.

The finance committee reported $38.85 raised, and were directed to pay for the use of the house and for advertising, and divide the remainder among the other claims.

The committee on resolutions made the following report, which was adopted:

Resolved, That we still entertain and hereby reiterate our conviction, strengthened by observation and experience, that secretism as a system in all its forms is unchristian, anti-republican, and immoral in its character; that it is enslaving and degrading in its influence on the individual, the family, the state and the church, and that it corrupts our business, our politics, our legislation and our judiciary, and should therefore receive unqualified condemnation in every department of life.

2. That moral obligations and special providences of God call and the signs of the times encourage us to increased and persevering efforts in this struggle.

3. That we implore all the Christian churches of this and other lands, by all proper means, to rid themselves of this evil, as that which as much or more than anything else is destroying their spirituality by turning their members away from Christ and his truth and worship, to the lodge and its fables and childish and often wicked mummeries.

4. That we thankfully recognize the efforts of those churches, whether local or general, that testify in their profession and discipline against secretism, and though, as in the anti-slavery contest, they are in a small minority, we exhort them to stand firm now, as they did then, assured that God will, in this struggle as in that, in his own good time, which we feel is near at hand, will give them success beyond their most sanguine expectations.

5. As a State association we will endeavor to increase the interest in our work during the coming year, by preaching, lecturing, holding conventions, organizing local societies, circulating tracts and papers, and by voting where we consistently can in favor of our cause.

6. That the thanks of this association are due and are hereby extended.

First, To the First Congregational church of Emporia, for the use of their comfortable and beautiful house.

Second, To the local reporters of the city papers for their notices of our convention and its proceedings.

Third, To President Blanchard, M. N. Butler, and others, for their attendance and able speeches, to Rev. P. S. Feemster for his diligence and efficiency, and to the citizens of Emporia who have entertained delegates in attendance.

7. That we recommend the more extensive circulation of our organ, the Christian Cynosure, also of that able and fearless champion of our cause, the American Freeman, and of any and all other papers, openly and distinctly committed to anti-secretism.

In the evening a committee of four, consisting of Rev. J. A. Collins, Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, H. Curtis and Rev. R. Loggan were appointed to attend the next annual convention of the National Christian Association, to meet at Washington city.

Linus Chittenden, over eighty years of age, being called to the stage, proceeded to show the manner in which a man is made a Mason, as far as he could recollect the same, assisted by M. N. Butler. A vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Chittenden.

Mrs. J. S. Collins, on invitation, read an essay on "Woman and secretism."

Dr. Blanchard being called upon, discoursed eloquently for a time on the follies of Masonry.

Rev. S. Collins being called, gave a statement of the reform work done in Washington city.

The following was adopted:

WHEREAS, This convention extended to Rev. Mackay, a Masonic clergyman of this city, half an hour to address this convention; and

WHEREAS, The said Rev. Mackay left this convention with evident passion and violent denunciation when called to order for his language; therefore

Resolved, That Rev. Mackay violated in our judgment the courtesy of this convention by denouncing our methods and utterances, stigmatizing them as malicious, ungentlemanly and unchristian, and by insinuating that our speakers were boasting of their perjury, and while he could talk to us, he could not give us ears and brains.

W. W. MCMILLAN, Sec'y.

ELDER I. BANCROFT IN WISCONSIN.

A very encouraging report of Bro. Bancroft's labors in Greene county, Wisconsin, has been received. This consecrated brother accepted the position of State agent by request of the convention at Oshkosh and I guaranteed his expenses and salary at the rate of $600 per year for the first month, December, 1882. His report shows nineteen meetings held, $36.19 received in collections, donations, etc., leaving an unpaid balance over expenses, in his favor of $13.81. This is a good showing for a new man in this particular work, and as Bro. Bancroft is willing to go on the friends will do well to give him their most hearty co-operation and liberal support. Write him at Monroe, Green county, and arrange for meetings so as to secure the most work possible at minimum expense and send your contributions for State work, where it is more convenient than to hand it to the agent himself to Deacon M. R. Britten, Treasurer, Vienna, Walworth county, Wisconsin. The N. C. A. has assumed additional responsibilities in purchasing the outfit and in the publication of the Cynosure, but what is possible we will do to aid the brethren in Wisconsin and other States.

J. P. STODDARD.

FROM THE IOWA STATE LECTURER.

Dec. 29, 1882.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—October 23th I left Clarence to meet appointments announced two weeks before hand. The first work was at Walker, Linn county; here I preached three times to large congregations. My next appointment being at Albion, on passing through Marshalltown, I enjoyed a pleasant visit with Bro. Miller and family. At Albion I learned that a political meeting was to take the place of my intended lecture. Stayed over night with Bro. Shoemaker and arranged to speak the next evening in the Presbyterian church. Bro. S. and the mayor of the town, and also friend Moffatt did all they could to help me publish the meeting. We had a fair congregation and an excellent time. The mayor acted as agent for the Iowa American, and a goodly number responded. The next evening I lectured in the Friends church. We had a fair congregation and excellent attention; and both evenings the congregations responded with fair collections.

From Albion I went to Linnville, Jasper county, left my satchel at the post office and started for the house of Bro. T. H. Bufkin, some four or five miles away. Bro. Bufkin started to meet me at Lynnville, but I missed him by taking another road; however, in good time I reached his house, which is always open for reformers. My first appointment was to preach at Granville in the United Brethren church, Sabbath morning. The people seemed to receive the truth gladly, and an appointment was left for me to lecture in the same place the next evening. The lecture was quite well attended and many rejoiced in the truth. The next lecture was three miles from Granville in a school house. The house was well filled, and the people listened to the truth eagerly. At the close, a number of young men said to me, "The Masons will never get me into their lodge."

From here I went to the Friends church at Chester; preached once, also lectured once. In this church Bro. Bufkin watches over their interest in opposing every thing that would give influence or tolerance to the secret empire. At Granville I found Masonry had expelled several of the best members from the M. E. church because they refused to hold their peace and humbly bow to the powers set above Christ and his kingdom. They were expelled shortly after I was with them a year ago last June. I found a pleasant home a part of the time with Bro. George Ryan, one of the expelled ones. I was much encouraged to meet this dear brother and find him so well posted as to the true character of Masonry and kindred societies. May he and Bro. Bufkin and the many friends of truth in that place succeed in their glorious work.

The Cynosure is read by many in that place, and its influence is wonderful. Dear friends if you want to be benefitted by taking the Cynosure, read it; and one year's thorough reading will enable you to meet any Masonic advocate of the order and put him to flight. I get something new every week to add to my lectures from the Cynosure and Freeman.

My next work was north of Lynnville in a school house. Bro. Henry Johnston of the Friends church, had announced the appointment. Bro. Bufkin and wife accompanied me. The house was well filled; the people were not acquainted with the principles of Masonry, and were wonderfully stirred. Many took me by the hand and said, "Please come back and give us more light;" "I never thought Masonry was so bad. The friends responded to the call of Bro. Bufkin and put the money in his hands to buy me a ten dollar overcoat, and also nearly eleven dollars in money during my stay with them for which may God richly bless them.

From here I went to Marengo and stayed over Sabbath. Preached three times, and in the evening several arose for prayers. The people put six dollars in my hands to help me on my way. At one o'clock in the morning, I took the train for West Liberty, and while waiting saw a Methodist minister at the depot, who was acquainted with Bro. Geo. W. Clark, our reform singer, when he lived in Canada. The poor fellow was a Mason but declared to me that he was not mean enough to defend the order, was led into it by his presiding elder. After being up all night I reached Morning Sun late in the afternoon, and went to the home of our president, C. D. Trumbull; found him and the Rev. Mr. Moffatt comfortably seated in his study. They gave me their hands with a grip far superior to a grip of a Mason, making me feel very much at home. In the evening Lander Hall was filled with the best people of the town. I spoke for one hour and a half under great embarrassment, feeling much affected from loss of rest the previous night, yet I think good was done. After the lecture, Bro. Trumbull announced that I would speak in the Rev. T. P. Robb's church at Sharon the next evening, some four miles south of Morning Sun. A brother then stepped forward and put thirty dollars in my hand. Bro. Trumbull remarked, "This is not merely for your lecture this evening but to enable you to keep in the field and work where they cannot pay you much." May God bless the dear people of Morning Sun for the deep interest they show in giving of their means to carry on the work against the power of darkness, but it is just what you can expect of all genuine United Presbyterians and Covenanters. The next day Bro. Trumhull took me in his carriage to the house of Bro. Robb at Linton. All was ready for the lectures. In the early evening Bro. R's. pair of little bays carried us to Sharon church full as quick as I had any desire to ride after dark. Sharon church is the largest country church I have ever spoken in. I do not know what its seating capacity is, but it was quite well filled. No ordinary church would have held the congregation I think. Bro. Robb took charge of the devotional exercises, then stated the object of the meeting, after which he introduced me to his people. I had but one real embarrassment, the greater part of my congregation were Covenanters, and therefore I had but very little material out of which to make converts to Anti-masonry. After the congregation was dismissed I was introduced to a goodly number of young men whom Bro. R. can feel are ornaments to his church. He gave out that the next day at two o'clock we would hold a meeting for the heads of families and those aged ones who could not get out in the evening. A goodly number were present and I gave them a brief history of my experience and persecution by the Masons for the past years, being requested to do so. The Rev. Mr. Moffatt and wife were present from Morning Sun. Thirty-three dollars and fifty cents was given me to help me in my work; not merely to pay for my work in Sharon, but to enable me to go to the regions beyond. Any lecturer on reforms who has the work at heart and knows whereof he affirms can always look for Bro. R. to meet them more than half way, but it will be useless to try and drive him or his people to that which will not be to the glory of God, as some have proven to their satisfaction, who have tried to force lectures into his church. I enjoyed myself very much with brother and sister Robb in their beautiful and happy home. May its walls ever shine with the glory of Him who has promised us all a home not made with hands eternal in the heavens.

From here I went to Rev. Dill's at Mediapolis; arranged for work and took the cars next morning for Wayne, Henry county. Met J. A. Laird on the train returning from Chicago and spent two days with him. Preached Sabbath morning in the Congregational church at Wayne. In the afternoon I lectured on Masonry in the Lutheran church at Swedeburgh. In the evening I preached in the M. E. church of Wayne; Monday and Tuesday evenings I lectured in the same church; had good attendance and an excellent time. On Wednesday and Thursday evenings I lectured in the Center M. E. church, five miles from Wayne. The house was filled both evenings. Some anticipated that a young lawyer by the name of Riley would answer me; but instead of opposing me, after the lecture he rather leaned to my side of the question. God bless and keep the light shining on his mind. On Friday evening I lectured in the Quaker settlement, five miles south of Wayne. Young people came for five miles to the lecture. The house was filled, many remained standing. We had quite a lively time at the close of the lecture, but all soon passed off. On Sabbath morning I again preached at Wayne in the Congregational church, and in the evening in the Center M. E. church. Thus ended my work for the time in Wayne. Little was said about money, but it seemed as if all wanted to give something to help on the work. Bro. Laird closed up by giving me twenty-five dollars to get me a suit of clothes. In all $70.40 was paid me by the people of Wayne. May the good Lord bless the donors! I am expecting to take whatever comes. If it is adversity, I will pray God to give me grace; if prosperity, I will pray him to keep me humble.

My next work was in Mediapolis, fifteen miles north of Burlington. Rev. Mr. Dill, the Covenanter minister, had made my appointment. The first night I spoke in the High School Hall. The hall was well filled and the lecture I trust, gave perfect satisfaction. Rev. T. P. Robb and Rev. Wiley were present. Bro. Wiley put two dollars in My hand. God bless him in his good work of National Reform. The next evening I lectured at Kossuth in the Presbyterian church. Rev. Mr. Lombard, the pastor, and many others seemed to be much interested in the lecture. The deacon requested me to come again and give a full course, some time in the future, which I expect to do. At ten o'clock I took the train for Cedar Rapids. Having received $6.28 for my labors at Mediapolis and Kossuth.

The next work was in Marion, Linn county, where I preached twice on Sabbath, and on Monday night lectured near Marion in a large school-house, spending the Sabbath with J. Bartholomew our veteran friend against secret societies. Received $4.00 in this place. Bro. J. McKee invited me to give two lectures in the U. B. church in Cedar Rapids, which I did on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. At the close of the lectures Bro. J. Bartholomew gave his experience with Masons. The lectures at Cedar Rapids were well attended. Bro. N. Bourne in his quiet and uncompromising way is exerting an influence in the city that is felt even by the strongest advocate of Masonry. He took me from place to place and introduced me as the State lecturer against secret societies. He had bills printed and helped me to circulate them all through the city, and yet he is one of the first business men of the place. Here is indisputable evidence that Bro. Bourne has Christ and his cause first at heart. His home is always open to the workers of the cause of truth. Here I received $9.28 for services, of which Bro. Bourne paid over half. Remember, brethren, that he is the publisher of the Iowa American and will be glad to take your subscription at twenty-five cents a year.

The work is opening up well in the State. I am receiving calls to which I shall respond at once. I am preparing to lecture on National Reform and would be glad to preach or lecture once in every locality where I go on this subject.

When will our churches be cleansed, if they continue to vote for Freemasons, and pay Masonic preachers, and commune with them at the altar of Christ? If we vote at all, let us vote as we pray; and can we expect God's blessing at the ballot box and not contend for Christ as the one high over all. My reports will come every two weeks after this. D. P. RATHBUN.

SCHOOL-HOUSE MEETING IN MISSOURI.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Allow a few thoughts in regard to our anti-secret meeting held December 23d and 25th, 1882, at Freedom School-house in Newton county, Missouri.

We had Bro. Glassford with us to work the degrees and lecture and when he killed Hiram, and stretched him out full length on the floor I could not help thinking what would the people say if they could see some would-be preacher of the gospel playing this farce. We think that Bro. Glassford's lecture and working the degrees at our school-house will result in great good to the anti-secret cause in our neighborhood. None of those opposed to the lodge had ever been Masons, and they could deny nearly all we would say. We do not think it strange that Masons are so good at denying when we take into consideration that Masons are sworn always to conceal and never reveal. If the American party will pray and work as they should do, success is ours; for the god of secrecy is not like our God. So let us close up and stand firmly and in 1884 we will ere long elect a President who will stand right on the laws and Constitution of his country, for he will not have a secret organization to lean upon. Secret order men tell us they do not propose to protect men in doing wrong. We are not going to say they do, but we say they are of Adam, and if I belonged to a secret organization and was to get in trouble and the fraternity did not help me, I would say they were meaner than I had ever thought them to be. If they are not for the purpose of taking advantage of the uninitiated, they are not worth much to any man. The best thing to be done is to organize in honorable way. We organized an anti-secret society some two months ago, and I am confident that we are two hundred per cent. stronger now than before. C. V. WALROND.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—Hon. George Kipp of Ortonville, Mich., sends word of the vote for the American ticket in Genesee county, that State, which numbered 23 ballots. He promises a more favorable report if spared to see another election.

AN INSTRUCTIVE PARALLEL.

The rapidity with which the civil-service reform doctrine has been spreading within the last year is a very remarkable and, in some ways, a very instructive phenomenon. The agitation about it has been going on for over fifteen years, but it was, to all outward appearance, making but little impression on the classes who actively occupied themselves with politics. General Grant took it up with a certain show of earnestness when he became President, but met with so little encouragement that he was, when he left the Presidential chair, a very active perpetrator of most of the civil-service abuses. President Hayes, too, made but a very limited modification in the old system, and when he left office even those who were most friendly to the reform were free with their predictions that it would not be heard of again for many years.

About the same time many of the young men who had what are called political aspirations began to fight shy of the movement, as something connection with which would ruin their prospects, by bringing suspicions on their practical good sense. In fact, sneering at civil-service reform began with this class to be an easy way of showing freedom from illusions, and contempt for humbug. General Garfield, when elected, too, had apparently so far lost faith in the future of the idea that in his letter of acceptance he promptly avowed his willingness to maintain in his administration the leading feature of the spoils system, by continuing to divide the appointing power with Senators and Representatives. In political circles the fun of civil-service reform grew better and better: Conkling, and Smyth, and Platt, and all their kind were probably never so much amused by it as about the beginning of 1881.

All this is now changed. Not only do all the party platforms commend the reform in the very terms with which the reformers define it—this they have done for some time—but all candidates for office are now civil-service reformers, not only in the old sense of wishing to put "none but good men in office," but in the sense of wishing to select civil servants by competitive examination. We doubt if there is any candidate for high office in either party in any Northern State to-day who ventures to avow his belief in, or partiality for, the spoils system. All candidates for re-election who have in time past sneered at or opposed the reform, are now trying to explain their action or bury it in oblivion, and trying to persuade voters by some form of words that the charge that they were ever friendly to spoils is a cruel slander. Civil-service reform associations are being formed in every direction, and especially in this State, with extraordinary rapidity. They spring up in the night, and on the most unpromising soil; and, more wonderful still, they sometimes contain some of the most hardened sinners of the spoils system, men whom no arguments could have brought over, or any thing but a sudden perception that the day of judgment was at hand.

Now, what has been the cause of this rapid growth of reform sentiment? Not certainly any new or extraordiry exertions on the part of its apostles. The agitation during the past two years has been somewhat, but not very much, more energetic than before. But its machinery has been almost insignificant in its operations. A few—very few—lectures, a few magazine articles, a few weekly fly sheets, an occasional article in a few—very few—friendly newspapers, an occasional word of encouragement in a sermon, include almost the whole activity of its friends in the field of persuasion. There has been no change in their methods sufficient, or nearly sufficient, to account for the—as we believe—swift and scathing condemnation which the vote this month will pass upon the spoils system in all its branches. The work has been done in the main by the spoilsmen themselves. It is their excesses in defending and pushing their system which have at last made reform inevitable and, as every one now acknowledges, brought it very near.

Now, what is most remarkable about all this is that it is the second time in the national history that a great cause has unexpectedly triumphed through the excesses of its opponents. It is throwing no discredit on the Abolitionists to say that nothing they did or could do in the way of exposing the evils of slavery, or of appeals to the humanity or sense of justice of either the North or the South, would have brought about emancipation, or even preparation for emancipation, within our time. It was the exhibitions of contempt and hatred for them on the part of the slaveholders which roused the conscience of the North, and opened its ears to Abolitionist doctrine. The opposition to the reception or debate of anti-slavery petitions in Congress; the sanction given by the Postmaster-General to the Southern interference with the transmission of anti-slavery documents through the mails; the demand made on Northern legislatures, and the sympathetic hearing it received, for restrictive legislation toward anti-slavery publications; the demand by Southern Governors for the surrender to them for trial of Northern anti-slavery men; the passage and enforcement of the Fugitive Slave Law—these were the things which prepared the North for the last extremity.

Passive and silent resistance on the part of the slave power, abstinence from all displays of its strength, or a seeming deference to anti-slavery opinion, while pleading practical difficulties in the way of emancipation, would probably have left the institution of slavery in existence to this day. But it actually precipitated its downfall by exhibiting in an extreme form its theory of its rights and duties. Day by day it armed the anti-slavery orators with arguments and illustrations of tremendous force. Its written defenses became, like Hubbell's assessment circulars and "Campaign Text-Book," the most effective weapons its adversaries could use, and it finally rushed headlong on its ruin; so that at the last, within two short years, millions of pro-slavery men at the North disappeared from the scene as rapidly as the friends of the spoils system are now disappearing, leaving not a track behind. The political transformation effected by the war was, in fact, not half so wonderful as the moral transformation.—The Nation, Nov. 2.

THE CHURCHES.

—We spend annually for saving 700,000,000 blood bought heathen souls, the sum of not more than $2,500,000, while the total contributions of all the churches in America for all causes does not exceed $77,000,000. For intoxicating drinks on the other hand, we spend $900,000,000 every year. For tobacco, $80,000,000! For ladies' foreign dress goods, about $125,000,000! New York City alone spends for theatre going and other amusements three times as much as our whole country gives for foreign missions. The kid gloves it imports alone cost ten times as much. The ladies of America actually spend more for artificial flowers every year than do all the churches for the spread of the gospel! How does this seem to the conscience?

For Christ	$ 77,000,000.
For vanity, liquor, and tobacco	1,105,000,000.

—Moravian.

—There are in China 600 Protestant churches, 20 self-supporting. Nearly two-thirds of the rest are partially so. Thirty-seven years ago there were only six converts in all China. Now there are 18,000. The oldest of the Protestant missions dates from 1842. To-day there are 29 missionary societies at work at 91 central stations and 511 out-stations, 250 ordained missionaries and 73 ordained native clergy, 63 unmarried women teachers, 511 licensed preachers, 71 colporteurs, 90 "Bible women," 400 churches, 1,800 enrolled communicants, about 72,000 adherents, 20 theological schools with 231 students, 30 higher boarding-schools for boys, with 811 scholars; 38 for girls, with 777 scholars; 177 day schools for boys, 4,500 students; 82 for girls, with 1,300 students; 16 missionary hospitals and 24 dispensaries. At the Mildmay Conference, in London, Dr. Legge stated that at the present rate of progress in forty years more Protestant missions ought to report 26,000,000 communicants and 100,000,000 adherents in the middle kingdom. The American Presbyterian Publishing House at Shanghai, in 1880, printed 314,000 Bibles and Testaments, 4,672,500 pages of tracts, and 226,763 volumes of miscellaneous books.

—Dr. Jones, a physician of Jacksonville, Ill., and one of the Concord School of Philosophy, says: "The Hindu of several thousand years ago was finely cultivated, not at all idolatrous, and worshiped one God. One of the Hindu cities was almost incredibly opulent and splendid. It had 675 towers. The wealth of the world poured itself into the lap of India, exceeding computation and belief. She possessed a standing army which made use of 6,000 elephants of war. These reports are not at all incredible, when we consider the absorption of the wealth of China, Japan and other countries which was going on. The amount of her commerce, for which Carthage, Greece and Egypt entertained great projects, was simply stupendous. The arts were also in a very advanced state. In the polishing of the diamond, an art which is supposed to be of modern growth, they were proficient. They were an agricultural, commercial and manufacturing people. However low and debased the Hindu may now appear, there can be no doubt that he then surpassed in civil government and glory." Mr. Alcott also held the same view. He declared that the manifestations of the human mind in the past filled him with wonder. He did not know but there were people in the pre-historic ages who were gods compared with us. And the progress of civilization seems to have been downward instead of upward. Alfred Russell Wallace, it is said, holds the same view.—Advance.

NOT UP TO THEIR OWN STANDARD.

The Free Methodist says with great force and seriousness that the teachings of the holiness movement as held by some of its leaders, are not antagonistic with certain great and popular evils, among which are war, the follies of fashionable dress and the secret orders. Of the latter our cotemporary says:

"A few years ago there was an effort to secure the influence of certain holiness journals against secret societies, but the effort was a failure, so far as we are informed; and to this day we have seen nothing in those papers adverse to those orders. Yet one of the editors wrote us at that time as follows: 'Your advance ground upon the subject of Masonry is about the only point at which we diverge. In that, I feel that we shall be with you ere long.'

"Are they with us? Are the leading holiness journals at war with Masonry? Does the holiness army, as represented in the National Holiness Association, make war on Masonry? When was there a battle fought? The news from the front is always welcomed to our columns. We remember a time when certain preachers declared themselves opposed to slavery, but they never preached, prayed, or labored against the system. When did any of the various journals that are in hearty sympathy with the National Holiness movement urge its readers to break the blasphemous obligations that bind them to their lodges, and testify against these unholy orders? To war against evils is not their method, but to preach holiness and leave the people to adjust their various relations according to their notions. From their silence on the subject, it might be concluded there was nothing in the Bible against secrecy. Men who have worn the cable-tow ought to sound the alarm of danger."

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON III., Jan. 21, 1883.—THE BELIEVING PEOPLE. Acts 2:37–47.

37. Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?

38. Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

39. For the promise is unto you, and to your children and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

40. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, save yourselves from this untoward generation.

41. Then they that gladly received his word were baptized; and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.

42. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers.

43. And fear came upon every soul: and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles.

44. And all that believed were together, and had all things common,

45. And sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need.

46. And they, continuing daily, with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart,

47. Praising God, and having favor with all the people. And the lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.

NOTES.

In their heart. In religion, it is of the utmost importance that the heart be affected. Sin has its seat there; there the change must begin. A mere change of sentiments, opinions, profession, will avail nothing unless the heart be pricked.—Lesson Compend.

What shall we do? This question is not exactly equivalent to the jailor's question, What must I do to be saved? (16:30). Convinced that the nation had put its Messiah to death, the people were overwhelmed with both sorrow and perplexity. They could not undo the deed; what could they do?—Abbott. True conviction of sin leads to anxious inquiry for the right course to be pursued in such extremity. It implies (1) A sense of ignorance and dependence. (2) An earnest, anxious desire to know the right way. (3) A willingness to do whatever is necessary in the case. (4) It implies also a readiness to acknowledge now this Jesus as "raised up," "exalted," and empowered to dispense the Holy Ghost (vers. 32, 33.)—Jacobus.

Every one of you. There are no exceptions. It is Christ's command, that whosoever believes in him should publicly profess their faith by baptism. A faith that is not willing to confess the Lord, is not strong enough or true enough to save the soul. Baptism is (1) A confession of Christ. (2) A symbol of the washing away of sin. (3) A symbol of the purified, risen life. (4) A symbol of the baptism of the Holy Spirit.—Peloubet.

Jesus (Saviour), Christ (the Messiah). The combination "Jesus Christ" does not appear till after the resurrection, when Christ had become a proper name. It has been noted that, in the Apostolic Epistles, Christ is spoken of only twenty-two times by his human name Jesus, and 701 times by some form of expression that acknowledges his divinity.—Cook.

Unto you and your children. He specifies those for whom the promise was intended: It concerns "you," that is Israelites; also "your children," that is, not restricted to the present moment, but extends to the generations in Israel yet unborn; further, all nations, Gentiles whom God shall summon.—Lechler. Unto you. Lest they should doubt of pardon and grace, their sin being so great.—Pool. Unto your children. Because every one's first care is and should be for their families and descendants.—Abbott

There were added about 3000 souls. Unto them is an addition by the translators. The language here is absolute, as though these souls first found their true life when they found it in Jesus Christ. Comp. ch. 5:14; 11:24. Observe that these converts were received into the church at once, on their profession of repentance and their consent to receive baptism; that they were received on the basis of personal repentance and acceptance of the word, as converts to the religion of Jesus Christ; it is not impossible that the apostles may have received some who were not savingly converted—it is very probable that some of these new converts brought into the primitive church the seeds of that Judaizing doctrine which afterward proved so hostile to the purity and power of the early Church; it is, however, clear from the next verse that the majority of these converts were humble and docile recipients of the new faith, as taught by the apostles, and were steadfast in it (Abbott); the sequel shows that many converts were made from the Hellenistic Jews who were present at the feast, ch. 6:1; and that few, if any, of the converts were of the ruling class, ch. 4:1; it is obvious that some of these converts may have gone back to the cities whence they came, and may have been the unknown founders of the Church at Damascus, or Alexandria, or Rome itself.—Plumptre.

And in fellowship. The original signifies literally a sharing in common. Here it probably implies both fellowship in spiritual things, a participation with each other in Christian sympathy and experience, and also practical charity.—Abbott. They were like one loving family. One of the greatest means of growth in spiritual life is fellowship and familiar intercourse with the saints. No one can well be as good a Christian alone, as they can in fellowship with other Christians.—Peloubet.

And in breaking of bread. Daily in the temple, observing carefully the old Jewish ritual, and then meeting together in the eventide, they would eat in common the evening meal, and would at its close repeat the solemn act of breaking bread he had instituted in memory of his death.—Schaff. The holy communion was at first, and for some time, inseparably connected with the love feasts of the Christians, and unknown as a separate ordinance. It was called breaking of bread from the custom of the master of the feast breaking bread in asking a blessing.—Alford.

Fear came upon every soul, as well those who received the word as those who rejected it. A solemn reverential fear on all those who believed, and were baptized and joined with obedience to the teaching of the apostles. Terror and dread on those who turned from the truth preached by them. The same signs and teaching, which prepare some men's hearts to receive Christ, terrify sinners, on account of their evil lives, though often they have no other effect than to make them fear.—Denton.

And had all things common. What were the facts as to this having property in common? There was in some sense an actual community of goods but we must not suppose that all property ceased among the Christians; that they sold all their possessions and goods, and placed them in a common fund out of which all were supported. But the disciples were actuated by the spirit of love toward each other, which impelled them to regard the necessities of their brethren as their own. Not only did they give largely of their wealth, but many, not all, placed the whole of it at the disposal of the apostles.—Gloag. The story of Ananias and Sapphira shows clearly that this giving up of possessions into a common stock was no necessary condition of Christian membership. Some fourteen years later, Acts 12:12, we find Mary, the mother of John and Mark,—evidently a person of consideration and authority in the Church,—possessing a house of her own in the city. The inspired teachings of the Epistles of the New Testament clearly shows us what was the view taken by men like St. James and St. Paul of this question of property. They evidently had no idea of a general sharing of possessions among Christians, and never publicly urged on their converts a renunciation of their rank or property. Even the austere and ascetic James, who certainly witnessed and most probably shared in the primitive community of goods in the Jerusalem Church, repeatedly rebukes the rich and powerful, not for possessing but for misusing, wealth and position, James 2:1-9; 4:13-17; 5:1-5.—Schaff. It would appear that this community of goods was entirely confined to Jerusalem. There is no trace of it anywhere except as regards the Church in Jerusalem.—Gloag. It was instituted to meet existing emergencies when the church was largely composed of pilgrims, temporarily sojourning at Jerusalem, and dependent, according to the custom then, and even now to some extent prevailing in the East, on the hospitality of residents there.—Abbott. It does not seem to have continued long even in Jerusalem.—Gloag. The sale and gift were purely voluntary. No disciple was required, as a condition of joining the Church, to surrender his property to the community; even after sale, he was free to give little or much as he chose, chap. 5:4. There is therefore, in the apostolic example no warrant for the modern American socialistic communities, in which every member is required to surrender, not only his property, but his earnings, to the common stock.—Abbott. Origin. It is probable that it arose from a continuation, and application to the now increased number of disciples, of the community in which our Lord and his apostles had lived before.—Alford. From this practice at Jerusalem we may perhaps explain the great and constant poverty of that Church, Rom. 15:25, 26; 1 Cor. 16:1-3.—Alford. Every attempt to revive a community, where all things should be literally in common has been a failure.—Schaff. There is not in the New Testament any warrant for the belief that such communism as was practiced temporarily in the Church at Jerusalem, was directed by God, or is recorded as an example for us. It is not said to have been counselled by the apostles; their writings nowhere commend it; and while the inspired teachings of the New Testament writers are authoritative, there is no warrant in Scripture for the doctrine that the example of the early Church is an authority for later ages.—Abbott. The principle underlying Christian communism, viz., that all possessing goods and industries are to be consecrated to God in the service of humanity, is a fundamental Christian principle, Matt. 25:14-30; Luke 13:6-9, but neither experience nor Scripture indicates that selling all and dividing to the poor is the best method calculated to serve humanity, or even the poor.—Abbott.

From house to house; or at home, as in the Revised Version. The original is capable of either interpretation. The essential fact is, that while they continued at this time in the observance of the Jewish forms of worship, they added gatherings for Christian worship in private houses.—Abbott. The congregations meeting now at one house, now at another. The connection of the Lord's Supper with the Passover meal at its institution, made the Christian Sacrament essentially a service which could be celebrated, as at the first institution it was, in such a room as that where the Passover meal was eaten.—Prof. Lumby.

Singleness of heart. This means with a sincere and pure heart. They were satisfied and thankful. They were not perplexed or anxious, nor were they solicitous for the luxurious living, or aspiring after the vain objects of the men of the world.—Barnes. Having but one end in view, that the faith of Christ should be spread abroad as widely as possible.—Cambridge Bible. In very many cases, the simplicity is destroyed and the true gladness consequently lost, by a huge, burdensome, irrational luxury; simplicity may be marred, too, by the cost of the entertainment in relation to the resources of the entertainer; immoderately late hours do much to mar both the simplicity and the heart-gladness of social meals; the use of intoxicating liquors.—Arnot's Church in the House.

BITS OF THINGS.

IT was announced last summer that for the first time for twenty years Dartmouth College is living within its means.

—Rev. E. D. Barr of St. Louis, having left $200,000 to the churches of that city, his daughter contests the will on the ground that his mind was ruined by drunkenness.

WHEN the late Mr. Horace Maynard placed a letter "V" on the door of his room at Amherst College, he was questioned and ridiculed for four years on the subject; but after he delivered the Valedictory his fellow-graduates solved the riddle.

THE London Builder attributes the marvelous durability of mortar in Italy to the fact that the lime remains in a pit covered with water for two years before it is used, whereas in England lime is slaked and used the same day. Most building-specifications even require newly-slaked lime.

—The directors of the Cunard steamers have adopted a new rule which will further commend their line to the confidence of the travelling public. A resolution was passed on the 7th of November, declaring that after the "first of December the allowance of rum to seamen and firemen on board the company's ships will be abolished, and coffee substituted." Railroad companies and steamboat companies are thus, one after another, recognizing the danger to their property and the lives and limbs of those whom they transport, of employing drinking men.

MUCH interest is attached to the preparations being made in England for a public celebration of Mr. Gladstone's completion of half a century of Parliamentary life. Mr. Gladstone was returned for Newark immediately after the passage of the Reform bill. His first election address was dated from Newark, Oct. 9, 1832. The nomination took place Dec. 11, and the polling Dec. 12 and 13. Jan. 29, 1833, the Parliament assembled, and from that time to this Mr. Gladstone has been a member of every British Parliament.

The extent to which this country has become "alienized" may be inferred from the figures of the census; there are about eight millions of people who were born in other countries, and nearly as many more un-Americanized children born in this country of foreign parents. Add to these the colored population, and we have about twenty million who do not belong to what may be termed the native race. And there is being added to these three-quarters of a million a year of aliens, besides those born here of alien people. Two-fifths of our population are what may be termed exotics.

It is on record in Germany that in the past 272 years no fewer than 523 theatres have been burned down in various parts of the world. This is an average of nearly two per year. During the past century there was a large increase in the percentage over the preceding time For the hundred years the total number was 460, more than four-fifths of the total for the 272 years. For the period included between 1871 and 1828 the average was thirteen per annum. Some of the minor features of these statistics are as follows: Of cities, London, with thirty-one fires, leads the list; Paris, with twenty-nine, follows her; then comes New York with twenty-six; then San Francisco with twenty-one. While Barnum's place of amusement in New York has been so often burned down, Astley's in London and the Grand Opera in Paris have each been destroyed four times. Her Majesty's, Drury Lane, and Covent Garden have been three times burned. Numerous other London theatres could boast of two serious fires. On the London list the oldest theatre conflagration is the Globe's, on Bankside, which was destroyed in 1613.

According to La France Medicale, Dr. Gorini relates that one night, having fallen asleep while reading a book he presently awakened, when, looking at the wall opposite his bed, which was illuminated by a lamp near him, he observed it covered with printed characters of large size, forming words regularly disposed, and separated by lines like those in the book which he had been reading. Not only could he see the text, but he could distinguish the annotations in smaller characters; and, though the whole appearance was vague and indistinct, there could be no doubt that the image seen on the wall was that of the pages which he had been reading when he fell asleep. This strange apparation continued some twenty seconds, and in this period was reproduced each time at which, after closing, he again opened his eyes. The incident is regarded as an interesting illustration of persistent image in the retina, of which so much has been said of late.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man, by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2 00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry in League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Chris-tian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1.25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Re-public, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen

MISCELLANEOUS.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. Table of Contents: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen. $2 00

General Washington Opposed to Se-cret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the In-itiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. Each of these able writers in clear, forcible language treats the subject in one or more of its varied phases. Rev. David McDill in six chapters treats of 1. "Their Antiquity; 2 Their Secrecy; 3. "Oaths and Promises;" 4 "Profaneness" 5. "Their Exclusiveness;" 6. "False Claims." Prest Blanchard handles the topic: "Shall Christians join Secret Societies?" in a masterly way, showing clearly that they are all opposed to the genius of Christianity; and Dr. Beecher closes with his Report on Secret Societies, which was adopted by the Congregational Association of Illinois at Ottawa in 1866. In cloth, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.25. Paper cover, 15 cents; per dozen, $1.25

Proceedings of Pittsburgh Convention. Containing Official Reports; Addresses by Rev. D. R. Kerr, D. D., Rev. B. T. Roberts, Rev. G. T. R. Meiser, Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., Prest. J. Blanchard, Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., Rev. Woodruff Post, Rev. Henry Cogswell, Prof. C. A. Blanchard and Rev. W. E. Coquilette; also Report of the Political Mass Convention, with Platform and Candidates for the Presidential Campaign of 1876. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Its origin, objects, what it has done and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the end sought; the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and By-laws of the Association. condition of the Carpenter donation, with engraving of building donated by Mr. Carpenter; tables showing the number of pastors and communicants in churches that exclude members of secret societies, tabular view of local, county, state and national conventions, and list of organizations auxiliary to the National Christian Association; brief opinions of eminent men on secret societies, and testimonies of religious bodies against them. 25 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Minutes of the Syracuse Convention. Containing addresses by Rev. B. T. Roberts, Chas. W. Greene, Esq., Prof. C. A. Blanchard, Rev. D. P. Rathbun, Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Mrs. M. E. Gage, Elder J. R. Baird and others. Unpublished Reminiscences of the Morgan Times, by Elder David Bernard; Recollections of the Morgan Trials, as related by Victory Birdseye, Esq., and presented by his daughter, Mrs. C. B. Miller; Secretary's Report; Roll of Delegates; Songs of Mr. G. W. Clark; Paper by Enoch Honeywell; Constitution N. C. A.; Reports of Committees and a Report of the Political Meeting. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Anti-Mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 31 Cynosure tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies; and the dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized secrecy are shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public. Those who wish to circulate anti-Masonic Tracts ought to have the book to select from. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—Senator Morrill has presented the House bill to reduce internal revenue taxation with the amendment thereto embracing a revision of the tariff.

—Secretary Lincoln, in reply to an inquiry from the House of Representatives, says that in many instances the substantial benefits to commerce arising from the expenditure of public money on river and harbor improvements have been so obscure and insignificant as to justify a doubt of the wisdom of making the appropriation. The estimates of the Engineer Department for the improvement of rivers and harbors during the next fiscal year aggregate $33,889,000, and to many of the items Mr. Lincoln records his objections.

—The United States Commissioner of Education and Bishop Simpson made addresses before the Philadelphia Union League in favor of government appropriations in behalf of education. It was proposed that $10,000,000 yearly be appropriated among the States according to illiteracy. Resolutions were adopted in favor of the movement.

—A new Chicago venture is the "Commercial Exchange of Chicago" to promote uniformity in the customs and usages of merchants; to inculcate principles of justice and equity in trade; to facilitate the speedy adjustment of business disputes; to acquire and disseminate valuable commercial and economic information, and generally, to secure to the members the benefits of co-operation in the furtherance of their legitimate pursuits.

—The Chicago Evening Journal has changed hands. Messrs. Andrew Shuman and John R. Wilson have purchased a controlling interest in the paper. For some time back they have been leasing it for a rental of $10,000 a year.

—Four cars of crude silver, in bars of ninety-seven pounds each, have arrived from the Montana mines to the First National Bank of Chicago. Their value is estimated at $1,000,000. The treasure was taken from Helena to Muir City, 123 miles by bull-trains.

—The Commissioners having in charge the organization and conduct of the National Exposition of Railway Appliances are preparing for an exhibition in the Exposition Building, Chicago. An extensive premium list is prepared which involves the awarding of several hundred gold, silver and bronze medals, and about every detail pertaining to the preparations for and conduct of the exposition is fixed.

—It was reported Thursday that the bark Star of the West was lost in the Atlantic, and all on board, fifteen men, perished.

—A terrible storm of wind and snow raged on the summit of Mt. Washington on Thursday. The wind blew at the rate of 144 miles an hour, and the temperature at zero.

—The American expedition sent to the Cape of Good Hope to take observations of the transit of Venus has arrived in England with 336 photographs.

—A delegate convention is to be held at Pittsburgh in May to organize a federation of the coal-miners of the United States, who number 152,000.

—Wayland village, twenty miles south of Grand Rapids, Mich., was visited by a conflagration Sunday morning which nearly consumed its entire business section. The loss is $20,000.

—St. Mary's Episcopal Seminary at Knoxville, Ill., was destroyed by fire early Thursday morning. Many of the young lady students made their escape from the burning structure by means of ladders, and but two received injuries. All the property of the inmates was destroyed. The total loss is placed at $100,000.

—Archbishop Purcell has written a letter to the proprietor of the Catholic Telegraph at Cincinnati, inclosing $60, which he compares to the widow's mite, to be applied to the fund for paying his (the Archbishop's) debts.

—A lazy letter-carrier left in the back room of a saloon in New York, Saturday night, 600 letters and postal cards, which he intended to distribute Monday.

—The steamship City of Brussels, from New York for Liverpool, was run down by a Glasgow steamer during a fog, and ten persons were drowned, two of whom were passengers.

—Most disastrous floods have occurred on the Danube and the Rhine, and it is feared that many lives will be lost. Direct railway service between France, Switzerland, and Italy is interrupted. Hundreds of people have been rendered homeless at Mannheim and other points, and great distress prevails.

—A Berlin dispatch of the 4th says that the inundations are taking the form of a great public catastrophe. The distress is increasing hourly. The military and civil authorities are making the greatest exertions to mitigate the misery of disaster. At Ludwigshafen, opposite Mannheim, the great Rhine dam gave way and the lives of hundreds of people were imperiled. A steamer rescued many hundreds. The deepest distress prevails. Thirteen persons were drowned at Freisenheim. In all sixty or seventy lives have been lost by the floods. The water is penetrating the foundations of the fortifications at Mayence.

PUBLISHER'S NOTES.

A VERY GOOD THING

to have in every home, by everybody, old and young, in the country or village, and in cities as well. A marvel of condensed information, both useful and trustworthy, with a thousand or more Engravings, illustrating labor-saving methods and devices in the Field, in the Garden, and in the Household, Animals, Plants, etc.—with many large beautiful Pictures; Illustrated Stories for and Instructive Talks with Boys and Girls; Plans of Houses, Barns, and Out-Buildings, with Specifications. All these, and much more, will be found in the 42d Volume of the American Agriculturist, now beginning, and at less cost than anywhere else in the world. Its exposure of Humbugs, a most valuable feature, is to be pushed with increased vigilance. To the previous staff of editors and contributors many additions are now made, including the best writers all over the country. In its prime, this journal enters its 42d volume, more vigorous than ever, with new writers, new artists, new dress, etc. Though prepared at larger expense than most $3 and $4 magazines, it is, owing to its immense circulation, supplied, post-paid, for $1,50 a year, and less to clubs—either English or German edition. Single numbers, 15 cents. One specimen, post-paid, 6 cents. A plate copy of Dupree's last great painting, "IN THE MEADOW," is presented to each yearly subscriber. Address Publishers of American Agriculturist, 751 Broadway, New York.

Books sent post-paid on receipt of retail price, but books by mail are at risk of person ordering, unless 10 cents extra is sent to pay for registering them, when their safe delivery is guaranteed. Books at retail ordered by express are sold at 10 per cent. discount and delivery guaranteed, but not express paid. Postage stamps taken for small sums.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicographer, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority because they tell too much.

General Ahiman Rezon and Freemasons' GUIDE. By Daniel Sickels, 33d degree. The most perfect Masonic monitor published in the United States. Embellished with many engravings and containing monitorial instructions in the degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Masons, with explanatory lectures, the ceremonies of consecration and dedication of new lodges, installation of officers, laying foundation stones, dedication of Masonic halls, burial services, Masonic calendar, ritual for a Lodge of Sorrow, Masonic trials, etc. Bound in fine cloth, extra large 12mo, $2.00.

WEEKLY COMMENT.

The trades-union building which is proposed on the Lake front in Chicago promises to be more than a menace to the business interests of the city—a school of immorality and crime. The assembly room will be fitted up for theatrical performances and a portion of the building will be occupied by a saloon. To protesting citizens who object to a drunk-factory on a prominent avenue and near the Exposition building—a quarter frequented by ladies and children—the answer of the labor-lodges is that no whiskey will be sold or given away to children. But ordinary citizens do not fear the assaults of drunken children so much as of drunken men. Besides this place will be a forum for every so-called "agitator." Every Dennis Kearney and Justus Schwab and Johann Most would enter Chicago with satisfaction, knowing that one hall would be open to him. Kearney, when here, had to speak on the street; and other ranters of the same sort have been elbowed into small or remote halls. The outrageous theories advanced by Kearney are innocent compared with Most, who when speaking here lately, urged a general demolition of affairs and the setting up of new principles in business and social life. Banks must be gutted. From them, he said, "Take everything you can get; all you can lay your hands on, and even if private persons suffer, let that not deter you; it makes no differcuce." Rulers in this country as well as Europe must be killed off, and there must be no qualms about the business, no faltering. The people must kill. There must be no forgiveness, "but cold, implacable, inexorable, certain death." The agents of this reform must be guns, bombs, explosives, chemicals, petroleum, dynamite. This Satanic advice is as much a school of murder as the throat-cutting oaths of Freemasonry. Familiarity with such sentiments transforms innocence and industry to demoniac cruelty and hate. Chicago, nor any other large city can afford to furnish a resort where such ideas are propagated.

Next Thursday, January 25th, is the "day of prayer for Colleges." It used to be a day of fasting and prayer; but the idea of rigor and self-abnegation is too repulsive for churches which meet once a week to worship, over kitchens and parlors which are warmed up almost nightly. So it is dropped as an unpleasant feature of a religion which might have fitted the stern temper of our fathers, but we, their children, would willingly forget. But the day approaches when, by common consent, the young men and women upon whom is to fall the mantle of Christian reform are to be remembered before God. Let those who read these lines make it a day of humiliation, fasting and prayer—a day of earnest and steadfast supplication, that God for Christ's sake will send abroad into our colleges and seminaries his Holy Spirit, to baptize with the tongue of fire these who are soon to take up the work of Christ among men.

The people of Tennessee will not soon forget that dishonesty is folly. The fact that no State can be sued opened the way for a repudiation of the State debt a while since, creditors being offered sixty cents on the dollar with interest at three per cent. Even this vigorous scaling down did not suit the Democratic party, whoseState Convention repudiated the agreement in favor of a greater reduction. The majority of the voters in November endorsed this platform; and, while no new laws on the case had been passed, the State Treasurer Polk refused payment under the old arrangement on the ground that the people were opposed to that use of the funds. It seems he had decided on another way to use it; since it appears that he is a defaulter and has put $400,000 of these funds into his own pocket. It has a sharp look of poetic justice that the people who refused to pay a debt because they could not be sued should see the money saved by the transaction lugged off by the man they had set to watch it.

The awful calamity in Milwaukee at the burning of the Newhall House on Wednesday, and the narrow escape from a similar catastrophe at the Planter's Hotel, St. Louis, on Sunday morning, have called public attention to the insecurity of life in these great places of public resort as never before. It is a serious comment upon human nature that, in the face of immense and obvious risks like these, architects and proprietors do not take every possible precaution to prevent catastrophes of this kind, since the means are evidently in their power. As it is, the slow process of the laws must enforce the remedy. Governors make proclamation, legislatures enact, local authorities enforce the statutes. By the time this tedious process is completed builders are ready with expedients to avoid the laws; and so the slaughtering goes on. The laws protecting hotel guests from the calamity of fire are much less rigorous generally than those respecting churches, halls and theaters. Why this should be so no good reason appears. The remedy will not be found until such buildings, especially in cities, are constructed throughout of fire proof material.

The excellent article in this number upon the Sabbath question in New York city indicates how deep has been the feeling on both sides. The agitation of such a question in the metropolis has started the discussion in other cities. In Chicago, ministers, meetings have taken it up with a short-lived zeal, putting forth radical arguments, but without the force of enforcement of their ideas even in their own churches. The "Chicago Sabbath Association" of which late presiding elder Willing is president, has issued through the daily press an able document, setting forth that "this is a Christian nation" from its organic documents beginning with the Mayflower compact down to the city ordinances all which recognize the Christian Sabbath and provide for the cessation of labor on that day. They quote a decision of our Illinois Supreme Court which is worth repeating: "The experience of the world has taught the necessity of setting apart one-seventh of our time for religious worship and meditation, and for complete repose from the harassing and absorbing pursuits of gain, ambition and pleasure. Even those who are not guided by the teachings of Christianity acknowledge the necessity of a rational observance of the Sabbath, as conducive in the highest degree to the temporal interests of society." So Judge Noah Davis, the Chief Justice of the New York Supreme Court says: "I am not in sympathy with any sentiment that strikes God out of the Sabbath. I believe the Sabbath is ordained by God." How noble are these sentiments, and how do they rebuke the temporizing policy of some who have been man-ordained to preach the Gospel and editors of the religious press who aim to secularize the day, strip it of its divine authority, push it from its foundation upon the Rock onto the treacherous sands of human laws or philanthropic principles, where it must soon be lost to man. These "blind guides" are ever pointing to the practice of European nations. It may help undeceive them to learn that a petition, signed by over 6000 persons has just been presented to the German Parliament asking for the enactment of a law closing all commercial and industrial establishments on the Sabbath day.

DRAW THY BOW.

Draw thy bow, but ere the arrow
Feels the string's impulsive force,
Up to Him who guides the sparrow
On her viewless, airy course,
Lift in silence a petition
That the shaft at venture sent,
May not on its random mission
Be a fruitless effort spent.

Draw thy bow in comprehension
Of the issues that may hinge;
Draw it to its utmost tension,
Till the bow and barb impinge;
For the arrow's fateful sending
May the tide of battle turn,
And a kingdom's fate be pending
On the glory it may earn.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

BY REV. J. C. K. MILLIGAN.

In a Christian land there should be no difficulty in maintaining the Sabbath; but in our country it has been losing its hold, and a conflict seems now imminent which may result unfavorably. The Sabbath question has been raised in New York by a new penal code which went into effect Dec. 1, 1882. The Sabbath clauses are the old law codified, except that violations are now punishable as misdemeanors by imprisonment as well as by fines. The law forbids al servile labors on the Sabbath, except works of necessity and mercy, and all traffic except the sale of flesh, fish and milk, before 9 A. M. At first the police, with the avowed purpose of making the law odious, enforced it with rigor and gave us a taste of Sabbath quiet which had not been enjoyed for years. Now after one month the law is so liberally interpreted, that the desecrations, though less open and noisy, are nearly as great as before; and the outlook for a quiet Sabbath is not encouraging.

There is great want of harmony among the friends of the Sabbath. Some dislike the law because of its exceptions, and others because there are not more; some are in favor of the law as it is, others wish to make the best of it as a means to arouse public sentiment and secure a better one, and still others would wait till the law is made what they want it; some are opposed to all Sabbath laws as a union of church and state, or an interference with the rights of conscience, and others are afraid of their own interests and liberties. Thus Christ is divided, and the power of his friends is weakened.

The opposition to the law is strong and united, various as are the motives. Criminals hate it because it is law; infidels because it is Christian, oppose it; the worshipers of Mammon resist it because by its violation they get wealth; pleasure-seekers fear its restraints upon holiday recreations; Romanists are alarmed at the power it gives to the Protestant Gospel; the irreligious dread its holy influences that awaken their guilty consciences and check their sensual enjoyments. The brewers and some manufacturers claim that they cannot carry on business if the Sabbath law is enforced, and are spending large sums for its repeal. The liquor dealers defy the law, carry on their nefarious traffic through side doors, and are a unit against the Sabbath. The grocers, butchers, bakers, barbers, milkmen, confectioners, apothecaries, tobacconists, etc., are, as a rule, opposed to the law; yet many would gladly have the day as a holiday if the law were enforced impartially upon all. The Jews of course are against the law, and the Christian Sabbath breakers are legion: they are lovers of ease in Zion who must have fresh bread and meat and ice cream as on other days, and to whom the Sunday barber and bootblack, the morning paper and mail, and the ride to the park or the seashore, are essential; they are business men who gain wealth by Sabbath breaking; they are preachers whose congregations claim this salve for their consciences.

But our national government is the great obstacle to a quiet observance of the Sabbath. Its Constitution is supreme law, potent in every State. Its only recognition of the Sabbath is the permission given to the President to retain a bill "ten days, Sundays excepted;" this makes it a legal non-entity, but gives no basis for a Sabbath law. To say the least such a law is extra-constitutional, and the violators always plead that it is contrary to the Constitution and therefore void. The Congress treats the Sabbath as a nullity by frequently extending Saturday's (?) session through the Sabbath. The Postal Department by oath requires postmasters and their clerks to open the offices and distribute mails on the Sabbath, and it persuades and enables the great railroad corporations by mail contracts and subsidies to desecrate the Sabbath, and everywhere to disturb its peace and destroy its sanctity. The State laws are powerless against the numberless mail, express and baggage wagons, and the shop, depot, road and train labors thus made necessary.

It is time we were aroused to the momentous interests associated with this question. The Sabbath is a human need, the law of our being; it is a human right conferred by the Creator, which cannot be taken away with impunity; it is a relief from the curse of labor, a precious boon to man from the Divine Redeemer. To the Christian it is the day of days in its hallowed memories, its spiritual privileges, and its means for promoting his present and eternal welfare; whoever thinks, or says, or does otherwise, to him it is a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable, and he will have it at any sacrifice to use for his own soul, for the salvation of others, and for the glory of his Saviour. The Sabbath is obligatory upon and a blessing to nations no less than to individuals. Jer. 17: 19, etc.; it is the condition of their prosperity or adversity, of their perpetuity or destruction. God alone is Lord of the conscience, and the state may not enforce the religious observance of the Sabbath; but itself must keep it and restrain all outward violations at the peril of the divine penalty: "will kindle a fire in your gates which shall devour your palaces, and shall not be quenched." But the Sabbath is the Lord's own day: the day of his resurrection, the day of his ascension to the throne, the day of his Spirit's descent, the day of his communion with those who seek him, the day which he specially employs with its Gospel agencies to destroy the works of the devil, and to build up his kingdom of righteousness that shall soon fill the earth. Men, and Christians and nations may keep it or fail to keep it; but Jesus will not suffer his day to perish from the earth. Soon the redeemed earth will join with heaven in singing: "This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it."

SECRECY AND TEMPERANCE.

BY REV. B. F. WORRELL.

It will be worse than useless to deny the fact that humanly speaking, the prohibitory shadow has gone back more than ten degrees on the dial of Kansas. Poor Kansas! how thou art fallen and dragged down from thy proud eminence among the sisterhood of the States. We, as citizens of this commonwealth, had gotten unto ourselves a reflexive glory, through our illustrious governor, whose pleadings in behalf of a much needed reform were echoed from far and near, with the endorsement of the good and great in other lands than our own. But now the model prohibitory State is shorn of her glory, as she sits by the cold streams of Babylon, weeping over the desolation and ruin that are awaiting the incoming of their hour. The harp, which once responded to the touch of joy and gladness, now hangs unused on the willow trees. Some of the strings are broken, whilst those which remain, tremble in the passing breeze and give utterance to a plaintive dirge in the minor key.

It is none the less a fact that truth crushed to the earth, will rise again and assert its power. Though it be trampled in the mire by unhallowed feet as hell holds jubilee over the seeming victory won, it will, at the appointed hour, come forth with new energy, and put to route the hosts of darkness, and place the diadem on the brow of Him who alone has the right to wear it. Courage then, brethren, and more especially you who have been made to suffer for the truth's sake and who have passed through the flint-mill of persecution for daring to rebuke popular sins. Courage, I say, for our final victory in this direction is only a question of time. Even now the roseate hues are illumining the East, proclaiming the hour as near at hand when the Sun of Righteousness will arise with healing in his beams.

It is still further true that every effect is produced by an adequate cause. It matters not that the cause may be at a great remove from the effect, both as regards time and place; or the two may lie side by side. Nor does it signify that the cause is unknown, or is deemed to be of doubtful efficiency. However these things may be, it still remains a fact that every effect is the result of an antecedent, known or unknown. The blow is none the less painful or real from the fact that the hand which administered it was carefully concealed, and it not unfrequently happens that we are led by a force of circumstances to look far, far away for the cause of an effect, when the agency thereto is at our elbow, staring us in the face.

And now the question arises, Why did the prohibitory shadow go back on the dial of Kansas, or in other words, Why was Governor St. John defeated? We have all heard of the bird which, when a man comes too near its nest, (which is hidden away in the grass) will pretend to be lame in wing or leg, and thereby suggest to the intruder that it can be easily caught, without the aid of fresh salt. The man makes the attempt, and every now and then almost succeeds in capturing the object of his pursuit, when lo! the bird in the full exercise of its powers, gives a tantalizing chirp, and flies away, away, and is seen no more. Thus is it when we start out to find the hidden cause to a lamented effect. Some lame bird leads us a bootless chase, and then mockingly cries, "Third term, third term," and then leaves us to solve the problem at our leisure in which "monopoly" may or may not have been an important factor. Nay verily, we will not run on a fool's errand, but on the contrary will stand still, and look carefully around us, even at our feet, if peradventure we may find the hidden nest in which was hatched the eggs from whence come the swarm of ills with which we are menaced.

Masonry as an irresponsible despotism, knows no geographical boundaries, no political issues, no moral questions outside of and beyond its own interests. It will support that measure, be it what it may, which will return the largest support to itself, and will sustain at the ballot box and elsewhere those men on whom it may lean the heaviest for support in the time of its need. Thus a necessity is imposed on a man to become a Mason before he offers himself as a candidate for any office in the State which may be worth having. Nor is that all. A Mason of a low degree must step down and out, if the position to which he aspires is coveted by a brother Mason who has climbed to a higher round of the mystical ladder.

The exception to this rule is where a man's social position or peculiar tenets makes him more available to the lodge than would be the brother who outranks him in the number of degrees taken. And then, in all cases, a man's claim on the lodge for political support ceases when he fails to give to the lodge more honor and power than will be given by some other person. We are not prepared to say how far any of these principles may apply to Governor St. John; but if he was dropped because he could serve the lodge no further, he will have no occasion to bemoan his fate as though he was the first and only man who had been so treated. Nor can he console himself with the thought of being the last.

Whether secret institutions did or did not have anything to do with turning back the wheels of reform in this State, it is certainly a matter of surprise that young men who have not formed the appetite for strong drink, would touch the accursed stuff, after their attention had been called to the terrible evils of intemperance. Men have listened to our worthy governor, as in words that burned, he spoke of the ruin to soul and body which was sure to result as a legitimate outgrowth of the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and then have done all they could to defeat his re-election, and thereby open the sluice-gates of that stream which would bear on its turbulent bosom tens of thousands of precious souls down to the yawning abyss. Gough has spoken on this subject as but few men can speak, thrilling the soul and bathing the cheeks of his auditors with tears as he only too faithfully portrayed scenes of wretched, suffering and premature death, as a result of looking on the wine when it was red. And yet with all this warning ringing in their ears, young men have left the lecture hall and gone in quest of the liquid fires of perdition, that they might experience in themselves all the horrors of an inebriate like unto those to which they had been listening. How can we account for this strange infatuation other than by saying that the devil, the old serpent, throws a spell around our young men and allures them from the paths of virtue to certain destruction.

The same thing is true in regard to the hidden power of the lodge to bewitch men and to draw them unresistingly under the dominion of the God of this world, even as a fool goeth to the correction of the stocks or an ox to the slaughter. So that we are not astonished when told that some persons after listening to our expositions of the masterpiece of fraud and deception, join the lodge in order that they may learn for themselves what are the hidden depths of iniquity as developed in the lodge.

The social element of the lodge is unquestionably a fruitful source of supplying the wasting ranks of the drunkard's army. When the brethren of the mystic tie have wearied themselves in working on the spiritual temple which each for himself is building up in his heart, it is such a privilege to be called from labor to refreshment where the cup from which they drank contains something stronger than pure, cold water, and where the foolish word spoken and the silly act performed is understood to be sub rosa. Ah! how many a mother has sat lonely and sad keeping virgil as the hours of the night slowly wear away, ever and anon singing, "Where is my boy to-night?" little dreaming that he is in the banqueting hall of the lodge, where wit and wine freely flow—where utterances of doubtful propriety fall from unsanctified lips, and where no wife, mother or sister is present to shame into silence the unseemly jest or word of double meaning. Sing, patient mother, the gong has tolled out the hour of low twelve, and answers your heart breaking question, as to the whereabouts of your boy. He is dead—yes, henceforth dead to you, as he personates Hiram Abiff lying in his festering grave, as you weep you know not why.

Olathe, Kansas.

WOMEN AND SECRETISM.

PAPER READ AT THE KANSAS STATE CONVENTION BY MRS. J. S. COLLINS.

Sisters, we are or should be interested in this great moral question. On its solution depends the destiny of untold numbers of the human family. Much depends on how we act our part in this great drama of life. In the struggle for liberty in this country, woman as well as man gave her money and influence in freeing the land from British rule. History points to woman as doing her part in securing republican institutions in the new world. And so on down to the present, women have labored side by side with men in advocacy of those questions which affect the well being of society. Especially was this true in the anti-slavery struggle, women braved the perils of war to care for the sick and dying. They inked their pens in advancing the cause of liberty, and gave character to those brave men whose lives were sacrificed on freedom's altars. None suffered more than they in securing the precious boon which posterity to-day enjoys.

In the midst of all they have to lament evils of which they little dreamed coming in like a mighty flood; we mean intemperance and secretism. These things are threatening the home, the church and the state. A few years since women felt constrained to make a public protest against intemperance, which was bringing sorrow and misery to so many homes. This crusade so mysterious at first, has opened blind eyes, and women all over the land are coming to the light, and will soon be free as God makes his people free. In trying to save the youth of the land from intemperance, they found an enemy of whose insidious workings we have heard so much to-day. They have seen with some, the Christless lodge more venerated than the church, and women carefully excluded from its proceedings. They see sons whom they have reared taught the great secrets which mothers are not permitted to know. And wherever they go, to the uttermost bounds of civilization, this moloch is set up which they worship. Laws which are to be a terror to evil doers, are set aside to screen those who belong to the lodge.

Every interest, political and social, is in jeopardy through the influence of this anti-republican institution. Women have been watching with fear and trembling, hardly daring to lift their voices, however feebly, against its approach. This monster invades the sanctity of the home, gradually alienating those whom God has joined together. Fortunes are squandered by husbands and sons in the lodge, and wives and mothers suffer that money may be put into the coffers to keep up some grand worthy patriarch's family, and all in the name of charity. Women are compelled to care for their own sick and dying children, that husbands may attend lodge and have a good time. Husbands and sons have learned to love the cup that inebriates through the banquets given by the lodge, while to outsiders they profess to be the friends of sobriety.

We rejoice in the advanced public sentiment on this subject. Throughout the land are thousands of women watching with prayerful interest every step we take in exposing this evil which is sapping the very foundation of society and threatening the body politic. Women in the temperance work are baffled on every hand through men sworn to one another and thus evading the laws. Is it surprising that women have grown suspicious of that of which every woman is kept in ignorance? Shall women not be permitted to lift a warning voice in this matter? Shall not those belonging to the secret temperance organization, be enabled to break off from these things, believing they give encouragement to the enemy that we are trying to put down.

Let all branches of workers for humanity come to the light and go forth as openly to the world as the crusade. Then God will smile more and more on our efforts and we will have victory. Let women enter their protests against the lodge

1. Because it imposes a sinful oath to maintain—they know not what.
2. Because the lodge, by interfering with the nearest relations of life, separates those whom God hath joined together.
3. Because the lodge is more venerated than the church.
4. Because the lodge prevents the settlement of the question of temperance.
5. The difficulty of enforcing law when men are sworn to protect one another.

Here is a new idea. It was given to us, and as freely as we have received, so we give. Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith gives a "hobby party" at intervals, in her elegant Germantown house. She gathers in a parlor full of intelligent people, and invites representative "Hobbyists" to be present and show cause why their favorite equine should take the first prize. Recently, General Armstrong of Hampton, Va., Joshua L. Bailey of Philadelphia, the coffee-house founder, Dr. Rhodes the Indian's friend, Prof. Cope the geologist, and Frances E. Willard the Home Protectionist, were among the equestrians of this unique exhibition. The idea is commended, wherever practicable, as a more rational and satisfactory social feature than the "regulation" stand up "party" of the season.—Signal.

All that can possibly be expected from the working of any law is an improvement in the condition of human society. The man who expects perfection from any piece of legislation is usually a lunatic. The man who alleges as a serious objection to a law that it will not produce perfection, ought also to be regarded as mentally unsound, and some day will be. One of the express objects of the United States Constitution was "to establish justice." That it has not established justice is, however, no argument against its value.—The Nation.

MANY a true heart that would have come back like a dove to the ark, after its first transgression, has been frightened beyond recall by the angry look and menace, the taunt, the savage charity, of an unforgiving spirit.

REFORM STORY.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LITTLE PEOPLE," "A SUNNY LIFE," ETC.

CHAPTER XXXV. (Continued.)—VOX POPULI, VOX DEI.

"These men are acting on their own responsibility and not in accordance with their obligations as Masons. While I utterly denounce the conduct of the sheriff as a most base betrayal of his official duty, I appeal to you, fellow townsmen and citizens, to come to the aid of the law, and allow no deed of violence to be committed which will only obstruct its course. Justice shall be done. I ask your help in ferreting out the murderer, and when he is found rest assured that no lodge obligation, real or fancied, shall screen him from the punishment he deserves."

The clear ringing voice penetrated to the farthest edge of the crowd. The speaker himself stood in fair view, his dark eyes glowing like coals of fire under the full massive brow, his pale face paler by contrast. Everybody knew him—Anson Lovejoy, Master of the lodge.

There is a mighty force in simple sincerity. Not a man in that excited throng abhorred more intensely the crime which had been committed than did he, or felt a more burning desire to see insulted law avenged in the speedy arrest of the criminal. And when he threw the odium of all this obstructing of justice on the shoulders of individual Masons instead of the lodge itself, there were enough who believed him in the face of their own previous convictions, not to say the evidence of their own senses, to make a perceptible difference in the attitude of the crowd. A more calm and reasonable spirit was succeeding the tumultuous excitement which had threatened at one time to end in mob violence. The advocates of lynch law were silent, and under the reaction thus made the throng slowly and by degrees dispersed.

A few hours later I was at home attending to some duty about the farm when Anson Lovejoy came hurriedly up, his face still pale but settled into those grave, determined lines which speak the man whose whole soul is roused to meet a crisis.

"Mr. Severns, I want the loan of your fastest horse. I have just received news that Jervish has left his hiding place where he has been secreted all this time, and hired a man by the name of Leach to take him across the river. This Leach is a poor worthless fellow who never has any money and is therefore easily bribed."

"What will Masons think of your action in this matter?" I said as I threw the halter over the neck of the beautiful roan, acknowledged one of the fastest steeds in the neighborhood, and led him out. Depend upon it, your part in to-day's affair will never be overlooked or forgiven by the lodge."

"I care not," he answered, "I am acting up to my Masonic obligations as I understand them. God do so to me and more also if I knowingly leave a single stone unturned that is hindering the way of justice."

He spoke with solemn, almost fierce earnestness—then after an instant's silence added in his usual tone, "While you are getting the horse ready I will speak with Mrs. Severns a moment," and so saying he stepped quickly across to the open side door where he had always until now met with the ready admittance accorded to a friend and neighbor.

What he was going to say to Rachel I know not, for he was given no chance to say it; but I think a desire to have her God speed in the task to which he had set himself prompted the action.

Rachel met him just as he was entering, with stern face and forbidding gesture. She had not heard his conversation with me or very likely would not have addressed him exactly as she did.

"Not a step farther. No murderer or companion of murderers crosses my threshold."

"Mrs. Severns!" he exclaimed, startled, astonished.

"I mean what I say," she answered firmly. "You uphold this dark, unclean system of the lodge and thus make yourself a partaker in the innocent blood it has shed. Go!"

The reader must excuse Rachel, unjust as she was; for her very soul was boiling within her, and this passionate outburst was due to a deeper cause than the common feeling of indignation which possessed the community at large. In divine faith that she might yet redeem to virtue and happiness the erring soul which had mistaken a cold, deceiving mirage for the waters of affection, and for whom henceforth society would have no use but to cast out and trample under foot, she had planned and labored as only a Christian woman can. And this was the terrible ending! The prey for which she had wrestled with Satan had been basely, cruelly torn out of her hand, and she felt something of the fury of the bereaved lioness when she confronted Anson Lovejoy.

"I assure you, Mrs. Severns;" he began again, and again she interrupted him, though this time her voice was a trifle softer, her manner a shade gentler.

"I accuse you of nothing but of being allied to such a system. And that is enough. Shall a man take fire in his bosom and not be burned? No, Mr. Lovejoy, no adhering Mason from henceforth receives a welcome under my roof."

And she turned from him and walked away, leaving the victim of this severe castigation to recover from it as well as he could. And certainly for a moment Anson Lovejoy looked rather dejected. He was without domestic ties, his wife having died in the first year of their marriage; and I well understood, or thought I did, how this sudden closing against him of a home where he had always been a welcome guest, dropping in at any time when his business permitted, thus seeming to find some faint, shadowy compensation for his own buried joys, would naturally affect him.

But he quickly recovered himself, and going to where the horse now stood in readiness leaped into the saddle. As he did so I took occasion to say—

"Rachel has a sharp tongue, but her heart is all right. Some time she will see that she has done you injustice."

"I hope so, Mr. Severns," he answered. "But"—and he spoke with the grave, slow emphasis of one recording a vow—"if Masonry is what from this day's work I have reason to fear it is, and I remain connected with it an hour longer than I can help, I shall merit the severest denunciations she has heaped upon me."

And he rode swiftly away to join the pursuing party which had halted at an appointed place of meeting, and were now discussing which of two different roads the fugitive had probably taken. A few outsiders had gathered about, among them the sheriff, who seemed to take an extraordinary interest in the settling of this question considering his previous inactivity.

"I tell you, Lovejoy, if you take the direction of Quipaw creek, you'll miss it," he said excitedly. "Jervish has gone more south."

"My men are on the right track;" returned Lovejoy composedly, in whose mind the last lingering doubt whether he was really taking the route Jervish had gone was now dispelled, by the sheriff's evident anxiety to have him go the opposite way.

"But I tell you," repeated the sheriff in still more excited tones; "a man told me not more than an hour ago that he had met him and Leach on the road."

This piece of information made some of the party waver but had no effect on their staunch leader who issued his command to set off at once in the direction of Quipaw creek, at which the sheriff called to his aid considerable profanity, not necessary to repeat, in confirmation of what he had said, provoking from one of the number as they rode away, this satirical speech:

"Set the fox to guard the hen coop, will ye? When I do that I'll take advice from a Mason. If you knew all this about Jervish an hour ago, why wan't you off after him instead of loafing about with the coroner's warrant lying idle in your pocket?"

And the discomforted sheriff, who had certainly striven heroically to fulfil his Masonic obligations, retired amid more hooting and jeering than was quite pleasant.

Swiftly, steadily the pursuers pressed on and before long came in sight of a common farm wagon apparently loaded with meal bags. The driver of the wagon was quickly recognized by several of the party to whom he was well known, as the man who had undertaken to aid Jervish in his flight. But Leach sat alone on the seat, driving. Where was his companion?

An order from Lovejoy to search the wagon soon settled this question. The vehicle was found to be so arranged by sticks laid across—the seeming meal bags which were in reality stuffed with hay placed on these and high enough from the floor of the wagon to make a hiding place for the miserable Jervish, who was now ignominiously dragged therefrom, and Colonel Montfort's friend, the elegant man of society spent that night in the county jail to the great satisfaction of all worthy citizens of Granby, with whom now that the chief criminal was caught the Anti-masonic excitement subsided as rapidly as it rose.

THE mystery of the Gospel, as distinguished from the Law, consists in changing the order of two words. One says, "Do and live;" the other says, "Live and do."—Thos. Adam.

THE SERMON.

DANGERS WHICH THREATEN OUR NATION.

THANKSGIVING SERMON, PREACHED BY REV. C. N. HOBART AT THE UNION SERVICE IN GALENA ST. M. E. CHURCH, AURORA, ILL.

He hath not dealt so with any nation.—Ps. 147: 20.

These words seem hardly more appropriate to Israel than to our own nation. Israel enjoyed God's peculiar favor—yet Israel fell. We have esteemed ourselves especially favored of God—shall we stand? A government of the people, by the people and for the people is still an experiment.

As upon no other nation of earth are the eyes of the world resting npon this United States. Eagerly are the millions of the Old World scanning us, the majority with hope and prayer for the sucecssful issue of our experiment, bnt not a few with outspoken propheey of the coming failure of our governmental life. These prophets of ruin say, and trnly we admit, that a single century's existence is not sufficient to demonstrate the stability of a nation, especially if dnring that time she has well nigh perished from a civil war paralleled by few in the history of civilization. But even that strnggle holds augury of good, for the successfnl issue of that war would indicate a strength that bears at least large promise of abiding permanence. And yet in spite of onr hope and faith in the stability of our nation there are dangers that threaten us which cannot but be apparent to every thoughtful and observant man. To know these dangers and to guard against them is the part of wisdom. A sound statesmanship is ever on the alert against those forces which threaten injury to public prosperity, and especially is it called for in a country governed as is ours. Never was trner sentence uttered than this: "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

While I would not be thought an alarmist, holding faith as I do in the permanence and increasing grandeur of our nation, yet it cannot be inopportune at this time to point out, what in some cases may be bnt germs of danger, but which in other cases even now seriously threaten the stability and prosperity of our land. Were all I name only incipient germs of danger, it were wiser and safer to destroy them before they at all develop or bear their bitter fruit. But they are not all thus incipient. Some of them even now have developed dangerous strength, and already are they ruling iron-handed in the pnblic mart; seriously tampering with State and National legislation; throttling Justice in her sacred halls; tnrning the streams of public prosperity from their legitimate channels to float the barges and drive the mills of personal avarice and greed. And yet thongh these things be true we will not lose hope. I have faith in our people, that seeing these evils they will rise for their destruction; moreover, I have faith in God, that he has purposes of good toward us, and that he means to use this nation for the uplifting of the world.

It will be possible in the brief time we spend together this morning to examine but few of the dangers which threaten us, and these with little of that thoroughness which their importance demands. We shall confine ourselves to those evils which of late have by no means occupied the pnblic attention as has been deserved, passing by not a few against which it were well that we be on our guard.

This Christian assembly will not be snrprised that I call attention first of all to an evil the danger of which is too little felt and especially in its relation to our national permanence. It is—

INFIDELITY.

He has read to little purpose who has failed to learn that infidelity has been the precursor of most serious disaster if not nltimate ruin in every land where the Scriptures have been known. Loyalty to God is the fnndamental pre-requisite to the permanence of a true national life. It is righteousness, and that only, which really exalteth a nation. The Jews were a prosperous people so long as they believed and obeyed God, but infidelity wrought their ruin and scattered them like chaff among the nations of the earth. It is true this danger from infidelity we share in common with other lands, but with our form of government the danger becomes peculiarly threatening.

With us the people is sovereign, and none will govern well who has no sense of responsibility to a higher power. We need but look at the history of France in the days when the people ruled to see to what complete anarchy an infidel nation can come in its attempts at self-government.

Voltaire is a name that has come to be almost synonymous with infidelity, and "Voltaire," says the historian, "more than any other man, was the father of the French Revolution." How the pages of the past are blotted with many a fearful record, but scarch as you will you can find no page stained with so many deeds both dark and horrible as that of infidel France from 1787 to 1795. The scene during a portion of this time is well described as a "Reign of Terror." Violence was triumphant and Death was busy at his awful work. The great, the mean; the king, the slave; hoary age and bright-eyed youth; crime-stained manhood and children innocent of thought of wrong; all mingled their blood in one comuon stream whose perpetnal fonntain was the murderous guillotine. The people were on fire with a frenzy. Marat, dwarf of body and devil of soul, was demanding the blood of 270,000 citizens of France. Carlyle describes one scene as follows: "Carrier has got to Nantes; his gnillotine goes always. Little children are guillotined and aged men. Swift as the machine is it will not serve; the headsman and all his valets sink, worn down with work." Bring on the soldiers then and fire by platoons, the work is speedier done so, and easier—for the executioners!

And what is the rallying cry of this "Reign of Terror?" "Republic, one and indivisible; Liberty, Eqnality, Fraternity, or death." On all the house-walls you will find the motto, for no patriot will be behind another. "O Liberty! Liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name! In their madness against everything Christian they change the calendar, making the 22nd of Sept., 1792, the first day of year 1 of the Republic. Over the entrance of their cemeteries they place the inscription, "Here is Eternal Sleep." The Goddess of Reason is set up in their temples and atheism is professed.

O, infidel Voltaire! "father of the Revolntion" with its "Reign of Terror" and its delnge of death, look back upon the fair fields of France strined with the blood of thousands of her children, shed in the name of Liberty, and know that this is the legitimate fruitage of the lessons which you tanght her while you lived!

Have we reason to hope that infidelity will bear better frnitage today and in the land we love? "Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles?" Pittsburg and Chicago in 1877 gave hint of what might be should the atheistic principles of the mass af foreigners obtain a solid foothold here. A mob of infidel commnnists crying "Bread or Blood," in the streets of Chicago will not be so easily quelled twenty years henee as it was that day. It is an admitted fact that the great mass of the Pittsburg and Chicago rioters who filled those cities with terror on those days was made up of foreigners and Freethinkers. They are pouring into our country by the tens of thousands every year; their principles are revolntionary and subversive of all good government; we mnst Christianize them or they will ruin us.*

I do not overrate the danger, and Christians who have the interests of onr land at heart may well use their utmost effort to counteract this growing evil. If it is asked if this be the necessary result of infidelity? We reply, the facts seem nnmistakably to indicate it. The almost universal result of a disbelief in the authority of the Bible is to greatly weaken if not destroy the sense of personal responsibility. By far the great majority of the capital crimes and suicides of our country, aside perhaps from those committed under the influence of liquor, will be fonnd to have been perpetrated by rejecters of the authority of God's word; while in a multitude of cases in which alcohol has been nominally the cause of crime, careful investigation would disclose that liqnor has been used to nerve to an act already decided upon and as ground of defense therefor. Crime is the legitimate offspring of infidelity, and the career of Frank Rande, the notorious outlaw and murderer who made his boast that he was a disciple of Ingersoll, is by no means illegitimate fruitage of his master's teaching.

I name another source of danger,

MONOPOLY.

No nation can be truly prosperous with its wealth in the hands of the few. The end of government is the welfare of the people, not of the few at the expense of the many, but of all just so far as possible. Many things tend to the unequal distribution of property, as lack of thrift, indolence, misfortnne, and we need perhaps never look for its perfectly equal distribution, but nothing more certainly tends to centralize wealth than monopoly. The factors, however, which tend to make the rich richer and the poor poorer are enough without the aid of this. Time was when the world believed that the many were made to serve the few, but that day has passed and today's thought is that "all men are created equal; aud that life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness are inalienable rights of mankind. Socialism is but an improper protest against the evil of which we now speak. It will always be found where monopolies are strong. One of the great problems with which the world is wrestling to day is the proper relation of capital and labor, but never will it find practical solution till the rich give up the idea that it is their privilege to amass still greater fortuue at the expense of the poor. The Carpenter of Nazareth enunciated a principle which shall ultimately prove the death blow of this evil when he said, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." That seutence has in it the promise of large good to the people of the earth.

Notice a few facts with regard to monopolies. The American Screw Company was such a monopoly as enabled it to pay its secretary a salary of $30,000.00 per year. Recently a trunk railway line inaugurated a fierce railroad war on the alleged ground that a neighboring road had invaded its territory, thus indicating a desire at least on the part of three railway monopolies to parcel out the public domain for private ends, as was Europe in the old feudal days. The receipts of competing lines are pooled that the public may the more effectually be bled. A nonpartizan journal of Philadelphia in speaking of the Pennsylvania railway says: "A powerfnl corporation, controlled by such a policy as this, naturally seeks to control legislative bodies of the State that might get in its way. . . . . So it has become a part of the current duty of this railway management to manage legislation also, and while it is only at intervals that a purchased legislator names his price and deposits his purchase money in the pnblic treasury, this open step has just now been taken at Trenton, and in such a manner as almost to establish a regular market-rate, ... a price for legislators which might be quoted on the stock exchange." I may say right here for the benefit of the curious that the price per head which the Pennsylvania Co. saw fit to pay for New Jersey legislators was $500. O friends, is it possible that we fall lower, when our representatives not only sell themselves to monopolies, but allow their purchasers to name the price!

The completest monopoly in the United States is the Standard Oil Co., which was organized in 1868, with a capital of $1,000,000. "In 1880 in twelve years only," —I quote from Judge Doolittle, "it divided, in profits, over $10,000,000, and increased its capital from one to twenty-five millions. It now holds an absolute monopoly of one of the fonr great staples of export. To enable it to grasp such vast sums, and to break down all its competitors the four trunk-line railways from West to East paid back to it in rebates on transportation $10,151,218.00. What those four railway kings did for this corporation they can do for another, and give to it a monopoly of some other great staple. . . . . These confederated railroads not only tax the commerce of the people (all it will bear) to enrich themselves but (as has already been mentioned) spend large sums to control elections and to influence legislation. In 1868, one railway alone spent more than $1,000,000 for that pnrpose. . . . They not only seek to control elections and judicial appointments but to control improperly judicial decisions. A man of standing before the Committee of Commerce at Washington, in Jannary, 1880, said: "He heard the counsel of one great railway in the Supreme Conrt of one of the old thirteen States threaten that Court with the displeasure of his clients if it decided against them."

Said a late Secretary of the Treasury: "There are in this country four men who, in the matter of taxation, possess and frequently exereise power which neither Congress nor any State Legislature would dare expect—powers which if exercised in Great Britain, would shake the throne to its very foundation. These men may at any time, and for any reason satisfactory to themselves, by a stroke of the pen, reduce the value of property in the United States by hundreds of millions. They may, at their own will and pleasure, disarrange and embarrass bnsiness, depress one city, or locality, and build up another; enrich one individual and rnin his competitors."

Friends, one great danger that threatens ns today is monopoly; we must break the chains with which it is binding us, or see our eonntry ere long in the throes of revolntion.

I name one other danger:

SECRETISM.

In its possibilities for evil no danger conld be named that would eqnal this. By its very nature and foundation principles it does its work in the dark. This one fact is presumptive evidence against it. It was the world's one perfect Man, whose testimony respecting himself was, "in secret have I said nothing," who declared that "men loved darkness rather than light becanse their deeds were evil."

Better than in any other way can the evils and dangers of secretism be set forth by bringing before you a few facts which bear upon the snbject.

1. Ku-kluxism. Nonc of us have forgotten the terrorism which reigned in the South a few years ago through the raiding of the Ku klux-klan. Judge Tourgee has given us a vivid picture of the workings of the "secret empire" in his very readable book, "A Fool's Errand." Banks of masked men raiding the country at midnight committing deeds of cruelty and atrocity worthy of fiends; cold-blooded murders of negroes and whites at the hands of masked midnight assassins—the picture lit np by the lurid glare of the blazing dwellings of the unhappy victims—all this makes a page of history the full horror of which only the judgment day can reveal. If you want sickening detail and unquestioned fact read Mrs. Chisholm's statement, or "The Invisible Empire," a reprint of "A Fool's Errand" with jnstificatory documents. The impossibility to secnre justice and the conviction of criminals in a commnnity where secretism was thus regnant is only too apparent. We had thought that bands capable of such atrocities must be made up of the offscouring of the earth. What then is our surprise to find these bands comprising the very best citizens of the South; members of legislatures, judges, officers of the law, justices, sheriffs, and private citizens, bound together by oaths of secrecy to defeat the ends of government and secure their personal ends at any cost.

I need but name Jesuitism and Nihilism to call to your minds other phases of secretism which have seriously threatened national life. But I should be doing injnstice both to my audience and my theme did I neglect to speak of an institution of power and influence in our land and hence of peculiar danger to our national life. I allude to

2. Masonry. I am aware that I now touch upon a theme proscribed; for not more earnestly in the old anti-slavery days did the "Peculiar Institution" demand "to be let alone" than does Masonry to-day. Yet if it be what is claimed by its adherents and defenders, talk will not harrass it, while if it be what we have too much reason to believe, no Christian pulpit nor true citizen should be silent.

Time will not permit me to-day to say all that I wish upon this subject. I will mention, however, a few reasons why I believe Masonry an especially dangerous power in our land.

(a) Its past history,—darkened with crime.

In 1762 there was published in England a book called "Jachin and Boaz." It was an expose of Masonry. Soon after its publication its author was found murdered on the streets of London, his throat cut from ear to ear. The penalty in the Entered Apprentic's oath reads as follows: "Binding myself under no less penalty than to have my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots, my body buried in the rough sand of the sea at low-water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours."

In the year 1826 William Morgan, a citizen of Batavia, N. Y., was kidnapped from his home by Masons, concealed for a time in the magazine of Fort Niagara and at last drowned in the Niagara River by Masons detailed for the purpose. Masons denied these facts at the time and deny them now; but any one who will take the trouble to examine the evidence, which is easily obtained, need not be deceived. The details of Morgan's abduction and murder are tragic and heart-sickening in the extreme.

*Read the revolutionary words of Herr Johann Most uttered boldly in Chicago since this sermon was delivered.

Such was the popular excitement created by the murder that many thought that Masonry had received its death blow. Thousands of Masons renounced the institution and many lodges fell into decay.

In 1833 a petition, signed by about fourteen hundred citizens of the State of Connecticut, containing charges against Masonry such as are made by Anti-masons to-day, was presented to their Legislature. An investigation was ordered and no evidence received exeept such as would be admissible in a court of law.

The charges made in the petition were sustained and by the investigating committee pronounced true.

(b) Masonry has a tendency to defeat the ends of justice.

When Morgan was murdered, so thoroughly did Masonry hold sway that it was impossible to secure the conviction of those implicated in the crime. In 1851 Samuel L. Keith, a Mason, was charged with the murder of Ellen Slade. He was guilty. Masons sought to help him to escape. This their oaths, if they were Royal Arch Masons, required them to do. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was at the time Worshipful Master of the Belvidere lodge, No. 60, and did what he could to bring Keith to justice. For so doing he was charged with unMasonic conduct and summoned before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. His defence was made in writing and is an interesting and instructive document. His experience in this case led him to renounce Masonry. In his letter to the Grand Lodge he writes as follows:

"I find myself associated, as a Mason, with drunkards, blackguards, loafers, gamblers, whoremasters, and murderers.... Disgusted and ashamed of such associations, two years ago I applied for a demit, which was granted."

And again,

"Brother Hurlbert then and there held and presented to the lodge, views of the duties and obligations of Masons to each other inculcating principles at variance with individual rights, derogatory to the principles of morality, in violation of the laws of the land, and in derogation of the order and well being of society; and calculated to jeopardize the rights, property, liberty, character and lives of those who are not of the fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons—views that compelled me at the time to make Stephen A. Hurlbut and Simon Bassett, the two most dangerous men to society that it had ever been my misfortune to meet with; and their subsequent conduct has fully justified those fears; and, what is worse I assure you, M. W., and brethren, I have since met with many others holding the same dangerous views."

(c) Masons are sworn to persecute.

The oath of the Thrice Illustrious Order of the Cross reads as follows:

"You further swear, that, should you know another to violate any essential points of this obligation, you will use your most decided endeavors, by the blessing of God, to bring such person to the strictest and most condign punishment agreeable to the rules and usages of our ancient fraternity; and this by pointing him out to the world as an unworthy vagabond; by opposing his interest, by deranging his business,....during his whole natural life. (Bernard's "Light on Masonry," p. 199, Seventh Ed.)

Is this according to Christ's teachings? Yet Masonry claims to have nothing contrary to the spirit of Christianity!

(d) Masonry has a tendency to dull the moral sense.

This is the natural effect of the oaths that are taken. Listen to an extract from the Royal Arch oath: "Furthermore do I promise and swear, that a companion Royal Arch Mason's secrets....shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as his own, murder and treason not excepted." In some chapters this is administered: "All the secrets of a companion without exception. "Does not the taking of such an oath indicate a conscience terribly blunted!

I find the following in the Newark correspondence of the Plano News:

"Rev. J. G. Campbell told me about two weeks ago that it was the right and privilege of a Freemason to evade, equivocate, or in some way mislead when questioned by outsiders as to his Masonic membership, because it may not be pleasant for him, among enemies, to acknowledge his real position. If we deny to an outsider the fact of our being a Mason we simply mean we are not a Mason to him."

Now when a Masonic minister of the Gospel can boldly avow such principles am I not right in affirming that Masonry has a tendency to dull the moral sense?

* * * * * * * *

But it may be asked if Masonry is so powerful for evil why do we not see more of its evil effects? We reply: For the very reason that its ends are accomplished silently. A Mason is charged with crime—the Masonic sheriff simply fails to secure his arrest or allows him to escape; the Masonic judge aids him covertly; the Masonic jury finds him not guilty, or the Masonic juror fails to agree. It is all done quietly; no stir, no bustle; we deplore the failure of justice and go our way helpless. But I must close. All will admit that Masonry holds large possibilities of evil. Does any one doubt that the unscrupulous will use these possibilities for their selfish ends?

Infidelity, monopoly, secretism,—three great dangers to our nation. We must destroy them or they will ruin us.

May God help the right! Amen.

—The whole Lutheran Church in America has reason to mourn, for her leading theologian has been taken from her. Dr. Charles Porterfield Krauth, Vice President of the University of Pennsylvania and Professor in the Lutheran Theological Seminary in Philadelphia, is no more. He died on the afternoon of Tuesday, January, 2nd, at the age of fifty-nine. His health had been impaired for years, but only in the last weeks did his friends become seriously alarmed. In him was a combination of real genius, and indefatigable industry seldom found. The loss is doubly hard at present, as the Lutheran Church was anxiously waiting from his pen a new life of Luther.

BETTER DROP THE SUBJECT.

WORCESTER, MASS., Jan. 9th, 1883.

I cannot do better service than to copy an extract from a letter just received from Deacon Increase Leadbetter. He says:

I have read the fable that when the mountain was going to bring forth and as the multitude were gathered to see something magnificent, a mouse came creeping forth. The Congregationalist of Dec. 6th, 1882, brings forth the following: "It is hardly worth while to discuss, after so long an interval, whether the Masons killed Morgan or not. The late Mr. Thurlow Weed thought they did, but Major Ben Perley Poore thinks the Anti-masons supported Morgan in Smyrna until he died. Better drop the subject."

There seems to be something out of joint somewhere that Mr. Thurlow Weed and Major Ben Perley Poore should disagree, but if we can't understand it we had better drop the subject. When earth shall disclose her blood and no more cover her slain, these villifiers of the martyr Morgan will wish they had dropped the subject before the blood-stains had fastened on their souls, unless they apply the blood of Jesus Christ to wash away their guilt.

It is one of the strange things that such a paper as the Congregationalist should dismiss a matter of such general interest with a fling when secular and religious papers everywhere are giving their readers the benefit of a fair discussion. Has the close proximity of the great Masonic temple of Boston anything to do with this deliverance?

The Odd-fellows who was recently converted in one of our meetings has been enabled to see in a measure the contrast between a lodge and a prayer-meeting. He tells me the lodge of which he was a member was for the most part orderly in deportment, but the "boys" came together "to have fun, and they generally have it." He says he has attended some lodges where the members would spend the evening in the ante-room, smoking, telling vulgar stories, and otherwise displaying their coarse manners.

Another Odd-fellow, who has his eyes partially opened to the evils of the order and who is a regular attendant at one of our services, expresses great surprise at the selection made by our new mayor for city marshall. He claims that the man is an Odd-fellow and perhaps also a Mason. He says the mayor must know that those who put him up for office are opposed to secret societies and this movement looks strange. In answer to my inquiry this man said that of course an officer would favor saloon-keepers who were members of the same order with himself.

I was much impressed by this testimony. If it be true that the new marshall is an adhering secretist, Mr. Hildreth has made a mistake. It is a mistake which unsuspecting men are easily led into, for they do not suspect the real animus of the lodges, nor do they realize the snare which a secret oath is to a man in the execution of civil duties. This Odd-fellow is clear-headed enough to see the blunder. I hope he is mistaken and that the results will be better than he predicts.

A gentleman who is chiefly instrumental in opening the way for me to preach in Washburn Hall said to me to-day, "you cannot realize the pressure that is brought to bear upon us against you. Secret society men go directly to the members of our church and endeavor to frighten them, and set them against you."

The same fact was brought to my notice in another way by a young man who detailed to me a conversation with a secret society man. It is plainly the purpose of the lodge to hedge my way if possible. The tactics employed have been disclosed to me recently and they would be amusing if they were not too serious.

In a certain place there are six or eight women whose husbands are Masons or Odd-fellows. They have not been accustomed to go to church or take any interest in religious matters, but just now they are seized with a wonderfully pious spasm. They are poor persecuted creatures, hungering and thirsting for the gospel, but unable to attend church because an Anti-mason preaches. If anybody else preached they would attend church and pay liberally. Of course they don't wish to dictate to the church but they feel bad about it!

While this mournful talk is being poured into the ears of confiding wives, another set of Masons are busy making up stories about the awful things I have said about the Masons—language that I should be shocked to use, however just it might be.

There is one great consolation about the matter. There are sensible people who can see through the game. I was yesterday drawn into conversation with a group among whom was one Odd-fellow and an Odd-fellow's wife. The Odd-fellow confirmed the information I gave them about the order, while the lady whose husband was an Odd-fellow, after making many inquiries, confessed that she did not want her husband to have any more to do with them.

E. D. BAILEY.

A card from Elder Barlow with the characteristic ring informs us that he still speaks for the truth.

One lodge of Odd-fellows in Worcester has accumulated $30,000 in its treasury, and another $16,000.

A correspondent inquires if Senator Hoar is a Mason. According to the best information we can get he is not. The present indications point to his defeat in his candidacy for re election, although some predict his return to the Senate.

Gov. Benj. F. Butler's inaugural message was a most racy document, full of new projects, some good, some bad. His arraignment of State affairs is certainly forcible if not altogether accurate.

Zephemiah Graves writes for a new supply of reform material, enclosing the money. He has traveled a considerable distance with his old horse, "Mah-hah bone." His cable tow is, he says, twenty miles long. In one church where tracts were placed in the pews an old deacon stood up till he had read a four-page tract.

OBITUARY.

MR. ISAAC PRESTON was born December 17, 1792, and at the time of his death was 90 years and 18 days old. His life has been a long one, far beyond the ordinary. He has far outlived his generation; probably no one living remembers him as a boy, and very few as a young man; a large majority of his living acquaintances knew him only as an old man. He was a man of uncommon physical energy and endurance, and though small of stature and spare of flesh, he was a man of giant constitution, indomitable will, and an energy that surmounted all obstacles and overcome all barriers. In his long life he has safely passed through dangers and accidents that would have killed any ordinary man. Even during the last year of his life when he was feeble and his health far from good, his friends hearing that he was sick in bed have gone to see him and have met him on his way to the post-office; and such was his energy that it was a common saying among his friends that Father Preston would probably die upon the street.

He was also a man of far more than ordinary intellect; indeed his physical activity was due not to a strong body, but to a strong mind. His judgment was sound, his conscientiousness large and his courage invincible; his devotion to what he considered his duty and the right was such that no influence could turn him to the right hand nor to the left. He had in him the stuff that martyrs are made of, and would have laid down his life for the truth. He was a man of positive convictions, and upon all questions had a mind of his own. His conscientiousness prompted him to take an extreme view upon all questions of reform, and his courage and devotion to what he felt to be the truth led him to maintain his opinions even at times with a show of severity in the face of the most serious opposition. He had a righteous hatred of oppression and was an honest foe to every form of vice. He was what is called an original Abolitionist, and was one of the first to enroll himself among the advocates of temperance. He lived in Western New York at the time of the Morgan abduction, and from that hour was a strong Anti-mason, and during the best part of his life he battled against all forms of secret societies. Even his opponents will bear witness, to their belief in his honesty, and that his views were the result of his conscientious convictions of duty.

Father Preston was married at the age of 23 to a young lady of rare attainments of heart and of mind. They lived together as husband and wife for 67 years; she by her gentle firmness exerting an influence over him that was beautiful to see. Never was there a more devoted husband, never was there a truer or more lovely wife. He almost idolized her, and when a year ago the Lord called her home, it seemed to break all the ties that bound him to the earth, and from that hour his decline was rapid.

At the age of 35 he identified himself with the church of Christ, and was an active, earnest and consistent member of the church until his death. On his removing from New York to Illinois he presented his letter with his wife's and daughter's to the church in Lockport, Nov. 28, 1839. In the spring of the following year he removed, taking his letter with him, and returning again united with us in 1865, since which time he has resided in our midst. His love for God and the church was sincere; his trust in Christ as his Saviour was firm and undoubted; and he rests now in peace. What a comfort to his dear ones; what a joy to those who sorrow, sorrow not as those who have no hope but because they will miss the dear one.

CORRESPONDENCE.

UNDENOMINATIONAL.

This word is not my own, but taken from the heading of an article in the Cynosure of Dec. 28th, by John G. Fee. The word is not found in Webster's "Unabridged," nor Worcester's "Universal and Critical Dictionary," nor do I know of any dictionary that contains it. Certain it is that no place should be found for it in English literature, for whatever a church believes, and no matter what, that is its creed, and makes it denominational. Every church must believe something. A church without a creed of some sort, either expressed or implied, could not exist, and thus every church must of necessity be denominational until the time comes when all creeds are alike. However, the word is used by Bro. Fee in reference to a certain church, supposed not to be sectarian, and we will use it in the sense indicated.

The drift of the article referred to above seems to rest upon this premise: that all churches of Christ should be called simply, "churches of Christ," in order to be "one body," and the writer implies that he and five followers formed a church under that name, and he adds, as if the favor of God was thereby shown, "a revival ensued." Now, if revivals were common only among churches of this description then that fact would have its due weight, but that is not the case. Revivals are common in all working churches. Therefore there is no logical force whatever in the statement that a revival ensued.

But, they called themselves a church of Christ, Very well, if they were truly Christians nobody will object to their taking that name for their church. It is nothing new for a body of Christians to call themselves a church of Christ. I never heard of a church that did not claim to be a church of Christ. All Christians, the world over, call their church organization a church of Christ, and have ever done so since the time of Christ, but it has never made the church one body, and never will. Mind, I do not say the church of God is not now in some sense one body, but I say that particular name, "Church of Christ," did not make it so. It might as well be said that calling black, white, will make it white. Anti-christ bears that name to-day, but he is none the less Anti-christ. Knights Templar adopt it, but they are no less the enemies of Christ. A branch of the Legislature of Rhode Island is called the "General Assembly," a biblical name as truly as church of Christ, but it does not make them any part of the body of Christ. What will Christ himself say to those who at the last day will claim to have prophesied in his name? Will he tell them that that act made them one with him and his people? No, he will say, "I never knew you!" Jesus did not pray for his people to be sanctified through his name but through the truth.

Another fallacy of Bro. Fee's, accidental to the above, is that names make divisions. Names never made a division in the church of Christ from the day it was instituted till the present time. Principles, true or false, make divisions in the church, and divisions make names. I call upon Bro. Fee for instances to the contrary. If anything is clear, it is that names affect nothing either for or against the union of God's people. It is absurd to suppose otherwise.

But while Bro. Fee's church ostensibly ignored a party or sect name, they virtually had one nevertheless. If any one asks a Baptist to what church he belongs, he will answer in full: To a Baptist church of Christ. If the same question is asked Bro. Fee, he answers: To a church of Christ which believes immersion is the only baptism commanded by Christ. Now, I ask any one, if there is any difference in the answers except that the Baptist's is shorter and uses the name of the doctrine, while Bro. Fee's gives a concise statement of the doctrine instead. In this he and the Baptist stand on precisely the same plane in regard to a sect name. If the Baptist has a sect name, then Bro. F. has also. If one church is sectarian, the other is also. So that, after all, Bro. F's undenominational church is no more undenominational than any other. But let us see if it is not even less so than the great majority.

Having disposed of Bro. Fee's premise, I will push his undenominationalism a little, yet with all fairness and candor. Bro. Fee's church of six members started with a creed opposed to slavery. That was right, but that creed made a sectarian church of it, just as much as any other creed makes a sectarian church. Again, Bro. Fee became convinced that baptizo meant immerse, and nothing else, and agreeable thereto he was baptized and he baptized others. Right again, but that act made his church still more sectarian, for thereby it was arrayed against the Roman Catholic ordinance of sprinkling. Still again, believing that this baptism was "what the Lord commanded in the great commission," he yet allows honest inquirers to grope in the dark about a word which is "a transferance with an English termination" which they must blindly interpret without help from "partizan teaching," and if they go wrong, he receives them into the church just the same, whether they follow "what our Lord commands" or the commandments of men, for, says he, "questions of interpretation must not be conditions of fellowship!" Without exposing the gross inconsistency of such a course, we will here simply remark that it makes the church in question still more sectarian for it brings it in opposition to the Baptists as well as pædo-baptists.

Now it is evident upon its face that Bro. Fee would not unite with the Baptists because of their rules regarding communion, and as a test for his action on this point I will lay down this principle which I think all will admit to be a correct one: He who splits from, or refuses to unite with, a body of Chirstians for a less cause than what separates that body of Christians from others, is more sectarian than they. Now baptism is the initiatory rite to church fellowship and is the prime cause of separation of the Baptists from other sects. The terms of communion depend upon and are subordinate to the rite of baptism, and is altogether an inferior question. Bro. Fee refuses to unite with the Baptists upon this inferior question, and therefore he is more sectarian than they are.

Once more. This church of six members believed "that the true children of God, the Christians of the locality, ought to constitute the one church of that locality," and forthwith they separate from one church and form another! This is amazing. What does Bro. F. mean to say? Will he say that the six members of his church were all the Christians in the locality, and that the church of New School Presbyterians, out of which these six came, were not Christians? Yes, this is just what he says, "apostate from the faith." This is sectarianism intensified. "Who art thou that judgest the servant of another? To his own lord he standeth or falleth." Rom. 14: 4.

Finally. We have had, from time to time, many theories regarding undenominationalism, whatever is meant by it, but one good example would be worth more than a thousand theories. Bro. Fee has made a move in the right direction in submitting his undenominational church for our inspection, but unfortunately, that church, when put to the test, fails at every point. I have shown it to be most intensely sectarian, and now I call upon Bro. Fee to point out any flaw in my showing.

ALBERT M. PAULL.

NOTE.—The publication of an historical sketch of a nobly-conceived movement in Kentucky, from the pen of John G. Fee, would not seem to need refutation; but Bro. Paull, who "is a brother beloved for his work's sake" is otherwise minded, and his letter appears. He is a man of convictions and maintains them so earnestly that he does not always see whither his argument takes him. Thus, to follow the reasoning, would result in making every individual a denomination by himself, or there would be no denominations; which is a logical absurdity.—ED.

THE WRANGLING TWINS.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., Jan. 8th, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE.—The Rev. J. G. White, the Apostle of Protestantism vs Popery, has created a sensation here by promulgating a book, entitled "The Secrets of Auricular Confession exposed; by Homo." To say that these secrets are obscene is altogether too mild. They are filthy to the last degree. A Hottentot or Digger Indian would blush at such a discourse, and a wooden Indian tobacco sign should be too modest to give ear to such stuff. The book seems to be well authenticated, giving book, chapter and page of accredited Catholic authorities. Quoting the Latin and giving the translation from the standard theological works of the Romish church. In his preface the author says the people are asking, "Is it possible that such books are now secretly circulated in our midst as a guide to the Romish Clergy." Then follows a long list of authorities which seem to make the thing incontrovertible. He maintains that these are a prolific source of gross licentiousness, and claims that something should be done to arrest the flood tide of sin. He says that after much thought he has come to the conclusion that the only effectual method of suppressing the system is to expose it.

The book begins with the Pope's bull or curse. This sounds like the ravings of a maniac; sending its spite like a charge of duck shot to every part and parcel of his victim, whether the parts are comely or uncomely. Next follows the bishop's and priest's oaths taken at consceration. These oaths in addition to swearing away all their future right of opinion or action, bind them to persecute and destroy all opposed to the Roman church. They are also bound not to be in any council which shall plot against her, but to hinder it all they can. They affirm that she is the head and matron above all the pretended churches throughout the whole earth. The Jesuit's oath expressly renounces and disowns all allegiance as due to any heretical governments or to any of their inferior magistrates or officers. They swear to keep secret or private all the agent's counsels of the church and will not divulge them directly or indirectly. Bombastic titles abound and unquestioning obedience and severity promised to all commands and wishes of all the grandiloquent superiors. In the directions about Auricular confession, provision is made for committing perjury with impunity, and a convenient mental reservation removes all the guilt of lying in all cases where the interests of the church are at stake. In the specific directions for conducting confessions in regard to sexual matters are given things too indecent to be put in print anywhere.

He charges that Romanism is a chronic rebellion in our midst, and loudly calls for the suppression of the secret confessional by LAW. That the ascendency of Popery to power would be the death knell of religious liberty in our land, and that political freedom must soon follow in its wake.

Mr. White has just answered to one indictment in our court for circulating obscene literature, and I believe he is now under another indictment for the same offence. No denial of the truth of the charge, but he is prosecuted simply for circulating the obscene literature. He is full of indignation at this, and claims (with justice we think) that he is contending in the interests of religious liberty and public morals, for political liberty and all that is good and desirable in our beloved land. He is enlisted for the war and I understand, if need be, he is prepared to appeal to what he calls the Beecher Bible, viz., Pistol. On his trial under the late indictment he put the Catholic priest of this place on the stand, and put in his hand a copy of Peter Dens' Moral Theology. He was asked if that was a Catholic book. He replied that he did not know. Since this author is so high authority in the Catholic colleges, it looks as though this "holy father" had learned to "keep his jewel" in Masonic style. We understand that he acknowledges the book in private and says that he has it in his library. This author furnishes most of the disgusting material under consideration.—So much for twin number one.

Now it is not necessary to remind the readers of the Cynosure that there are no charges made against popery which are not equally good against its quarrelsome twin, Masonry.

Is the one a secret empire in our midst? a chronic rebellion? so is the other. Has the one extra-judicial oaths enforced by horrid imprecations? so has the other. Is the one indecent in its ceremonies? so is the other. Is the one a false religion? so is the other. Each claims to be able to carry its votaries to heaven. Does one claim great antiquity? so does the other. Does one claim supreme authority and to absolve its subjects from all other allegiance? so does the other. Does the one deal in great, high-sounding titles and seek to impress by tawdy tinsel and glitter, with bombastic pretensions? so does the other. Does the one raise the criminal cry of "let me alone" as did the devil in Christ's time? so does the other. In fact, the personal likeness is greater than that of brothers, they are indeed as we have already characterized them TWINS.

We fear it will detract somewhat from the glory of Mr. White's crusade when we say that we are informed he is a Mason in high authority; that in opposing one of the twins he has espoused the other; that the lively tilt he is giving priestcraft is but a family quarrel—twin Masonry vs. twin popery. Both claim highest authority on earth. Mutual jealousy is a fruitful source of discord. In all such family quarrels third parties are apt to hear much about both sides which they would not tell under ordinary circumstances. Thus our priest said in a public discourse that Masonry obstructed public justice and the reason so many more Catholics are executed than others is that they do not enjoy the immunities of Masons.

All the evils predicted by Mr. White on the accession of popery to power in this country are equally sure to come in the wake of universal Masonry. Public opinion is sure to reap a benefit from this crimination and recrimination. We say, go on gentlemen; unburden your minds fully. The public has suspected your inwardness long ago. We congratulate Mr. White on his discovery that "exposing" their nasty inwardness to the light will kill it. Our Anti-masonic speakers have discovered this long ago and are proceeding to use it on the other twin while he has the first one in hand. But those outside of this contest remembering the fable of the Hawk the Kite and the Dove-cot, will be slow to call in the Masonic hawk to defend them from the Catholic kite. They are both birds for which the dove-cot has no use. The community stands by with great complacency while the hawk and kite destroy one another.

Yours respectfully,

LOOKER ON.

NOTES.

Cruelty to animals is the crime of cowards.

Twenty-nine per cent of the entire acreage in clover in Michigan is reported winter-killed.

Holland dairymen are shipping their butter to New York, and selling it as high as the best Elgin or Iowa creamery.

The dairy interests of Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin have increased 66 per cent. during the past ten years, while the increase in New York has been but 6 per cent.

During the past twelve years 29,859 head of Short-Horn cattle have been sold in the United States and Canada. The aggregate of the sales was $8,268,576, an average of nearly $277 per head.

It is said that clover seed weighing sixty pounds to the bushel, and selling for $5, is largely adulterated this spring with seed of Hungarian grass weighing forty-six pounds and worth one dollar per bushel.

A New Jersey farmer set an old straw stack on fire to scare out a fox, and three tramps crawled out of the smoke and upbraided him for his carelessness in not first jabbing around with a pitchfork to see if any one was there. The fox got away.

Boyer & Chipman, at Lincoln, Neb., recently slaughtered the largest cow on the record of Nebraska bovine history. She was a native of Colorado, about 7 years old, pure white in color, and stood six feet four inches high, being well proportioned. She weighed 2,450 pounds alive, and netted 1,400 pounds of fine beef. Her hide weighed 160 pounds and was the largest bought in Nebraska by the firm to which it was sold.

Medical men have always differed as to whether the best medical treatment of frozen persons was by a gradual or by a rapid application of heat. "To settle the matter," says Knowledge, "Laptchinski has made a series of very careful experiments upon dogs with the following results: Of twenty animals treated by the method of gradual resuscitation in a cold room, fourteen perished; of twenty placed at once in a warm apartment, eight died; while of twenty immediately put into a hot bath, all recovered." These experiments will probably influence the practice of medical men in Russia and Northern Europe, where the question of the best means of restoring animation in persons suffering from excessive cold is of frequent occurrence every winter.

HAVE A PLAN IN FARMING.

The great fault with American farmers is a constant desire for a change. The farm is rarely thought of as the home which the children are to occupy during a life-time, and then leave to their heirs. There is too much changing with the crops—first one thing and then another, the result of which is a shifting that is profitless. For a few years it may be that sheep-raising is the leading feature of the farm, soon to be followed by rearing a breed of cattle, or cultivating hops, tobacco, or even rhubarb. The general management of a farm should be planned once for all, it only being subject to those changes that an improvement in agricultural methods suggest. The work of a farm should go on regularly from year to year, so that even in mid-winter the farmer may make his arrangements, and complete his scheme of work for the whole season. The man who is trying to sell his farm, has his heart in some other locality or business, and who is ready to devote his energies to some new crop or method, is seldom on the highway to success. It is well to try that which is new, but not by giving up the old and well-tried methods.—American Agriculturist for Jan.

TRAINING VICIOUS HORSES.

A new and very simple method of training vicious horses was exhibited in West Philadelphia recently, and the manner in which some of the wildest horses were subdued was astonishing. The first trial was that of a kicking or "bucking" mare, which her owner said had allowed no rider on her back for a period of at least five years. She became tame in about as many minutes, and allowed herself to be ridden about without a sign of her former wildness. The means by which the result was accomplished was by a piece of light rope which was passed around the front jaw of the mare just above the upper teeth, crossed in her mouth and thence secured back of her neck. It was claimed that no horse will kick or jump when thus secured, and that a horse after receiving the treatment a few times, will abandon his vicious ways forever. A very simple method was also shown by which a kicking horse could be shod. It consisted in connecting the animal's head and tail by means of a rope fastened to the tail and then to the bit, and then drawn tightly enough to incline the animal's head to one side. This, it is claimed makes it absolutely impossible for the horse to kick on the side of the rope. At the same exhibition a horse which for many years had to be bound on the ground to be shod suffered the blacksmith to operate on him without attempting to kick while secured in the manner described.—Ohio Farmer.

WHY SOME FARMERS DO NOT SUCCEED.

The Southern Farmers' Monthly gives the following reasons why some farmers do not succeed:

They are not active and industrious.
They are slothful in everything.
They do not keep up with improvements.
They are wedded to old methods.
They give no attention to details.
They think small things not important.
They take no pleasure in their work.
They regard labor as a misfortune.
They weigh and measure stingily.
They are wasteful and improvident.
They let their gates sag and fall down.
They let their fowls roost in the trees.
They have no shelter for stock.
They do not curry their horses.
They leave their plows in the field.
They hang the harness in the dust.
They put off greasing the wagon.
They starve the calf and milk the cow.
They don't know the best is the cheapest.
They have no method or system.
They see no good in a new thing.
They never use paint on the farm.
They prop the barn door with a rail.
They milk the cows late in the day.
They have no time to do things well.
They do not read the newspapers and books.

"Whether a man is well supplied with sugar is a matter which concerns himself alone. But whether he is well supplied with instruction is a matter which concerns his neighbors and the State. If he cannot afford to pay for sugar, he must go without sugar. But it is by no means fit that, because he cannot afford to pay for education, he should go without education."—Macaulay.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 18, 1883.

THIS WEEK.

Our readers will find this number of their paper rich in the discussion of the prohibition question at the battle-front in Kansas, as the last indicated a revival in convention and lecture work. Friends in Kansas will find this a grand number, deserving an addition of several hundred to the list of permanent readers from their State. A judicious canvass will secure them, wherever Mrs. Collins' address, Rev. B. F. Worrell's article and the editorial letters are read.

NEXT WEEK

the Cynosure promises its readers a grand Weed number with portrait and articles, original and selected, which will make a paper worth preserving. Subscriptions should be hastened Chicago-ward so as not to fail of this number.

UNANIMOUS.—The approval of every reader, so far as we can learn, is heartily given to the efforts to improve the Cynosure in every way. The appearance of the paper should be equal in every respect to the excellence of the contents. AN OPEN LETTER ON THE GREAT PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

{ NEW GORDON HOTEL,
{ TOPEKA, 3 a. m., Jan. 10, 1883.

TO HON. JOHN P. ST. JOHN, LATE GOVERNOR OF KANSAS:—Permit a citizen of another State to congratulate you on the triumphant vindication of your four year's administration by the people's mammoth convention last night; and not your administration only, but the cause of temperance and prohibition. It was a proud hour to meet nearly twelve hundred delegates, bearing written credentials, from all parts of the State; to receive their honest and enthusiastic greetings and endorsement; while your political enemies utter no word or inuendo, even, against your morals, integrity, or honor. As some of the oldest speakers last night, had opposed prohibition and advocated license at the first, and all conceded that the advanced standing of the State is the result of your own individual conviction and determination, the triumph last night, and the refutation of the cry that "The people have gone back on prohibition", is full of cheer for the past and of hope for the future for your friends and yourself.

There was, however, in the ovation last night one fearful and ominous omission, which I beg respectfully to point out.

In the City Directory of Topeka, I find the following entries of organizations representing thousands of people, and fabulous amounts of money, and working outside, and, of course; inside of every school, church, court-house and legislature of Kansas and the United States. Under the general head, "Masonic," the Topeka Directory gives:

1. "Supreme Council, Southern Jurisdiction; Albert Pike, Grand Commander; E. T. Carr, Leavenworth, Inspector General; and Wm. M. Ireland, acting Secretary General."
2. "Unity Chapter, E. X. No.1."
3. "Oriental Lodge of Perfection, No. 3."
4. "Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Knights Templar, of the United States.
5. "Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of Kansas, annual Conclave in Topeka."
6. "Topeka Commandery, No. 5,Knights Templar."
7. "General Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons in the United States. Triennial Convention in Denver next August."
8. "Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Kansas. Convention in Topeka."
9. "Topeka Chapter, Royal Arch Masons."
10. "Grand Council R. S. and S. E. M. of Kansas."
11. Zabud Council No. 4, R. S. and S. E. M."
12. "Grand Lodge A. F. and A. M. of Kansas."
13. "The Kansas Masonic Temple Company."
14. "Topeka Lodge, No. 17, A. F. and A. M."
15. "Orient Lodge, No. 51, A. F. and A. M."
16. "Golden Rule Lodge, No. 90, A. F. and A. M."
17. "Fidelity Chapter Eastern Star."
18. "Masonic Mutual Benefit Society of Kansas."
19. "Masonic Board of Relief."

"COLORED ORGANIZATIONS."

20. "Lincoln Chapter, No. 2, Holy Royal Arch Masons."
21. "Euclid Lodge, A. F. and A. M."
22. "Mount Maria (Moriah?) Lodge, No. 5, A. F. and A. M."
23. "Faith Western Lodge, No. 3."
24. "Rebecca Chapter, Order of Eastern Star."

To avoid tediousness I lump together from the Directory, following the above: seven lodges of Oddfellows, five of Knights of Pythias, two lodges Knights of Honor, one Independent Order of Foresters, Ancient Order of United Workmen, and the list is closed by four secret temperance lodges.

Now, my dear and respected Sir, the convention last night, in order to represent fairly the whole people of Kansas, called delegates from churches, of all denominations; temperance societies, and even Sabbath schools. Why were the above forty-six secret organizations, found in the Topeka Directory, omitted, left out, and passed by in silence? I answer:

Not because they were inactive. They are working nightly in almost perpetual session! Nor because the destiny of Kansas is uninfluenced by them. The States of Europe have been often and again, nearly throttled by such secret orders. The reign of terror in France was inaugurated in a secret lodge; and, though that lodge was in part composed of professed ministers of the Christian religion, its cry became, "Toutl' Eveque a la Lanterne" (every Bishop to the lamp post), and it wrote over the gateway of Pere La Chaise Cemetery, "There is no God. Death is an Eternal Sleep."

Why were these citizens' organizations omitted in the call and making up of last night's convention? You have read from a late Prime Minister of Great Britain, in a speech to his constituents at Aylesbury; that in the administration of governments, "Not only are sovereigns and ministers to be considered, but Secret Societies, whose leaders can produce insurrection and massacre"; and Lord Cavendish and secretary Burke; by their still unavenged assassination in broad day light, prove the truth of D'Israeli's assertion! But perhaps, confident of the patriotism and innocence of these secret orders, you think it impossible they should produce infidelity, mischief and bloodshed; and that to fear them is childish. So, at first, thought the priests and people of France, but they were hung and guillotined by them, and that by thousands. Why, Sir, a respectable Methodist minister here in Kansas, not three days ago, told me that when he asked permission to withdraw from his lodge (Masonic), his request was refused, and he was told: "We have men among us who will travel three thousand miles to inflict his penalties on a man who will go back on our lodge!" My dear Sir, there wants no more proof of the dread which these accursed, un-American, un-Christian secret orders inspire than their ominous omission by your last night's convention!

Their "Grand Commander,"placed at their head in your Topeka Directory, carries a hamper of proof brandy with him in his rounds of inspection. The head and actuary of the Milwaukee brewers' league, who raised and forwarded money to bribe ignorant colored voters in Kansas to defeat you, their benefactor, is or was a high Mason! Grand Commander Albert Pike commanded Indians at Pea Ridge to scalp our wounded soldiers; and Gov. Glick was on his side, against the Union, and for the Confederacy! Gov. Glick is now your successor, not because he is a Democrat (there were not Democratic votes to elect him); but because he is a Mason! Masons, like your Republican State Senator Collins of Sabetha, lobbied for Glick and against you, not because you are not a lodge member, for you are; but because you will not answer the purposes of the lodge, of which purposes prohibition is not one.

Now, my dear and honored sir, I should not have written a word of this letter, did I not see, with sunlight clearness, that, either the secret lodge system in Kansas, or temperance and prohibition must go down. Does this need proof? Can prohibition succeed in the hands of men sworn to obey the brandy-drinking Albert Pike and his Masonic "Supreme Council"? Such were some of your speakers last night. Can you gather figs of such thistles? No! Ten thousand times no!!!

Your organ The Capital, day before yesterday, in an eloquent and merited tribute to you and your administration, tells us: "That even at the hour when the polls closed in November, not a soul in Kansas really believed him (Glick) elected." Then the secret lodge system elected him, for if any open body had elected him, it would have been known who they were. Are there any other secret caucuses and council rooms but theirs here?

The eyes of the American people are turned to you as one who has followed, and dares to follow his convictions of truth and plain knowledge of what is right. We trust they are not to be disappointed.

I am honored sir, Yours in Christ,

J. BLANCHARD.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

A COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

NORTH CEDAR, Kansas, Dec. 30th, 1882.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, whose guest I am, at North Cedar, suggests a Council of Churches against the secret worships of this country and world; after the manner and model of the one held at Jerusalem, composed of "Apostles, Elders, and Brethren." (Acts 15: 1—29., which see and read.)

Mr. Milligan is by conviction and connection an Old Side Covenanter; of course the strictest of the strict. But he is strict after the example of Christ, who was the most intolerant, and at the same time, the most tolerant of religious teachers. He would be nailed to a cross sooner than give up "one jot or tittle of fundamental truth: yet he could meet and mingle religiously, with Samaritans, centurions (who were pagans), Pharisees, Publicans, and sinners even, if their faces were honestly set toward the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." John 1: 29.

Mr. Milligan suggests three doctrines on facts as a basis of the proposed council or convention, to wit:

1. God the Judge of all. Heb. 12: 23.
2. Jesus Christ the Mediator. Heb. 12: 24.
3. The "Scripture given by inspiration of God. 2 Tim. 3: 16.

On this platform of three planks, he is willing to meet and mingle with United Presbyterians, Wesleyans, Free Methodists, United Brethren, and all the professed children of God who are obedient to the injunction of that Jerusalem convention: "Abstaining from the pollutions of idols, and fornication, and things strangled, and blood"; (See Acts 15:19); which things are manifestly, in principle, included in the secret lodge system of this country and world. This secret system is "strange" or "idolatrous worship;" exposes all women but its own to the crime of "fornication." Its "cable tow" is an implement of "strangling;" and its oaths are oaths of "blood", and its record a record of blood.

Brother Milligan thinks a council of churches called on such a basis, would be sanctioned, perhaps attended, by his brothers in Alleghany and New York city; by Rev. Mr. McFall of Boston and, Drs. Sloane, George, and others of like faith and order. Will those brethren consult, and answer whether they concur in the suggestion; also, all United Brethren, Wesleyans, Free Methodists, United Presbyterians, and other Christian people of whatever name, who are in favor of such a convention are requested to announce the same through the Christian Cynosure.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

Mr. Milligan's conception is, that Christians are "One body in Christ, and every one members one of another." And that those members may have members; as the hand has fingers; and the head, eyes, etc., and that these members, and members of members, may keep their respective forms and shapes without prejudicing the unity of the body, of which Christ is the head. All who favor Mr. Milligan's suggestion of a great Council of Churches, please write.

ST. JOHN AGAIN.

SABETHA, Kans., Jan. 4, '83.

In the little town of Wetmore, some twenty miles south of this, the Masonic lodge has only twenty-five members, mostly strong Prohibitionists; and all, or nearly all voted for St. John. Here in Sabetha, the lodge has double that number, including a State Senator who was a Prohibitionist—"BUT," and a bitter opponent of St. John. He and a liquor-seller were delegates to the Republican convention at Topeka and voted with the little minority against the nomination of St. John. The liquor seller's father died a drunkard and Masonry has made all there is of the Senator. Both of these men belong to the lodge here, and the thirty-six lodge-and-liquor Republicans who bolted the Republican ticket can be trusted by the "Sovereign Grand Inspector General of the 33d degree, Southern Jurisdiction," who now rules the lodges of this country.

In Wetmore, I talked with a sensible business man who is a Mason, and an honest Prohibitionist. He could give no idea of what defeated St. John, and was as much astonished at his defeat as the rest. Here, before the election, while all honest men expected his election, these Masons were cool and confident, and boasted that St. John would surely be defeated. Precisely the same thing occurred in Chicago the night before Lincoln was nominated. Even Thurlow Weed was so confident of Seward's nomination that he wrote him which ballot would nominate him next day. Every body out of lodge secrets, expected Seward's nomination as much as they expected the next sunrise. But that evening Mr. Carpenter heard one Mason quiet the apprehensions of another by assuring him that "The lodge has seen to that. Seward never will be President."

Now when Masons, like those at Wetmore, come to find that they are not trusted by the lodge-rulers at Washington, and they are mere hewers of wood and drawers of water to "unknown superiors," they will wheel off from the order by platoons. Of course, these Masonic tools of the invisible "Sovereign Inspector General" were great against the "third-term" and "railroad monopolies," and they deceive, where possible, "the very elect." I have seen good, honest and capable men who were humbugged by them.

SABETHA, JAN., 8th.

Here in Kansas yet! And I have about reversed my determination to start for home, and may be back in Topeka to-morrow at the prohibition convention.

My experience here in Sabetha is exceptional. The M. E. presiding elder, Richard Dake, and the station preacher, Rev. C. W. Shaw, called and asked me to preach Saturday evening, (night before last) during their quarterly meeting service. I did so and a precious meeting we had. I told the congregation of the two remarkable renunciations of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship at a National Holiness campmeeting at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and the intelligence was well received. You will recollect that a presiding elder and circuit preacher there renounced both lodges in open camp.

A local preacher here this week in class meeting renounced three lodges—Good Templars, Odd-fellows and Masons. He said joining the Masons was the sin of his life. He has a fair education, is only thirty-six years old, carries a well-worn Bibe in his side breast pocket, and has preached for ten years. We had a consultation on Sabbath (yesterday) and it was arranged that he shonld give his experience in the secret lodge system in a large hall here soon; and, though he has never yet seen an expose of lodgeism, the seales are fallen from his eyes. Like him of Tarsus, he will immediately preach that Christ, and not lodge ceremonies, saves the soul. I have advised to get Starry here to put on the yoke of the lodge before the people, as the Hebrew prophet did; and when this young brother has experience and information, as he is an expert in lodgeism, he will do work for Christ against the Satan worships in Kansas. Revs. Alexander of Lyndon, and Milligan of North Cedar, please notice.

This young preacher was made a Mason in Maquon, Knox county, Illinois. Eleven years ago next May, he wrote and sent the following to the Maquon lodge:

"MAQUON, May 20, 1872.

Worshipful Master, Fellows and Brethren:

I would respectfully ask leave to withdraw from the order, as I can no longer conscientiously remain a Mason.

Yours fraternally,
G. T. DISSETTE.

"Vera pro gratis."

The above is a true copy of the paper in my possession. The Maquon Worshipful Master told him that the paper was "put under the table," reminded him of his oath, and commanded him to attend the next meeting of the lodge. Dissette did so; and nothing was said in open lodge about his case. As he was about to go to college the Worshipful Master asked him if he was going to "that concern at Wheaton?" On being told "no;" he was going to Hedding College at Abingdon, the Master replied, "All right." He did go to Abingdon, and Miss Lora Wheaton, a graduate of Wheaton College, was one of the teachers! She tanght him faithfully. More anon.

I yesterday aided in the communion service at the Congregational church here, and preached at length at night against the lodge as opposed to the kingdom of Christ. The Congregational pastor, though not an Antimason, and naturally very conservative, is a pure-minded man, a mueh more than ordinary preacher; has a very superior wife, and a large and intelligent congregation. As he is still young, a rare fnture is before him if he follows close after Christ.

As St. John's Topeka prohibition convention opens to-morrow, I now think of stopping over to-night at Hiawatha and running down to Topeka to-morrow.

Since beginning this letter I have had a long conversation with Rev. Mr. Dissette and will go on with his case.

A few days before leaving Maquon he was going ont in a buggy, and the Mason who endorsed his application came up and asked him, "How about your leaving the lodge?"

"Don't bother me," said Dissette.

"Remember," said the Mason, "there are men among us who will travel three thousand miles to inflict his penalties on any one who goes back on the lodge."

This young man is near me while I write, with several brethren. He is looking over Doesburg's Expose, the first he has ever seen. He was a young, single man, at Maquon, desiring an edncation, and was made to believe that the lodge really had knowledge back of and beyond all other men and institutions on earth. This drew him into Masonry.

The Maquon lodge is in the region where familiar spirits were worshipped, and ardent spirits were distilled, till the distillery burnt down.

Off for Hiawatha! I have found here another young man, an able writer for the Cynosure. Of him, by and by.

ATCHISON, Kas., Jan. 9, 1883.

I came in last night from Sabetha, and after a good night's sleep, where "guests are not charged for heating rooms," I am writing a word to our readers before starting for the prohibition convention which opens at Topeka to-night.

I came down here with an M. E. presiding elder for whom I preached in Sabetha. He is very much of a Christian gentleman, though I take it not an open reformer. He tells me that the M. E. preachers hereabout "are all coming out of the secret orders." He says the stationed preacher here in Atchison, during the prohibition campaign, was a Freemason, yet returned no grips and visited no lodges. He told him (his elder) that he lost much influence, or was assured that he had done so, by his total abstinence from the lodge. Wonld that our preachers the east side of the Mississippi would "mark, note, and act accordingly!"

Meantime the poor blind souls who have been led into the lodge to gain small promotions, have the "veil yet untaken away." I learned by some godly women in Sabetha that an ambitious little spare man, and Methodist, had become that anomaly in religion.

A TOTALLY SANCTIFIED FREEMASON.

Well, as I sat waiting by the stove, last Satnrday night, for the congregation to come in to hear me preach, this sanctified deceiver and swindler (of conrse a leading man in the chureh yet) who helps his lodge sell secrets which he knows are not secrets, came up and entered into conversation. I told him of a holiness convention held in Wheaton by brethren Kent and Brooks, who were and I believe are still M. E. preachers in conferenee connection. I said, the first question I asked Bro. Fleeharty was, "Are any of you Masons?" And being assured they were not, I supported the convention and was blessed by it. The poor brother was puzzled, and choked ont: "Well, I think it best to have nave no holiness meetings not approved by the conference." And so turned and went away, with all his conference-authorized holiness about him. I did not see him in the audience, bnt the congregation responded well and heartily to my story of the Cedar Rapids, Iowa, renunciation of Masonry and Odd-fellowship.

Last night I stopped at a junetion to change roads on my way here. A lady, and her tall, good-looking son were in the depot. They lived at Doniphan, of Atchison and Stringfellow memory. She said, though her son was not, his father was a Mason, and "she was glad of it!"

"What!" said I, "Glad that your husband has sworn life-long concealment from you?"

"Yes, indeed; I have that confidence in him that he will do nothing wrong. It was a niee and good organization."

"But, madam," I returned, "You just now said outsiders knew nothing about it, and could know nothing; and you are an outsider. Why do you pronounce it good?"

"I am a rebel," said she. And I think that was true. I find proofs multiply all along this border that the savage and bloody raid on Kansas was run by Masons. Senator Pomeroy was told that he could not come up the river into Kansas unless he joined the lodge. That is, the United States had not government and laws enough to save him; but a lodge full of murderers had.

AT HOME AGAIN.

Throughout my visit to Kansas I was impressed, everywhere, with the fact that,

"Coming events cast their shadows before," and I will furnish our readers some of those "shadows." And—

1. St. John has more and warmer friends now than before his late defeat.

This is the decided opinion of Dr. Cordley of Emporia, Rev. Mr. Hogbin, Congregational pastor at Sabetha, and other men of penetration and intelligence. Besides, the great convention shows the same. One gentleman said to me in conversation, as the Capital newspaper said in its leader, that his defeat astonished everybody; and the gentleman explained it by saying that the Repnblican leaders whose hearts were not with prohibition, and who wanted St. John out of their way, did not expect or desire his defeat, but a diminution of his vote, so as to make him an unavailable candidate for the U. S. Senate. Thus there was literally a

"Vaunting ambition
Which overleaped itself."

They did more than they wished; and are now blamed for giving the State, for the first time, an original rebel and Democrat for governor!

2. THE PERSONALE OF THE CONVENTION.

And first, St. John himself made a small, short speech, to give scope for others. This refutes those who said he is self-snfficient and vain. No vain man, who could make a speech, ever let slip such an occasion as that. Besides, he is too much in earnest to be vain; too fond of the substance of power to care about its semblance.

The speaker who both preceded and followed the ex-Governor was Rev. A. D. Campbell, chaplain of the Leavenworth State's Prison. Stout, rotund, good-natured, witty, with candor and honesty in his face, and twenty years bitter experience of drink, the devil, as is said of Gough, surely made a mistake when he made him a drnnkard. He is altogether too good a man to be holden of the lodge when once he is enlightened concerning its Christless nature.

The next speaker was Hon. Mr. Legate, also of Leavenworth. He opposed prohibition till it was sure to conquer, and has since supported it. He said, "I am here simply to insist on supporting the Constitution and the laws. There is no moral question involved in prohibition. Intemperance is a disease, and society surely has the right to protect itself from disease, whether yellow fever, small pox or delirinm tremens." He then, in an exceedingly able speech, replete with facts, showed that prohibition had achieved grand results, against the misstatements of liquor men.

Jetmore of Topeka was then called forward. It is as good as a speech to look at him; a tall, finely-proportioned man and lawyer, he was saluted by the crowd as "next Governor of Kansas." These were the speakers on the platform. To see St. John amongst them suggested a propeller engine among the sail masts of a ship. But the crowd itself seemed a Macedonian phalanx of orators, each one fit to lead the whole brigade.

I will further mention only Albert Griffin, editor and proprietor of the Nationalist at Manhattan, a Georgian by birth, who grew up an Abolitionist whose life, like that of the children in the furnace, illustrated the right to disobey laws requiring sin. His speech was called out by and suggests

THE RELIGION OF THE CONVENTION.

A resolution pledged "unconditional homage" to the temperance laws. Rev. J. S. T. Milligan of North Cedar, protested against "unconditional homage" to human laws unless they coincided with God's law, and he asked that the preamble might recognize Christ. The wording was modified. But the discussion brought out the theology of the lodge, which asks Christians to ignore Christ to win the co-operation of the Christless. During this discussion the vast crowd boiled like a seething cauldron and St. John in conducting the ship through, where not two, but twenty seas met, in motions and counter-motions, amendments and re-amendments, questions and previous questions, exhibited to admiration, two qualities not always found combined, adroitness and honesty. The result was harmony in the convention.

I went to my hotel and began a letter to Governor St. John which I finally concluded to make an open letter and give it to him through the Cynosure.

I feel perfectly certain that when the minds which made up that wonderful convention, shall be fairly reached and the lodge nncovered, and the pulpit and press unmuzzled, there will be but one opinion concerning the secret lodge system. The forty-six lodges of Topeka, selling secrets which are not secrets, and practicing religions which are not religion, will, with those clear-thinking men and women, sink to the moral level of mock-auctions and faro banks, with the difference in favor of the latter, that they are not religious shams. If the lodges are not such, then they were entitled to representation in St. John's convention and should have had it. J. B.

—President Blanchard returned from Kansas on Thursday afternoon, rather improved in health than otherwise from so taxing a journey in mid-winter.

—The Lutheran Standard, of Columbus, Ohio, published the letter of the Hon. Thurlow Weed to the Batavia Convention in full, in its last issue.

—Elder Callender requests that notice be given that the degree meeting announced at Clifford, Pa., for Jan. 25-6, will be postponed until Feb. 1st and 2nd, by request of Bro. S. E. Starry.

—Bro. E. M. Mathews, who has done some good work in Illinois, writes that he intends to visit the State again about the first of February, and can speak during the first two weeks of the month. Friends who wish him to visit them, please write Secretary Stoddard, at this office as soon as possible, so that arrangements can be made.

—Bro. Hinman sends the call for the Chambersburg convention to be held Febrnary 13th. He expects to labor in the vicinity until the meeting, and has already visited Fayetteville and other points, speaking every night, and sometimes dnring the day. From the character of the people among whom this meeting is to be held, there are good hopes for its sncess and usefulness.

—We learn that Elder Browne may yet be under the neeessity of giving up his work in Kentueky through want of support. There is abundance of work, but the people are poor and can pay little for teaching and preaching. Bro. Browne is one of our most faithfnl and self-denying workers. He should not be deserted in an extremity by friends in the North who can well spare small sums for the continnation of the work at Cabin Creek and Camp Nelson. Funds sent for this purpose to the N. C. A treasurer will be duly forwarded.

NOTICE.

To the Friends of Reform in Southeast Pennsylvania and Adjoining Localities.

We, the undersigned, were appointed a committee by the official meeting of King Street Church, Chambersburg, to call a general convention of the anti-secrecy reform advocates to meet in Chambersburg, Pa., Feb. 13th, at 7 P. M., and to continue through the two following days. Speakers of ability are expected to be present and to address the meeting.

A WORD TO PATRONS.

There are many ways in which you may aid in the eare and labor of publishing your paper without material inconvenience to yourselves.

1. Send in your renewals the week before your time expires as marked on each number of your paper.

2. Write each name and the Post Office address of new subscribers very plainly.

3. Write all matter intended for publication on separate sheets of paper, and only on one side of the sheet.

4. Address all letters relating to money matters and make all Drafts and Money orders payable to W. I. PHILLIPS, Treas.

5. Address all communications intended for publication to the Editor of the Christian Cynosure.

6. Address all letters relative to the general management of the Cynosure suggesting changes, additions, omissions, or plans for increasing its circulation, etc., to J. P. STODDARD.

7. Put the name Christian Cynosure upon every envelope and so advertise the paper.

By giving a little attention to the above, you will relieve your employees of much inconvenience and save time and expense that otherwise must be paid for with your money.

THE HOME.

"I WILL COME AGAIN."

Thou art coming, oh, my Saviour,
Thou art coming, oh, my King!
Every tongue thy name confessing,
Well may we rejoice and sing.

Thou art coming! Rays of glory
Through the veil thy death has rent
Gladden now our pilgrim pathway,
Glory from thy presence sent.

Thou art coming—not a shadow,
Not a mist, and not a tear;
Not a sin and not a sorrow
On that sunrise grand and clear.

Thou art coming! Jesus, Saviour,
Nothing else seems worth a thought;
Oh, how marvelous the glory
And the bliss thy pain hath brought!

Thou art coming! We are waiting
With a hope that can not fail,
Asking not the day or hour,
Anchored safe within the veil.
Thou art coming! Thou art coming!
Jesus, our beloved Lord;
Oh, the joy to see these reigning,
Worshipped, glorified, adored!
Thou art coming! Thou art coming!
We shall meet thee on the way,
Thou art coming! We shall see thee,
And be like thee on that day.

THE SILENCE OF THE SCRIPTURE.

In an address before the Bible Society, in Exeter Hall, London, May 5, 1875, Dr. Wm. M. Punshon said:

"The silence of Scripture may be quoted as an evidence of its inspiration. It is silent by design. The subjects upon which Scripture is silent are precisely those which irreverent curiosity would fain probe to the uttermost. We ask about the dead; what are the conditions of their existence in the world to which they are gone, and in that Paradise which is but a suburb of heaven? We do not know; the Word is silent . . . There is a tendency to leave old beliefs behind, and press to some imagined beyond of truth that nobody has ever yet tracked. And it is considered a proof of manliness to have outgrown the faith of our childhood. But men are dying, and if the old faith be true—and in no battle-field has it ever been worsted yet—they go somewhere. Yes, and we are dying too; and are we to have no fringe upon the cloud of the sepulchre? Are we to pass away, as we must do, if you take from us our Bible, with the cheerless conviction that life is a balance of chances, and that death is a leap in the dark, and all this when we may be at any moment summoned into a glory that is richer than golden? There is a great deal of impermanence attaching to all human systems of teaching; but the truth that God has written remains upon the face of the rock undefaced and permanent forever. 'The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of the Lord endureth forever.'"

If the silence of Scripture in these matters is good evidence of divine inspiration, then the vain talk of many teachers affords convincing evidence of their lack of that gift. For there are those who will tell us more about the condition of the dead in one sermon, than we can find in the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation. If any one desires to know the full particulars concerning the condition of those who have died, we would refer them to the pages of almost any modern hymn-book, where they will find all the details. But if they only seek to know what God has revealed, they will have to content themselves with statements far less elaborate, but vastly more trustworthy.

It would seem most desirable that Christian ministers should confine themselves, in preaching, within the limits bounded by inspired revelation. Where God's word is silent, they should be silent; where the Lord speaks, they should speak also. But if they conform to this rule, they will say little about death, and much about the resurrection; nothing at all about preparing for death, but much about the coming of the Lord to judge the world in righteousness, as the great motive which should influence human action.

Unfortunately, this is not the line of thought which many preachers pursue. They talk much of those things concerning which Scripture is silent, and little of those things where the testimony of Scripture is full and explicit. One familiar with the writings of Plato would almost think, while listening to some modern sermons, that the old philosopher had appeared again; while he would find but faint intimations of the doctrine of Jesus and the resurrection, as taught by Christ and the apostles.

Says Dr. Adam Clarke in his notes on 1 Cor. 15: "One remark I cannot help making; the doctrine of the resurrection appears to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive Christians than it is now! How is this? The apostles were continually insisting on it, and exciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience and cheerfulness, through it. And their successors in the present day seldom mention it! So apostles preached, and so primitive Christians believed; so we preach, and so our hearers believe. There is not a doctrine in the Gospel on which more stress is laid; and there is not a doctrine in the present system of preaching which is treated with more neglect."

In proportion as men preach that which the Lord has not revealed, they will neglect that which he has taught in his Word. If they will be content with the Lord's silence they will then be in a position to proclaim the Lord's Word. But if they undertake to be wiser than he is, they will doubtless find in the end that "the foolishnessof God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men."

PARADE AND WORK.

Parade and pomp have a great deal of influence in this world, but permanent results are accomplished by hard work. A thousand men equipped in all the glory of fuss and feathers, may strut around the streets, and march up the hill and then march down again, while the newspapers may report what a great time they had, and what great things they have done; but one little, barefooted, sunburnt boy, hoeing all day in the cornfield, may, when the harvest comes, have more to show as the result of his day's labor, than all the plumed paraders who so attracted the public gaze.

It will be found that a very large proportion of the real work done for God and humanity in this world, is accomplished by these quiet and presistent workers, who make no reports, who are never seen on dress parade, but who still keep toiling on, seeking to finish the work that God has given them to do.

Great discoveries are not made by men in crowds; useful inventions are not produced in mass-meetings; the world is not run by resolutions, nor are souls saved by great societies and associations. The Lord has given to "every man his work," and in the day of judgment, the question will be, not how many organizations you have joined, or how much money you have subscribed and contributed, but what you have personally done in the cause of the Master. Annual reports will count but very little when the great God of heaven shall summon man to render up the last account. In that day, it will be found that every man shall bear his own burden; that no crowds will hide from the gaze of the all-seeing eye, and that each must meet his own individual responsibility, in the presence of the Judge of quick and dead. Blessed are they who in that hour shall hear the Master say, "Well done!"—The Christian.

NOT A SOUL SAVED.

It is not enough that a man be serene in his life, that he has not injured his neighbor, that he has been devoted to mental and literary pursuits, that he has made a name in literature. All this may consist with real and entire selfishness. Take the case of Thoreau going off from his fellow men, retiring to a board shanty on the edge of Walden Pond, to see how cheaply and simply he could live. Was there any nobility in this? any love? any self-sacrifice for the good of others? Shall we venture to apply a similar test to Mr. Emerson? Cultivated, learned, acute, suggestive, serene, personally pure-minded, yet whose burdens did he lift? whom did he reclaim from sin? how much of the divine fire of self-sacrifice burned in his soul and flamed in his life?—Nat. Baptist.

THE Christian life is the life of a saved man, not the effort of an unsaved man to get saved. We do not try to do good in order to get a new nature, but we try to do good because we have received a new nature. We profess to be followers of Him "who went about doing good," (Acts x. 38); and he says to us, "As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you," (John xx. 21). Jesus was sent to make known the unseen God; we are sent to make known the otherwise hidden, adorable, and loving Jesus; not by word only, but also by our conduct; and He is with His people to make Himself known through them.—Selected.

THANKFUL.—One woman for twenty-six years—we know the fact—with cramps of rheumatism, had lain upon a bed, suffering continually. She had lost the use of every limb. She had not seen the sunlight, except the little that streamed into the window, for all these years. She hadn't seen for years a green blade of grass or a green leaf, and as you climbed up the rickety stairs and got into a garret you would hear a cheerful voice, and what would she tell you? Ask her about her state, and she would say, "Oh, I am so thankful." Thankful for what? For the use of one thumb, because, with a little hook fastened upon the thumb, she could turn over the leaves of a Bible that would be placed within her reach, and helpless, and suffering, and poor as she was, she was thankful.—John B. Gough.

THE female members of our churches have other duties besides going to the ladies' prayer-meetings; one of which may possibly be to avoid display in dress at church. One of the finest things we have for a long time heard was the remark that a certain lady saves the congregation where she worships ten thousand dollars a year! A woman of wealth and of high social culture and position, she yet makes it a rule to dress for church in a manner so plain and inexpensive as to throw her whole influence against any undue expenditure in that direction, thus helping to make everybody feel satisfied to attend Sabbath worship with such, and only such outlay as can be afforded. Such women are greatly needed in many congregations, and the good which they may thus accomplish is beyond estimate, especially in these times, when so many in every community are obliged to exercise the closest economy.—Congregationalist.

HEALTH HINTS.

HEADACHES.

This affection is more or less usual to all classes, but, with the almost necessary appendage of cold feet, it is especially a female disease. The head may ache like the arm, the eyes or the stomach, when deranged or overtasked. There can be no such difficulty without a definite and adequate cause. Among these causes, and perhaps the most prominent, is a derangement of the stomach, a foul stomach, with an almost necessary derangement of the bowels. The stomach is so in sympathy with the brain as well as with the liver and bowels, that it is impossible for one to be made out of order without some corresponding derangement in one or both of the others. And here it is but just to say that such a foul stomach is not purified by medicines alone, though they may aid, especially for the time, as when emetics or cathartics are given. But they will become foul again and produce the same results, if they are treated as before. If they are foul from being overtaxed, either by too much food, more than they can properly dispose of, or if such derangement is the result of taking improper food, so difficult of digestion that a part necessarily remains undigested and must rot, that is the right word, and in the right place. The use of medicines, the proper ones, will afford only a temporary relief, not a cure. If the cause remains, the result remaining also. Remove the cause and the resulting disease is removed. Care in this matter in time of meals, securing regularity, quantity, quality, simple, with no lunches, especially at bed time will do much to improve the stomach even if no medicine is taken. An occasional fast passing over the last meal also, when there is no special appetite, will aid in the improvement.

The headache may also be caused by too much labor, both physical and mental, too much care, anxiety, too much sitting up late, both for reading flashly literature and "mending stockings," all fatiguing the brain and of course producing an unpleasant sensation. It may also be the result of certain other diseases peculiar to females, which must first be removed before a permanent cure of the headache is effected.

The cure by medicines is not as sure, or so certain, or so permanent as when done by the adoption of proper habits by the removal of the causes, since prevention is always easier and cheaper than cure. If for example, physic is taken to remove one of the causes, constipation of the bowels, a relief is secured for a few days it may be, but the constipation always is aggravated by each dose of a cathartic, if necessary aggravating the headache. If the constipation is a cause of the headache, and that is increased by each and every dose both proving worse and worse, it is difficult to conjecture when the headache may disappear by that treatment. On the contrary the adoption of a coarser diet, so well calculated to remove the cause will be far more hopeful in the cure of the effect, indeed, in all cases, the important consideration is in reference to the cause or causes, the removal of which will generally remove the effect.

There are many efforts made to remove or cure the headache, not dictated by common sense or by common prudence. Among these is the cruel custom of harsh applications of very cold water or of ice; showering the head by allowing cold water to fall from a distance, striking the head violently. In general terms, it is safe to treat the human body tenderly, and this is especially true of the head and brain. But it is perfectly safe and judicious to use water of a comfortable temperature for a bath, but still better to wet a cloth and wrap the whole head in several thicknesses with only a slight covering of dry flannels, cooling the head slowly and gradually till the head is permanently cooled, thus avoiding the reaction and consequent increase of the heat almost certain in the other treatment.

Again, others use amonia, camphor, etc., the first of which is especially harsh and can do no permanent good, since it removes no cause, only so far irritates certain surfaces as to divert or confuse the direct attack. All such harshness must do harm in some way present or in the future.

It is proper also to say that cold feet attend this affection from a want of a good circulation of the blood in the extremities, with an over supply at the brain. To warm the feet, therefore, and cool the head must mitigate the sufferings, while the real cure should be effected by the removal of all causes by regulating the stomach and bowels, using a plain, course diet, avoiding overwork of all kinds, and exercising in the open air.—Dr. J. H. Hanaford.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

STORIES OF MY BOYS.—II.

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

Down into the coal cellar Harvey made his way after receiving that cruel blow—where no one could see him or hear him or think he was swearing, and clasping both his hands tightly while tears rained over his face he cried out:

"Oh, Lord, I'm so dreadful thankful to thee that I didn't topple over bein' as I was afraid o' the master"—then finding a space somewhat free from coal dust knelt down and went on,—"O God, be my father. I can't help it if dad was a drunkard, nor I can't help it if my mother—she was a thousand times more like a white rose, nor my mistress here—I can't help it now though I tried to then, if she did grow thinner every day 'cause she hadn't enough to eat, and died at last. I can't help it if I was jest a vagabond—but please, Lord in heaven, be my father—I hope it says somewhere in the Book that he'll look after chaps like me; for oh, 'pears to me I'd give all the world 'gin I had it if I could be certain sure that thou, O Lord, would allus stan' by me like you did then. I'll mind what the Book tells me fur's I'm able, an' I'll do all I can to make others mind it—though if I wan't such a fool as Joe and the mistress allus says, it stands to sense I could do more! But please, O Lord, be my father;" and then into the boy's heart came such a feeling of gladness that for a moment he stood so still you might have heard his heart beat. Reader, you and I know what that gladness meant; and he knew afterward.

Going up into the kitchen he found, sitting by the fire, not the cook, but Joe's spinster aunt. She looked at him sharply as he came in and drawing a chair near her own bade him be seated.

"I want to talk with you my boy," she said kindly; and then after a moment's pause asked abruptly, "What do you intend to be when you become a man?"

The question startled him and he looked about with a frightened air, then like one who has an unwelcome or unpleasant statement to make, he said: "I dunno ma'am; how should I know? If so be's I wan't a fool, as they says, an' hed the larnin'—an' oh how I want the larnin', ma'am. I'd like to stan' up straight like the preacher to my church does, and beg o' people to mind what the Book says. But I'll never be that o' course, ma'am"—and the boy looked up with a flushed face.

"You're not a fool," said the lady kindly. "You know quite as much as other boys, but you should go to school that that knowledge might be drawn out and you'd know how to use it. You'd like to go to school?'

"O ma'am, if I only could!" and the dull gray eyes grew bright for a moment. "But I can't, o' course, so there's no use wishin'."

"Well," said the lady as she arose from her seat, "are you trying to obey the teachings given you in the Sabbath school?"

"As much as I know, I be, ma'am."

"That is well. And do you know it says in the Bible, 'When my father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up?"

"No, ma'am. Does it say that, sure?"

"It does."

"I thought it must say suthin' like that," said Harvey to himself as the lady left the room. "Now ain't that queer!"

OLD BOOKS.

"There is nothing to read," said a young girl, in a house which was overflowing with books. Her quiet Aunt Lottie, looking up from her sewing, gave a significant glance at the well-filled shelves where rows of volumes stood in friendly company, at the table were several magazines and two or three prettily-bound stories lay together, and then at her niece with the despairing face as she uttered her exclamation.

"Well, Aunt Lottie, I have read all the interesting parts of the magazines; and as for the books in the library, they are all so old. I like new books."

"Even if the old are better?" said Aunt Lottie. "Kathie, dear, if you could go back with me to my girlhood, and get so hungry for reading as I used to, you would never disdain your father's library."

"Tell me about it," said Kathie, taking the strip of canvas on which she was working a lambrequin for the mantle, and seating herself on a low chair near her aunt.

"We had the Bible, dear. Indeed, we each had our own special Bible, and father had Scott's and Henry's Commentaries. Then we had the "Dairyman's Daughter" and "The Shepherd of Salisbury Plain," "The Pilgrim's Progress," Doddridge's "Rise and Progress," Baxter's "Call and Saint's Rest," and Owen on "Spiritual Mindedness;" also Hervey's "Meditations," and Pollok's "Course of time," and two or three volumes of Walter Scott, who was then a quite recent writer, with Milton's "Paradise Lost," and Shakespeare. There, I believe I have mentioned all our list. There was not one of them, dear, in which at your age I had not read often and deeply."

"Commentaries, Baxter and all?" said Kathie, a look of incredulity stealing over her face.

"Even so my little child. And sometimes when I hear you complaining that you have nothing to read, I tremble for the intellectual poverty which cannot enjoy Scott, Milton, and Shakespeare."

"Four of us girls,—Amy Benson, Maggie Elmore, Alice Cuthill, and I, are thinking of meeting every week to read together," said Kathie. "We expect to read and work,—one reading aloud. It might be a good idea to take up some of these old books, instead of what we had proposed—stories from the circulating library."

"I would advise your making the trial," said Aunt Lottie, "though I have not a great opinion of these reading circles myself. I like a quiet room and a book's company with nobody to disturb me. But, Kathie, before you again declare there is nothing here for entertainment or instruction, take down and read some of the old books."—Intelligencer.

ANECDOTE OF A SPIDER.

A fine old English gentleman, [Mr. Moggridge,] with abundant leisure for studies in natural history, has written a very entertaining book on insects, in one chapter of which, as a critic asserts, he "elevates the character of the spider." It is pleasant, at any rate, to know that he has found out enough about the creature's feelings to elevate science in the direction of mercy. The story is briefly as follows: Moggridge had been in the habit of immersing for preservation his different specimens of spiders and ants in bottles of alcohol. He saw that they struggled for a few minutes; but he thought that the sensation was soon extinguished, and they were soon free from suffering. On one occasion he wished to preserve a large female spider and twenty-four of her young ones that he had captured. He put the mother into a bottle of alcohol, and saw that after a few moments she folded her legs about her body and was at rest. He then put into the bottle the young ones, who of course manifested acute pain. What was his surprise to see the mother arouse herself from her lethargy, dart around to and gather her young ones to her bosom, fold her arms around them, and again relapse into insensibility, until at length death came to her relief, and the limbs, no longer controlled by this maternal instinct, relaxed their grasp and became dead. The effects of the exhibition upon him is a lesson to our common humanity. He has applied chloroform before immersion. Judging from the above, the spider is certainly superior to the human animal, in the fact that alcohol does not destroy her natural affection.

STRUGGLES AGAINST BAD PARENTAGE.

It is no great thing if a man who has been carefully nurtured by intelligent parents and then passed through school, college, and those additional years of professional study, go directly to the front. But start a man amid every possible disadvantage, and pile in his way all possible obstacles, and then if he take his position among those whose path was smooth, he must have the elements of power. Henry Wilson was great in the mastering and overcoming all disadvantageous circumstances. He began at the bottom, and without any help fought his own way to the top. If there ever was a man who had a right at the start to give up his earthly existence as a failure that man was Henry Wilson. Born of a dissolute father, so that the son took another name in order to escape the disgrace; never having a dollar of his own before he was 21 years of age; toiling industriously in a shoemaker's shop that he might get the means of schooling and culture; then loaning his money to a man who swamped it all and returned none of it; but still toiling on and up until he came to the State Legislature, and on and up till he reached the American Senate; and on up until he became Vice President. In all this there ought to be great encouragement to those who wake up late in life to find themselves unequipped. Henry Wilson did not begin his education until most of our young men think they have finished theirs. If you are 25 or 30, or 40 or 50, it is not too late to begin. Isaac Walton, at 90 years of age wrote his valuable book; Benjamin Franklin, almost an octogenarian, went into philosophic discoveries; Fontenelle's mind blossomed even in the winter of old age; Arnauld made valuable translations as 80 years of age; Christopher Wren added to the astronomical and religious knowledge at 86 years of age.—Sunday Magazine.

The coldest place on earth is Verkoyansk, in Siberia, lying in sixty-seven and one-half degrees north latitude, on the river Yana. Its lowest mean winter temperature is forty-eight and six-tenths degrees below zero, Centigrade.

A New York man has $100,000 invested in the gathering of stale bread from the hotels of that city, grinding it into food for pigs and poultry. He employs nine teams in the business. He pays the Astor House, for instance $800 a year for its stale bread.

TEMPERANCE.

One of the signs of the growth of a general demand for non-intoxicating beverages is the reported acquisition of a herd of cows by one of the great English railway companies, in order to supply fresh milk to travellers on their line.

A son of the late President Tyler was lately arrested in Washington for drunkenness. "Although a poor, besotted creature," says a Syracuse Journal correspondent, "he is one of the most courtly and polished men, in demeanor and conversation, to be found in Washington. One who has not seen him accept an invitation to take a drink, and the air with which he will take it, has never seen a true Virginia gentleman of the real old style."

Being a liberal rewarder of capital it is natural to inquire what it does for labor? Being boastful of its benefactions bestowed upon the persons it employs, one naturally looks for large returns to his employes. But what do we find? For every dollar paid by the capital invested in liquors to the laboring classes, each of all the other branches of industry pay on an average $7.41. For example out of every $100 spent for boots and shoes, $22.85 goes into the pockets of labor. The same amount spent for clothing, furniture or hardware, or for cotton, woolen or worsted goods, remunerates labor in amounts ranging from $22.75 to $12.98, the average being $14.38. One hundred dollars spent for intoxicating liquors benefits labor only to the extent of $1.94.—Judge Irwin.

The city of Millville, N. J., supported twenty grog-shops some years ago, and drunkenness abounded on every hand. Eleven years ago the voters elected officers who refused license, and after a hard struggle banished the dram-shops. A population of 8,000 are now sober, prosperous and happy. The glass factories of Whitall, Tatum & Co., employing 1,500 hands, are located here, and a member of the firm recently said: "Prohibition is worth to us as a firm at least ten thousand dollars a year in the general regularity of the men at their work. Another man said: "I have been connected with these works for more than twenty years. I know the employes; their condition is vastly improved since prohibition went into effect. Nobody learns to drink in our town now.'—Nat. Temp. Advocate.

A sensible and beneficent temperance reform is gradually but surely making its way in a direction in which it was greatly needed. Formerly, in all the great steamships upon the Atlantic rations of grog were issued to crews. Now the leading companies are one after the other changing the ration of grog to a ration of coffee. The Cunard company has just made this wholesome substitution, and it is a pleasure to find that captains of the steamers of this old established line have nearly all a good word to say for the sensible as well as salutary departure. Captain McMickan, of the Bothnia, says that "undoubtedly the men will be better off without the grog." But, besides the steamers of the Cunard, those of the Guion line no longer furnish grog, while the Inman company abandoned the practice six months ago. It is stated that the earnest and well directed efforts of the Church of England Temperance society have been exerted to effect this change. If so it is an encouragement to all similar organizations clerical or lay, to persevere in the direction of so desirable and so necessary a reform.—Chicago Daily News.

Drunkards are suffering in the rural counties of Wisconsin, where the Local Option law of the State enables the total abstinence people to vote down the sale of intoxicants. Heretofore the traffic has been continued out of sight, but now the railroad companies have prohibited their employes from taking liquor as freight, and the dealers can therefore obtain only very limited supplies.

A letter from India reports that one of the serious obstacles to the work of teaching the children of the poor is the increasing intemperance of the lower classes in Bengal. Within a few years the price of intoxicating liquor has become so low, and the manufacture of it so general, that even the women and the children are forming intemperate habits. Ten years ago, the writer says, an intoxicated woman or child was never seen, but now the sight is common. Not unfrequently the schools are broken up by a drunken row, and the children are sometimes found too drunk to read. The schools have to be moved in some instances, in order to get the pupils away from the sight and stench of the public stills.

Ireland's drink bill for one year is $50,000,000. Absentee landlords, accounted one of her greatest curses, draws annually from the people but $25,000,000. Mr. Villars Stuart, M. P. for Waterford, made the statement lately in Dublin: "One-half the amount of what is annually spent for drink in Ireland would, if annually applied for the purpose, buy in fifteen years the fee simple of all the farms in Ireland."

From Carlsbad, a fashionable watering place in Germany, one writes: "Nothing could be stricter than the rules here in regard to eating and drinking. This one may eat no fruit, that one no meat. One may drink, no beer, another no wine. Most of them, indeed, drink neither. I know of one young man who walked five miles up the Valley of the Tepel in search of a glass of beer one warm afternoon, because at all the different roadside inns at which he stopped he saw people drinking only coffee or mineral water, and being a stranger to the place, fancied there must be some German variety of the "local option" law, and that he had gotten into a temperance neighborhood. And so he had. And it is this temperance, enforced by precept and example, which makes of Carlsbad the admirable health-resort which it is, quite as much as its hot springs. One could not be dissipated here even if he wished it."

REFORM NEWS.

THE CHICAGO ASSOCIATION.

A well attended and spirited business meetiug of the Chicago Christian Association was held in the office of the N. C. A. Tuesday evening, January 9th. W. I. Phillips presided. Rev. Mr. Fenton at present engaged in Christian work in the city, reported a large number of the Weed pamphlet and reform tracts left at private residences and given to passengers on some of the outgoing trains, The report included a visit to Union and Morgan Park Theological Seminaries and the Chicago University, where a supply of anti-secrecy literature was eagerly sought after and absorbed by the students. The Band of Hope in charge of Mrs. E. A. Cook, and meeting at her home for the past year, was reported to be in a flourishing con dition and likely, ere long, to outgrow its present quarters.

An event calculated to give impetus to the anti-secrecy reform in this city and State is under advisement, viz., the holding of a mass meeting either in Farwell or Central Music Hall during the day and evening of the anniversary of Washington's birthday. General Agent and Lecturer Stoddard being present, volunteered some very interesting statements relative to the "move on Washington."

SECRETARY.

TRACT WORK IN WASHINGTON.

I met Bro. Doualdson several times while in Washington, and saw and heard nothing but good of him. In my judgement, he does uot overstate his case. We shall forward a supply or tracts for his use: and will add that the way to keep this work going in Washington aud other places, is to send in funds for the free tract work. His letter appears herewith. J. S. P.

NATIONAL DEAF MUTE COLLEGE,

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9th, 1883. I am out every day going from house to house, taking street after street, with tracts exposing these sceret orders. I am at this work month after month, and need to be supplied with tracts continually. Please give this a corner in the Cynosure, and oblige your brother in Christ Jesus, dead to the things in this world, GEO. W. DONALDSON.

NOBLY DONE.

TROY, Madison Co., Ill., Jan. 1, 1883.

Although I have been a traveling preacher in the M. E, church for twenty-seven years, yesterday I preached my first sermon directly in opposition to Freemasonry. We had a good congregation, Masons, Anti-masons, and neutrals. We had also a quiet respectful hearing—could not ask for better. True, I saw the color come and go often in many faces: but never saw a better behaved audience. I did not handle the question tenderly either. Two weeks in advance notice was given that I would preach on Masonry at that time, and the next day after a missile was thrown through the parsonage window, not two feet from my head as I sat reading, which sent the broken glass all over me, and nearly all over the house. An old brother laughingly says, "That's Masonic argument." But really, I don't think the Masons had anything to do with it. I have a better opinion of my neighbors than that, but it will do for a joke. Of course we do not know who did it, perhaps never will, but think it must have been some thoughtless boy who did it by accident. If anything farther comes of it I will post you. R. W. LAUGHLIN.

LETTERS FROM KANSAS.

PRES. BLANCHARD AT SABETHA.

Tuesday evening, January 2nd, at an early hour Slosson's Hall was filled with a large and respectable audience. Rev. John Thomson was elected chairman and J. W. Margrave of Hiawatha, secretary. After singing and prayer offered by Rev. Mr. Shaw, the chairman introduced Pres. Blanchard to the audienee, who proeeeded to address them on some of the evils of secret societies.

The next evening, January 3rd, the meeting opened with a short season of social prayer; after which Pres. Blanchard began his address, the subject being a continuation of the former evening.

On Friday evening January 5th, the same speaker delivered an address on the present relation of the political parties. After a short prayer meeting, he took the stand and spent about half an hour in answering some objections to his former lectures. He then proceeded to the subject of the evening. The audience was not as large as on the former evenings, probably ou account of the extremely cold weather. He preached Saturday evening in the M. E. church by the invitation of the presiding elder; and in the Congregational church on Sabbath evening.

His visit has done much good here. Intelligent people outside of the lodge are beginning to think aud examine for themselves. Honest Masons are learning that we are not opposing them, but the institution. As for the professional Hiramites, they find it hard work to bring up a sepulchral laugh when they are not tickled.

JOHN THOMSON.

AT OLATHE.

President Blanchard when here gave us two sermons on Sabbath, both relating to Masonry, and lectured on Monday night to a large congregation, bringing the secrecy question forcibly and clearly before the public.

Ever since the Masons are mad and threaten meu whom they think are leaders in the reform in this place. So it seems they love to pelt my poor self. These sermons and the lecture were plain and severe, and given in the midst of a revival meeting in the Wesleyan church; nevertheless the revival went on and still is in progress with much good accomplished.

The religion of Masonry and the religion of Christ are so different that you may preach and pray against the religion of Masonry and it will advance the religion of Christ. As bringing a light into a dark room, as the light enters the darkness vanishes.

The reform work goes ou here beyond our most sanguine hopes. Our dear brother Feemster is faithfully working in the State; and we soon expect brother Starry of Iowa to join him in the degree work, thus our State will soon be organized to do effective work. Truth is mighty and will prevail, but must be supported with energy and effort. H. CURTIS.

MICHIGAN, AWAKE!

FRIENDS OF THE AMERICAN PARTY:—Do you know that Michigan is doing almost nothing for our great and righteous reform? The fields are all "ripe for the harvest" and waiting for the reapers. Thurlow Weed's revelation of the Masonic murder of Morgan has been read and pondered by scores of thousands. They are ready to hear as never before; but there is no one abroad to tell them what they would gladly hear of the evils of Masonry. We have with us a Masonic seceder, a first-class lecturer, who has been compelled to leave the field for lack of support, and turn to other avocations for the support of his family. I refer to one brother, Elder A. H. Springsteiu of Pontiac, who is a true and tried veteran in our reform.

It is well nigh a crime to compel one so well qualified to leave the field at a time when the demand for labor is so urgent. Brother Springstein has done much unpaid work for the cause. But for his family's sake he can do it no more. He is ready to enter the field at once if the friends will give him aid. He needs a hundred dollars to give him a start, but will commence at once if he can be assured of support. One friend has given a tenth of the hundred and will give another if necessary. Who will give other tens or fives, or less, if unable to give more.

Please respond at once. Direct to Elder A. H. Springsteed, box 605, Pontiac, Michigan, or to me at 88 Columbia street, West Detroit, Mich. C. C. FOOTE, Treasurer.

REV. A, H. SPRINGSTEIN writes from Pontiac, Mich., under date of Jan. 10th:—"Next week I am to start out for a strong pull for unpopular truth. On the 21st I am to be in Ingham County, and on the 24th at Grand Ledge; the intermediate time to be filled up with evening meetings. Ever since the Holly convention I have prayed, and groaned, and cried to God not to let the enemy hedge up the way forever. The way seems to be opening, Woe to those who are false to the trust God has given them, "to those who shun responsibility!" These earnest words backed by active efforts will be an inspiration to to others; and the shout of onward from Kansas, Iowa, and from all along the the line of a general onward movement, will be echoed in hearty amens from many hearts loyal to Christ, and satisfied with the old paths of Bible holiness and equal rights before the law.

Many Odd-fellows do not know what benefits they are entitled to by the rules of the lodge, and when questioued confess their ignorance. Some of them talk vaguely about their widows and orphans being cared for, but on reflection they can recall no eases where anything more than temporary relief was rendered and that only in exceptional cases.

JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with book of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE VOTE BY STATES.

We have given the report of the American vote in Illinois at the last election, 139 ballots being cast for State Treasurer. The Secretary of State for Iowa reports the following vote for the Iowa State ticket:

A. W. Hall, for Secretary of State, 305.
Wm. Elliott, for Auditor, 30.
M. Springsteed, for Treasurer, 293.
Jacob W Rogers, for Attorney General, 290.
Joseph P. Ferguson, for Judge Sup. Court, 299.
W. P. Norris, Clerk Sup. Court, 286.

The official report from Michigan is as follows:

Chas. C. Foote, Governor. 343.
Lewis I. Wicker, Lieu't. Governor, 285.
Jacob O. Doesburg, Secretary of State, 325.
Geo. Swanson, Treasurer, 342.
Wm. Wing, Auditor General, 314.
Geo. W. Clark, Com. Land office, 332.
Henry C. Platt, Attorney General, 327.
Wm. H. Ross, Supt. Public Instruction, 326.
Hardy A. Day, State Board of Educatiou, 314.

Henry D. Inman received 90 votes in the Fifth district for Congressman.

In Connecticut the vote is recorded thus:

George P. Rogers. for Governor, 1034.
William S. Williams, Lieut. Goveruor, 1026.
Isaac J. Gilbert, Secretary of State, 14.
Edmund Tuttle, Treasurer, 5.
Joseph S. Perry, Comptroller, 13.

Probably the large vote for Governor and Lieutenant Governor is due to their nomination by some other party also. While this record is not so large by far as could be desired, it yet proves that a sentiment is forming that will in due time be felt at every polling place in the land.

IOWA IN PARTICULAR.

CLARENCE, Iowa, Dec. 29, '82.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—As I have seen but very little iu the Cynosure in regard to the number of American tickets polled in Iowa at the late election, I have taken upon myself the responsibility of ascertaining the exact number polled in the State. There are ninety-nine counties in Iowa. Americau tickets were voted in twenty counties, leaving seventy-nine where there was not a single American ticket voted. I will give the names of the twenty counties in alphabetical order and the number of American votes polled in each: Adams, 4; Bremer, 1; Carroll, 1; Cedar, 26; Chickasaw, 3; Delaware, 13; Fayette, 13; Fremout, 2; Iowa, 7; Jasper, 12; Jefferson, 19; Jones, 8; Kossuth, 1; Louisa, 18; Marshall, 25; Page, 18; Ringgold, 8; Van Buren, the banner couuty of the State, 106; Wapello, 4; Washington, 16. Total for the whole State of Iowa 305.

I would say a few words in regard to this vote but I eannot do the subject justice. I will just call the attention of the Iowa voters, who claim to be Anti-masons, to the above list, and as they read the number of American votes polled in their respective counties that they will humbly pray that a year hence the number will be many times multiplied; and, when election day comes again, walk up to the polls and practice what they preach. I should like to see reports from all the States in the Union and know the whole number of American votes cast in the country. Perhaps there were some American votes cast in other counties and the county canvassers gave no account of them. If there were any in counties not named I wish they would make it known through the Cynosure.

KANSAS POLITICAL MEETING.

Thursday, Dec., 21, 1882, at 2 o'clock P. M., the Kansas friends met in political convention at Emporia. A. M. Thompson, Esq., of Kansas City, was chosen chairman, and M. N. Butler, secretary. Motion for political action called out considerable discussion. R. Loggan advised action. P. S. Feemster thought it time to begin to act as well as pray. J. A. Collins did not altogether approve of present action. W. W. McMillan belonged to a church peculiar on political action; did he believe in voting, he should consider himself criminal did he not act. Believed there were only two or three others holding as he did. Dr. J. Blanchard made appropriate and practical remarks favoring immediate action. H. Curtis, Esq., of Olathe, J. Alexander, A. M. Thompson and others spoke encouragingly.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this convention it is expedient to take the question of Anti-masonry to the polls in the State of Kansas.

Resolved, That a State Central Committee of three be appointed with a general oversight of this political movement and instructed to attend the Prohibition Convention soon to convene at Topeka, to present our cause and to propose to them that we will support their candidates if such candidates are unobjectionable.

Resolved, That we endorse the American platform and recommend its circulation.

Resolved, That we heartily endorse the nominations of the Galesburg Convention, and proceed at once to work for their success in 1884.

The committee appointed to visit the Topeka convention were A. M. Thompson of Kansas City; H. Curtis, Olathe; and R. Loggan, Clifton.

M. N. BUTLER, Sec.

THE CHURCHES.

—President Blanchard preached to the College church, Wheaton, on Sabbath. His evening discourse was on the progress of the temperance reform in Kansas.

—Eleven colleges are represented in the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Allegheny City, Pa.

—Secretary Stoddard visited the Tonica church, and assisted there in a communion service on the 7th inst.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley, Wesleyan Evangelist, was lately for a few days, at his home, in Wheaton. While there he assisted in the funeral services of Dea. John Christie of the College church. He is now assisting Bro. W. W. Warner, at Oakfield, Wis., where he was in December. A hopeful revival is in progress there.

—A glorious work of grace is progressing at Riverton, Freemont county, Iowa, near College Springs, under the care of Bro. A. W. Hall, of the latter place. Twenty-seven have already united with God's people, and some eighty profess conversion.

—A good work also began about the first of this month at Wayne, Iowa, in connection with a visit to that place of Elder Rathbun and his wife. The Congregational church in which this revival began is without a pastor, and Bro. Henry Avery, of College Springs, is regarded with favor as suited to the place.

—At the annual meeting of the society of the Centre Church, Hartford, Conn., on Friday last, attention was called to the fact that the 250th anniversary of the church will occur this year. It was founded in Newton, now Cambridge, Mass., in 1633. The society emigrated in a body to Hartford in 1636, with the pastor, teacher and ruling elder, so that the church is three years older than the Town of Hartford.

—A remarkable affiliation in religious worship was that on Thanksgiving Day in Philadelphia. The Rev. Dr. Magoun preached in the Roder-Shalom Synagogue to a mixed congregation, composed partly of his own Broad street congregation and partly of the regular attendants on the synagogue. Rabbi Jastrow offered prayers in Hebrew and read from the Old Testament Scriptures. Dr. Magoun preached on David, and held up Judaism as the fountain of revelation, containing the germs of all that has been developed into Christian religion.

IS WILLIAM TAYLOR A FREEMASON?

As this question is before the public I will settle it.

About one year ago I asked Mr. Taylor if he was a Freemason. He said that he was not a member of any secret society and never was; and further, that his mission was to preach the gospel and he never said anything about secret societies.

A. H. SPRINGSTEIN.

CHRISTIAN LIBERIA.

The Westminster Review says: "The Americans are successfully planting free negroes on the coast of Africa; a greater event probably in its consequences than any that has occurred since Columbus set sail for the New World."

Of the truth of this strong statement we were impressed on the evening of the 27th ult., while listening to a lecture by Edward S. Morris. He is not a minister of the gospel, nor an African missionary, but a business man of Philadelphia, connected with the late firm of Edward S. Morris & Co., who recognizes fully his allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Society of Friends as his ecclesiastical home.

He came to Pittston, introduced by the following letter from President McCosh, of Princeton College:

"PRINCETON, April 8th, 1880.—Learning that Mr. Edward S. Morris, of Philadelphia, a truly earnest, liberal and devoted friend of the colored race, is engaged in an effort to establish one or more schools for the education of the sons of chiefs in Western Africa, with the intention of having them well instructed ih the English language and in the doctrines of the gospel, and also in useful and varied knowledge of a practical kiad, the undersigned take pleasure in commending his scheme to the candid consideration of all their friends who may feel an interest in this important work; and they do so, trusting that such schools will prove to be valuable auxiliaries to such Christian missions as may be established near them by the different evangelical churches in this country and in Europe."

This letter is signed by the Professors of both the college and the seminary. Letters breathing the same spirit of confidence have been given him by Dr. Storrs, of Brooklyn, Bishop Simpson of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and others.

Arrangements were made to hear Mr. Morris in the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Pittston, and he was greeted by a full house of earnest listeners. While not a popular lecturer he gave us one of the most instructive lectures we have heard on Africa. While not a missionary, he added very largely to our stock of missionary intelligence; and although not ordained to preach the gospel by the laying on of hands, he is doing a work for Africa that is already yielding precious fruit. The same spirit that impelled Livingstone, who died on his knees pleading for Africa, apparently impels this Quaker brother.

Liberia, as is well known, is a Republic on the western coast of Africa, north of the mouth of the Niger River—modeled in all respects after the government of the United States. It extends along the coast about six hundred miles, and back into the country from the coast about two hundred miles, and has a population of one million aboriginal inhabitants and twenty thousand Americo-Liberians. As early as 1861, Mr. Morris had his attention directed to this country from the reports of the Colonization Society, and it was impressed on his heart that he should visit the country and learn for himself something of the wants of Africa and its resources. He went, and after ascending the rivers and visiting all the settlements of Liberia, he came back, but not as the spies sent out to view the Promised Land. He brought a good report and an earnest petition for help to go up and possess the land, not with swords and spears, but with the Bible, the school-book, and the hoe.

It would not be possible for me to give even an outline of his lecture, which was given with maps and specimens of the productions of the country, but if possible, the way may open for him to speak in Scranton within a few months, and on that account I call attention to the subject.

He first spoke of the vast extent of Africa. It contains more square miles of territory than North and South America combined.

2. The Niger Valley, which lies east of Siberia, has a population of fifty millions, and these people who are Mohammedans, are so far as appears, prepared to receive Christian teachings. The seeds of civilization and Christianity have been carried to them from Liberia on the coast. At the present time there is an application from 500,000 of the aboriginal inhabitants to come under the government of Liberia, which application is favorably regarded and will be acted upon this year.

3. Into the town of Timbuctoo, situated on the Niger River, back from the coast near two thousand miles, there come every day as many as five thousand camels loaded with the products of the country. The soil of this whole Niger Valley is fertile. It produces coffee, sugar, cotton, the palm tree, from which palm oil is made, the lime and indigo plant. The coffee plant is indigenous to the soil. Mr. Morris has given special attention to the cultivation of coffee with happy results. Abraham Hansom, late United States Commercial Agent, at Monrovia, writes to him thus: "Be assured that by your public addresses, by your intercourse, and by agitation on the subject of the growth of coffee, etc., you have inspired a confidence, zeal and energy in the minds of Liberian citizens which will put new vigor into their arms and fresh courage into their hearts." In the course of his lecture he held up a piece of steel, six inches long, made from a lump of steel ore which he picked up in the streets of Monrovia. A blacksmith in Norristown hammered out this steel directly from the ore. We have no such ore in our country. The mountains of the Niger Valley abound in it.

4. The aim of Mr. Morris is to provide the means for the education of these people in the industrial arts, and to teach them to make for themselves happy Christian homes. He has already sent out two teachers partly at his own expense, who have commenced their work. This is but the beginning. He is endeavoring to raise money to establish a large school, in which to educate the sons of native chiefs. But I will let him speak for himself: "My object in desiring to educate the sons of chiefs, especially those of the Niger Valley and Soudan, is threefold: First—to answer favorably the request of the chiefs as made to me, i. e., 'You Christ-man teach my boy, he take my place.' Second—the educated sons upon taking authority will not only welcome missionaries to their respective tribes, but will impart the industrial learning also. Third—When the freedmen of America reach their fatherland, they will be received, not by heathen but by Christian kings and chiefs and invited into the interior. It this way methinks Ethiopia can be made suddenly to stretch out her hands unto God."

While not connected with any missionary society, Mr. Morris is doing a work that will help all who are laboring and praying for the spread of the gospel in Africa There is an earnestness in this brother's effort that is suggestive of the work of Dr. Duff from India.—Scranton, Pa., letter.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

The Cynosure is happy to announce herewith a grand list of contributors and correspondents for 1883. To read their letters, study their arguments, compare their experiences, and drink with them at the fountain of truth, even Jesus Christ, will be the noble privilege of the readers of the Cynosure. The following is only a partial list. Arrangements are being made for the enlargement of the circle until it shall include every section of our country:

INTRODUCTION.—Thus far the infant church had enjoyed the favor both of God and man. But this state of things was not designed to last. Opposition and even persecution were essential, not only as a means of moral discipline, but also as a means of outward growth. The new religion was not to be a national or local one, but catholic and ecumenical. In order to attain to this end it must be spread; and in order to be spread, it must be scattered; and in order to be scattered, it must undergo strong pressure from within and from without. The history now presents to us the series of providential causes by which these effects were brought about.—Alexander.

NOTES.

At the hour of prayer, the ninth hour. That is, three P. M. There were two fixed hours for sacrifice and prayer — the morning hour nine A. M., and the evening hour three P. M. (Exod. 29: 41). These, with one at noon, were observed as hours of prayer by the devout Jews, even when absent from Jerusalem and the temple (Ps. 55: 17: Dan. 6: 10). The apostles went up, not to teach (Calvin), nor as a matter of expediency (Chrysostom), nor to commemorate Christ's perfect sacrifice by observing the typical sacrifice of the temple (Hackett), but because they were still Jews as well as Christians, and had not yet learned the full meaning of Christ's declaration that he had fulfilled the law.—Abbott,

Was carried. That is, as Peter and John entered the temple, the cripple was being carried by friends to his accustomed place.—Abbott. This lame man is an image of our natural inability—we must be carried, as long as our feet are without strength. But he who lays us at the most beautiful gate of the temple, which is called Jesus Christ, has in truth carried us to the gate of life and of the power of God; we shall there be assuredly healed.—Gossner.

Laid daily at the gate of the temple. The ancients had no almshouses or hospitals. The poor, the maimed and the sick, who had no means of support, would seek some conspicuous public resort, where they might attract the notice, and obtain the assistance, of the rich. Sometimes, like blind Bartimens, they sat by the side of a public highway; sometimes they were laid by their friends, as Lazarus in the parable, at the gate of a wealthy man.—Pierce. Martial (i. 112) tells us of beggars who were in the habit of sitting at the gate of heathen temples. Chrysostom recommends this practice as regards Christian charities. In the Roman Catholic churches on the Continent of Europe, one or more beggars, usually cripples, constantly sit in the church porch asking charity from all who enter.—Schaff.

And Peter. Could the apostles work miracles when they pleased? Calvin replies, they were so exclusively ministers of the Divine power that they attempted nothing of their own will, and the Lord worked through them whenever it was expedient. Hence it happened they healed one sufferer—not all sufferers promiscuously, for the Holy Spirit guided them here just as in other matters.

Expecting to receive something. This expectation is generally a condition of receiving (Matt. 7: 7, 8), but the gift exceeds the expectation (Ephes. 3: 20), as it did here. Observe the illustration of two phases of faith; in the apostle, a clear knowledge of the benefit to be conferred, and of the divine power of him by whom it would be conferred; in the lame man, only a confidence in the charity of the two unknown, and a vague hope of something, he knew not what. But there was faith in both, in each according to the measure of knowledge.—Abbott.

Silver and gold have I none.—The apostles were afterwards (Acts 4: 34, 35), and probably at this time, stewards of the money sold for poor Christians (Acts 2: 44, 45), but this was not theirs, and it had been entrusted to them for another object. To have given it away would have been a criminal misuse.—Peloubet. When God appears to refuse the objects which we desire, he gives us others that are better. If God were inclined to bestow no better gifts than those which we usually desire, we would never obtain his richest gifts.—Starks.

Every Christian can offer his unconverted friends and neighbors something of infinitely more service to them than silver or gold. He can offer them his Saviour, and point them out the means of obtaining true and enduring riches.—Pierce. Only such as a person has can he give to others. If he has courage, hope, love, goodness, he can infuse them into other souls. If he himself is full of doubts, hate, ill-temper, bad passions, it is these he will impart to those around him, and, by no means, can such an one impart to others the good he has not himself. What a double motive is here for being good, and acquiring all spirituality and virtue, and, above all, for possessing the living Christ, that we may help others to know and love him.—Peloubet.

With them. The most honorable escort which a servant of Christ can obtain, both here below and on high, consists of those souls whom he has been enabled, by the grace of God, to rescue from destruction. O God, how great will be the blessedness of him, who has guided even one soul to thee!—Lange.

Saw him. There was abundance of testimony to the reality of the cure, and that by many persons who had seen the cripple for years. This the Jewish authorities (chap. 4: 16) admit.—Cambridge Bible.

And they knew. The material point here is the unquestioned identity of him who had experienced the cure. Had the miracle been wrought upon a stranger, its moral effect upon others would have been far less than it was when the people universally recognized him as the crippled beggar whom they were accustomed to see lying helpless in a certain spot, and that one of the most public and frequented in the city.—Alexander.

As the lame man . . . . held Peter and John. He held them, not for support, because he was ignorant how to walk, nor for fear, lest the cure was not permanent and he should suffer relapse if he lost them, but from joy and gratitude;—Abbott. Perhaps, as Alford suggests, in the ardor of his gratitude, that he might testify to all who his benefactors were.—Schaff

ILLUSTRATIVE.

The philanthropy of Christianity. The Philanthropies sums up the results of Christian care for the poor, the orphans, little wanderers, insane, sick, foundlings, cripples, drunken outcasts, children, in the United States as amounting to at least $120,000,000 a year. Besides the average length of life has greatly increased. So Christ is doing greater works through his disciples than he did himself on earth.—Peloubet.

THE CONFERENCE.

Elder Joel H. Austin of Goshen, Ind., in speaking first this week makes a good point on the fencing in of lodge members:

If Freemasonry is so good as Masons say it is, will they please tell us of what need there is that it should be hedged around with such terrible penalities to keep its members in the fold. We might as well argue that it was necessary to put a good strong fence around a good pasture to keep the stock in when the pasture outside was very poor. Thus its very oaths and penalties give the lie to its prosession of goodness. What! Freemasonry so good and men have to be threatened with death if they break out? Thus are they kept in this professedly good institution by a great fear.

I ask, is it not a just cause for challenging the vote of a Mason as he has taken the oath of allegiance to the Masonic government. He is declared by Masonic authority to be a foreigner to all governments but that of Masonry, and he regards his obligation binding, of his own free will and accord, now give him the benefit, recognise his disfranchisement, and if he attempts to vote challenge his right.

Walter M. Beden of Hadley, Lapeer county, Mich., who informs us that he was well acquainted with the Masonic "widow Monroe," the same who was at home commonly known as Dr. Jack Lewis, contributes a valuable and interesting reminiscence of his younger days:

"I was not acquainted with Thurlow Weed, yet I was well acquainted with his mother and step father, Solomon Merrick, a seceding Royal Arch Mason, who moved into the neighborhood in the time of the Morgan excitement. As my father was one of the leading Anti-masons of the town his carriage shop was a place of general resort for Anti-masonic discussion. Solomon Merrick one day, sitting by the side of the bench where I was at work, said one of Morgan's books was sent to the lodge of which he was a member with a request that it be examined by the lodge and reported to the Grand Lodge; also that said lodge recommend a course to pursue with Morgan. A committee of three was appointed (of whom Mr. Merrick was one) who reported the book every word correct and recommended that it be made a laugh and ridicule, in which case no one would believe it; but if Morgan was put to death the world would hold it to be true. But before the next lodge night word came that Morgan was sunk in the Niagara river.

Bro. R. A. Stewart of Molino, Tenn., whom some of the dear friends have been aiding in the severe emergency of a fire which destroyed his all, sends warm thanks:

"May the blessing of Israel's God rest on those who forget me not. Bro. K. I want every person's name who sends to my necessity and assure them of my thankfulness. I have lost my property by fire, but it makes me stronger in the faith of the Anti-masonic reform."

Elder Nathan Callender has a pleasant thought, inspired by meeting the editor of the Cynosure:

"Incognito greetings sometimes occur, when the pleasure of greeting is one-sided and possibly less to the one who knows his friend, than it would be were the recognition full and mutual. Such seems to have been the case at Batavia when I, with thrilling interest grasped the hand of my revered friend, Pres. J. Blanchard, knowing whose hand I held, while he, less fortunate in this particular, failed to recognize me. This is no wonder considering that some seven years have passed since we met till then, and the weight of years begin to tell somewhat on me. I only wish that I were worthy of such a commendation from such a source. May be it will tend to inspire me to strive the harder to do and to be more for the glory of God and the good of his dear family—'The church of the first born whose names are written in heaven.'"

Josiah Shaw of Eau Claire, Wis., is an aged brother who sighs and cries for the desolations of Zion:

"I wish I had means and was more able to labor in this reform. It is greatly needed here. Masonry rules and is the driving wheel of all under orders. Billiard tables and saloons abound—three saloons in one building and report says there are two more in the cellar. Hardly a young man but uses tobacco. A boy came into a store and teased for tobacco who could not have been over ten years old. It is evident these temperance orders do no good. We have had them for twenty years and yet intemperance increases; temperance men do not vote their principles."

LITERARY NOTES.

A book entitled "Infidelity Unmasked," published by Rev. Dyer Burgess of West Union, Ohio, in the year 1831, contains some of the strongest testimony against Masonry.

Charles A. Dana and Rossiter Johnson have compiled a work entitled "Fifty Perfect Poems" that has illustrations so singular as to deserve mention. They are vignettes cut on wood, printed on Japanese paper, and delicately pasted upon the printed page, the effect being nearly that of the peculiarly French fashion of mixing etchings and letter-press.

The February number of the North American Review is to contain an article on "The experiment of Universal Suffrage," by Prof. Alexander Winchell; a discussion of "The Revision of Creeds," by clergymen representing six evangelical denominations; a paper entitled "The Decay of Protestantism," by Bishop McQuaid; and a defense of the Standard Oil monopoly, by Senator Camden.

Vick's Floral Guide for 1883 is the same rich treasure for florist and gardener as in past years, only larger and more artistic appointments. Every plant of which a Solomon might speak is pictured with care and accuracy and several colored plates add to the attraction of the pages. But not all the latter are devoted as usual to flowers. Gardening has become such a fine art that a big potatoe, carefully washed and delicately painted forms the subject for a page by itself. Rochester, N. Y.

In the North American Review for January three of the most prominent advocates in this country of the "Revision of Church Creeds," namely, Newman Smyth, Henry Ward Beecher and Lyman Abbott, set forth the grounds upon which such revision is deemed necessary by its advocates. "University Education for Women," a question that just now is being warmly agitated both here and in England, is discussed by Prof. W. Le Gonte Stevens, who, though he zealously advocates the measure, commands the attention and respect of its opponents by the eminent fairness with which he states the adverse arguments. Prof. Isaac L. Rice gives a "Definition of Liberty," deduced from a philosophical study of the phases of political evolution, from the earliest Anglo-Saxon times to the present day. "Bigotry in the Medical Profession," by Dr. David Hunt, is a protest, from the pen of a respected member of the medical profession, against the First Commandment of medical ethics, which forbids association with any but regular practitioners. Finally, Charles T. Congdon, under the singularly apt title of "Adulteration of Intelligence," exposes some of the grave evils to be apprehended from the monopolization of telegraph lines, press associations and influential public journals. ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Frest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry 15 cents each, per dozen $1.25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author,

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. Each of these able writers in clear, forcible language treats the subject in one or more of its varied phases. Rev. David McDill in six chapters treats of 1. "Their Antiquity; 2 Their Secrecy; 3. "Oaths and Promises;" 4. "Profaneness" 5. "Their Exclusiveness;" 6. "False Claims." Prest. Blanchard handles the topic: "Shall Christians join Secret Societies?" in a masterly way, showing clearly that they are all opposed to the genius of Christianity; and Dr. Beecher closes with his Report on Secret Societies, which was adopted by the Congregational Association of Illinois at Ottawa in 1866. In cloth, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.25. Paper cover, 15 cents; per dozen, $1.25

Proceedings of Pittsburgh Convention. Containing Official Reports; Addresses by Rev. D. R. Kerr, T. D., Rev. B. T. Roberts, Rev. G. T. R. Meiser, Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., Prest. J. Blanchard, Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., Rev. Woodruff Post, Rev. Henry Cogswell, Prof. C. A. Blanchard and Rev. W. E. Minutes of the Syracuse Convention. Containing addresses by Rev. B. T. Roberts, Chas. W. Greene, Esq., Prof. C. A. Blanchard, Rev. D. P. Rachbun, Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Mrs. M. E. Gage, Elder J. R. Baird and others. Unpublished Reminiscences of the Morgan Times, by Elder David Bernard; Recollections of the Morgan Trials, as related by Victory Birdseye, Esq., and presented by his daughter, Mrs. C. B. Miller; Secretary's Report; Roll of Delegates; Songs of Mr. G. W. Clark; Paper by Enoch Honeywell; Constitution N. C. A.; Reports of Committees and a Report of the Political Meeting. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Anti-Mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 31 Cynosure tracts In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies; and the dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized secrecy are shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public Those who wish to circulate anti-Masonic Tracts ought to have the book to select from. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—Pension Commissioner Dudley is now busy preparing a list of all pensioners and the nature of their disabilities. It will be sent to Congress before adjournment, and doubtless ordered printed. It will make three large octavo volumes.

—The Senate by a vote of 40 yeas to 15 nays passed the Hoar Presidential-Succession bill, providing that in the case of the death of the President and Vice President a member of the Cabinet shall perform the duties of President temporarily. One amendment provides that the Cabinet officer who shall succeed to the Presidency shall perform the duties of the duties of the office only until the vacancy shall be legally filled.

—The bill for the relief of Fitz John Porter passed the Senate by a nearly party vote. The bill authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Porter to a colonelcy in the regular army, with authority to place him on the retired list, provided that Porter shall receive no pay or compensation for services prior to the passage of the act.

—On Wednesday morning the Newhall House, one of the largest hotels in Milwaukee, was destroyed by fire. Scores of the inmates either perished in the flames or by jumping from the windows. Of 110 guests and sixty-seven employes known to be in the burned hotel, twenty have been identified among the dead and forty-eight are missing. Sixty-seven are known to have been saved, and forty-two are unaccounted for. The bodies of the latter are supposed to be in the ruins, which are being searched by the city authorities.

—On Sunday morning early fire was discovered in the Planters Hotel of St. Louis, but a quick response of the fire department queuched it. Not until three lives were lost and much damage done however.

—It is reported that the new railway from Buffalo to Chicago is really owned by Wm. H. Vanderbilt and he has decided that it shall be accommodated in this city at the freight and passenger depots of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern road.

—According to a statement issued by the United Pipe Lines of Pennsylvania there were 32,859,088 barrels of oil stored in their tanks on Jan. 1, 1883.

—A bill was introduced in the Florida Assembly incorporating the Florida Ship Canal Company, contemplating the construction of a ship canal from the Atlantic to the Gulf of Mexico across the peninsula. The capital stock of the company is fixed at not less than $40,000,000 nor more than $60,000,000.

—The brig Goldfinder, Capt. Stuart, from St. Domingo for Boston, was towed in the Delaware breakwater, having four men frozen to death. The Captain was frostbitten, and only one man was fit for duty.

—The Cape Ann Advocate figures that the 275 barrels of mackerel taken in the Bay of St. Lawrence last year by the schooner Yankee Lass cost the United States by remission duties and interest on the Halifax award not less the $1,400 per barrel.

—A frightful boiler explosion occurred at the No. 1 blast furnace of the Bethlehem, Pa., Iron Company, resulting in the death of four men and a woman and the serious injury of several others. Ten boilers were located over the engine house at an elevation of thirty-five feet. Two of the largest boilers exploded with terrific force, wrecking the interior of the engine house and demolishing nearly half the pattern shop adjoining the engine house. The boiler thrown through the roof of the old mill was hurled 300 feet, and fell among about 100 workmen.

—An explosion occurred in the coal mine of Jones & Nesbitt, Coulterville, Ill. Of twelve persons in the mine at the time but two escaped.

FOREIGN.

—Gladstone has gone to Cannes, France, for his health. He is advised to take complete rest until the meeting of Parliament.

—The British ship British Empire from Shields for Bombay, burned at sea. Ten persons were saved, but two boats, containing the Captain, mate, and fourteen hands, are missing.

—The London courts have given judgment against Charles Bradlaugh in his action against Erskine, Deputy Sergeant-at-arms of the House of Commons, for assault on the occasion of Bradlaugh's attempting to enter the Commons and take a seat as a member after a resolution had been passed prohibiting him from so doing.

—The Government of India did a capital stroke of business when it established cinchona plantations. The cash profit on the Bengal plantations alone last year was 130,000 rupees, besides 350,000 rupees saved on the quinine furnished to the troops.

—Lord Dufferin has informed the Egyptian Ministry that in reply to their request Great Britain withdraws from the control, and suggests the appointment of a European financial adviser, who will not interfere with the public administration.

—A boat has been found off the harbor of Gelte containing the dead bodies of four persons belonging to a French coasting steamer, which, it is believed, foundered in a storm. There were twenty-two persons on board.

—Bismarck's appearance last week in the Reichstag evoked general sympathy. He seemed to be very weak and in much pain. It is doubted whether he will be able to attend the sitting of the Reichstag very frequently.

—The extent of the flooded country in the middle of the Rhine districts, exclusive of the tributaries of that river, is computed at 700 square kilometers, or nearly half as large again as the Lake of Constance. The King of Bavaria has given a second 10,000 marks for the relief of his distressed subjects. Throughout the flooded districts of Hungary there will certainly be a famine unless assistance is prompt. The waters are receding in Upper Hungary They leave fearful devastation. At Raab and Grau large volumes of water are held back in the narrow rocky channels above the iron gates, constituting great danger to the lowlands in South Hungary. Thousands of soldiers and workmen are employed on dams. At Grau 200 houses were submerged to the roof and several hundred families are destitute. The distress is fearful. The situation defies description. Twenty-three bodies were found in garrets of houses at Asvany.

BUSINESS.

INTEREST, DUTY AND RESPONSIBILITY.

INTEREST.

You, dear reader and friend, are interested in extending the circulation of the Christian Cynosure, because it advocates your principles.

DUTY.

It is your duty to get others to take and read it, because they need the paper and the effort will do you good.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The responsibility of making it pay its bills is yours, and the surplus if any, will belong to the cause you love and are laboring to extend.

HOW TO GET SUBSCRIBERS.

1. Call on any persons you may know, who have religious convictions and after showing them a copy of the paper, quietly explain its mission and the necessity of knowing what the secret orders are and what they are doing in society, in church, and in state.

2. If you don't succeed in getting a subscription leave a few tracts specially suited to the particular case. Give some to the children, and the parents will be sure to read them. We have one illustrated for boys. If you are not supplied, we will furnish you. When you meet your neighbor again mention the matter or call if convenient.

3. Get a supply of tracts and distribute them judiciously in the Sabbath-school, (see advertised list.) If your pastor is friendly, ask him to mention it on Sabbath. Mention it quietly yourself in meetings where you deem it appropriate, and with a little grit, grace and perseverance you will yourself be surprised at your own success.

4. Look carefully over your field. Make up your mind how many subscribers you ought to get. Ask the Disposer of all hearts to help you. Then get them. When you go to your work remember you are not alone. Besides Him who says, "Lo! I am with you," there are other thousands engaged in the same cause.

"ON CHANGE."

In all the principal cities of our land the lodge has many opponents. These men would be glad to take and read our paper if their attention was called to it. They deal "on change" and acquire the habit of watching the markets for investments. If a man has anything to dispose of they look for it either in the market or expect him to call on them personally. Probably some of you, dear readers, know of just such fields, that with a little direct personal efforts would yield large returns. They ought not to languish for want of culture, and now since the paper has become yours, and you have become a business agent in the firm, will you not look after the interests of your publishing firm and organ by hunting up these men "on change" who are waiting for a call, and send in their names to be enrolled with you own?

NO MORE papers of last week's edition of the Cynosure can be supplied, to our great regret, since many would like extra copies for circulation and to use in getting subscribers. This oversight was due in part to the increase of the list. It will not occur again, God willing.

Having completed the transfer of the Christian Cynosure to its appropriate quarters, and by dint of effort got things in "ship shape," we appeal to old and new friends for help in extending its circulation. Such improvements as we felt justified in attempting with its present list have been made and we hope by the help of God to do the part assigned us, in a way to meet your approbation and we expect a hearty response from you. The time MOST favorable to increase the list is NOW. Farmers, especially, have more leisure at this season of the year than later; they have more time to read and talk than when the rush of work comes in "seed time and harvest." Don't let the golden opportunity pass unimproved. We are glad to note favorable reports from quite a number who have taken the work in hand with resolution, others will doubtless be heard from soon.

☞We have arranged with dealers to furnish books, etc., in the general trade so that you need not divide you orders but send direct to headquarters.

☞Send your orders for the Weed pamphlet, one hundred thousand now ready. The general and the religious press are discussing it. Dr. McMurdy and the secretists generally denouncing it and its author. Everybody ought to read it. Next week we shall give our readers a portrait of its author and more facts in the case.

We have still on hand photos of the Morgan monument and shall have stereoscopic views ready in a few days, at 25c. each, or five for $1.00.

We are prepared to fill all orders for anti-secrecy literature and to take subscriptions for the Christian Cynosure at No. 221 West Madison street, Chicago.

A PREMIUM WORTH HAVING.

We will send a copy of the Weed Pamphlet to every old or new subscriber who will send a letter containing the order for a Cynosure subscription, and money, plainly addressed to W. I. PHILLIPS, Christian Cynosure office, 221 West Madison St., Chicago, on or before the first day of February next.

FOR $3.10,

the Cynosure will be sent to any subscriber old or new, together with that great agricultural monthly the American Agriculturalist, for one year. Beside this the fine steel engraving "In the Meadow" advertised on this page. This sum, $3.10, covers the price of both papers, the picture and the mailing of the latter.

A VERY GOOD THING

to have in every home, by everybody, old and young, in the country or village, and in cities as well. A marvel of condensed information, both useful and trustworthy, with a thousand or more Engravings, illustrating labor-saving methods and devices in the Field, in the Garden, and in the Household, Animals, Plants, etc.—with many large beautiful Pictures; Illustrated Stories for and Instructive Talks with Boys and Girls; Plans of Houses, Barns, and Out-Buildings, with Specifications. All these, and much more, will be found in the 42d Volume of the American Agriculturist, now beginning, and at less cost than anywhere else in the world. Its exposure of Humbugs, a most valuable feature, is to be pushed with increased vigilance. To the previous staff of editors and contributors many additions are now made, including the best writers all over the country. In its prime, this journal enters its 42d volume, more vigorous than ever, with new writers, new artists, new dress, etc. Though prepared at larger expense than most $3 and $4 magazines, it is, owing to its immense circulation, supplied, post-paid, for $1.50 a year, and less to clubs—either English or German edition. Single numbers, 15 cents. One specimen, post-paid, 6 cents. A plate copy of Dupree's last great painting, "IN THE MEADOW," is prescuted to each yearly subscriber. Address Publishers of American Agriculturist, 751 Broadway, New York.

VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE

FOR 1883 IS AN ELEGANT BOOK OF 150 PAGES, THREE COLORED PLATES OF FLOWERS AND VEGETABLES, AND MORE THAN A 1000 ILLUSTRATIONS of the choicest Flowers, Plants and Vegetables, and Directions for growing. It is handsome enough for the Centre Table or a Holiday present. Send on your name and Post Office address, with 10 cents, and I will send you a copy, postage paid. This is not a quarter of its cost. It is printed in both English and German. If you afterwards order seeds deduct the 10 cts. Vick's Seeds are the Best in the World! THE FLORAL GUIDE will tell how to get and grow them.

Vick's Flower and Vegetable Garden, 175 Pages, a Colored Plates, 500 Engravings. For 50 cents in paper covers; $1.00 in elegant cloth. In German or English.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly Magazine—32 Pages, a Colored Plate in every number and many fine Engravings. Price $1.25 a year; Five Copies for $5.00. Specimen Numbers sent for 10 cents; 3 trial copies for 25 cents.

THE OUTLOOK.

The Independent party in the Senate is extinguished. Judge David Davis will be replaced in the next session by Governor Cullom, whom the legislature of Illinois have just elected. Had the people voted, instead of their assumed representatives, Senator Davis would doubtless have remained another term, but his course has not pleased the politicians so well. Congress has rarely if ever seen position independent of party so openly accepted and so ably maintained. The Supreme Court have no reason to be ashamed of the representative sent from their calm deliberations to the arena of the Senate. His singular position has made him the mark for hostile reporters, who exaggerated his failures, but could not disturb his composure or turn him from his course; and we shall hope that, in the breaking up of the old parties, men of the same independent spirit may more often appear in the houses of Congress.

Another valuable Senator is about to be retired. The Minnesota legislature has been voting a week and Windom's supporters are losing hope. The country has marked with pride his ability and integrity and his departure from the Senate will be a loss. One of the tricks used by his political opponents forcibly reminds us of the practice of Freemasons over a dead brother. They produced photographs of Windom's house at Washington and circulated the pictures among the cabins of Minnesota, to show how extravagantly he, a servant of the people, was living. This had a funny sequel the other day, when the Senator received from the photographer who made the pictures a heavy bill for doing the work. Several Masonic widows can appreciate this story.

The House has refused to act promptly upon the Whisky Relief bill, sent from the Senate and the anxious patronage of John Sherman the other day. This postponement means a possible rejection of the measure, so that the distillers are not so certain that they must not after all pay the $80,000,000 now due as government tax. The country will not regret if the failure of this bill bankrupts some of these manufacturers of ruin and death. Peoria, in this State, is the greatest point in their line of operation. A published letter of January 1st gives some particulars of the vast proportions of this business, which all who love and pray for the triumph of prohibition will study with some interest: "Peoria this year has led the world in the production of spirits. This has been done in the face of the fact that all the distilleries here are running at a reduced capacity, Northern distilleries having been forced to contend with the large overproduction in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and Maryland goods in bond. Doubt as to the course of Congress on the extension of the bonded period has cut a large figure in reducing the sale of goods. There are now eleven large distilleries here. Two distilleries which were burned have been rebuilt the last year, and one has increased its capacity almost double. The capacity of the distilleries here the last year has been increased 5,633 bushels of grain per day. Over $10,000,000 are invested in the manufacture of spirits at this point, yielding an annual revenue to the government considerably in excess of that sum. In the cattle pens connected with the distilleries 19,104 cattle were fed the last year, against 17,500 head in 1881. The internal revenue receipts in Peoria districts were $13,267,988 65. The amount of business done the last year by distillers and brewers combined was $20,435,000, against $19,400,000 in 1881—a gain of near a million and a half dollars over the preceding year. The entire volume of business in all departments is $145,740,910, against $94,652,597 in 1881."

The Iowa Supreme Court has approved the decision of the Davenport judge against the prohibition amendment. The points on which the decision rests are technical only. The journal of the lower house of the State Assembly does not show that the amendment was passed, and as entered the measure varies from the form that was adopted in the Senate. The next legislature could not, so holds the court, correct these mistakes and the amendment fails. Judge Beck dissents from this opinion at length. He holds, moreover, that the legislature is the creation of the people, who themselves cured the irregularities of the body by their vote in electing the succeeding Assembly. This decision gives joy to the whole pandemonium of whiskeyites, but their joy is short-lived. No one believes that the people of Iowa will go back on their former vote, nor that they will long delay putting the question on issue again. It will be noted that the decision of the Supreme court does not touch at all the amendment itself, but only the irregularities of its passage.

Three hundred thousand persons followed the body of Gambetta to its tomb. But this exhibition of popular regard for the dead leader of French Republicanism could avail him nothing who, in one of the lucid intervals of his suffering just before his death, exclaimed: "Je suis perdu; il est inutile de dissimuler; mais j'ai tant souffert que ce sera une deliverance,"—"I am lost; it is useless to attempt to conceal it; but my suffering has been so great that it will be a deliverance." Sad words for the bold and brilliant spirit whom the multitudes of France hailed as their deliverer; yet a faithful and final comment on a life starless with atheism and tottering from excess. Talmage in his Brooklyn pulpit draws this striking lesson: "We applaud his eloquence, his courage, his patriotism, his friendship for America, his sympathy with free principles all the world over; but Gambetta was an atheist. When Prime Minister of France he appointed as Minister of Worship another atheist, to look after the affairs of the Church of Christ—one who believed in neither Church nor Christ nor Bible, nor anything else we call sacred. Gambetta, moreover, was an open and prolonged defier of the marriage relation, and his life an insult to common decency. Whether the suspicion of a disgraceful death at the hands of one whom he had wronged be true or false is of no importance in the history of a man whose public indignities of womanhood were demonstrated from Paris to Berlin. Such a man must not be brought up for canonization or sainthood, and while we honor his eloquence we execrate his uncleanness. It is high time that is be demonstrated in America, as well as in France, that no man can be so great in intellect and political influence as to have free license for iniquities that in humbler men come to police courts and penitentiaries. Gambetta's patriotism towards France cannot atone for his atheism toward God and his infamy toward women. He never uttered a more thrilling word on the crowded boulevard or in the court rooms or in the French legislature than in his last moments; but while those other words on great occasions stirred the patriotism of his countrymen and roused their best enthusiasm, his dying words roll like a wintry sea over all nations, 'I am lost." So atheism goes into midnight. It helps no one in self-government while he lives, and it kindles no light when he dies."

The death of Gambetta is seized upon by the leaders of the Bourbon and Bonapartist factions for another demonstration against the Republic. "Prince" Jerome Napoleon last week issued a manifesto which was published in the Figaro and placarded on the walls of Paris announcing that the Republic was a failure and the remedy was Bonapartism. His manifesto was torn down, the Figaro was seized, and the Prince was arrested. As he is of importance in no one's estimation but his own, the tranquillity of President Grevy is undisturbed by the demonstration. A more alarming movement is an uprising in La Vendee in favor of Count Chambord, the representative of the Bourbon family which perished under the guillotine of the Revolution. Thirty-two thousand men have been organized and are arming, and it is stated that the conspirators have 15,000,000 francs in safe keeping in London. La Vendee is one of the western provinces and its peasantry have shown the utmost devotion to the waning cause and fortunes of the descendants of the luckless Louis XVI. Victor Hugo has graphically pictured their struggles against the republic of Robespierre in 1795. But the Vendeans, if they do not now meet so fierce a foe, will find the Republic more firmly established in the hearts of the people of France, and their demonstration will effect little but to impress this fact upon their own minds. A wasting and prolonged border warfare they have not the inspiration of 1795 to keep up, nor does the French nation at large thirst for war. There are no reasons why the ambitious conspirators at the bottom of this movement should not be brushed aside and the peace and unity of the Republic remain unharmed.

GOVERNOR BUTLER'S MESSAGE.

BY GEN. J. W. PHELPS.

If words could effect a reform, Governor Butler would be the greatest reformer of the age. No other Governor, probably, ever delivered so long a message. Its length seems to have been duly proportioned to the number of degrees which the Governor has taken in Freemasonry.

A great "refreshment" took place after the labors of the Governor's election and inauguration, whereat some three hundred of the brethren were present. It was held on the memorable 8th of January, and speakers duly impressed upon the minds of the guests that of the two heroes of New Orleans, the Governor was the greater. Very likely, for Jackson, the past hero, was only a Royal Arch, while the Governor is a 32°.

There is something very illogical in the condition of our affairs as brought about by the ruling Masonic element of the Republican party. Governor Butler is extolled for his service in New Orleans. Why, therefore, did the administration take him away from there? Why not keep the hero in command where his services were so valuable? Either the administration was wrong in superceding him in command in that quarter, or the Governor's services there were not so highly important as his followers would make the country believe. It is a pity that a small part of the Governor's message was not devoted to explaining this discrepancy. Either President Lincoln, who recalled General Butler from New Orleans, or General Butler, who was recalled from there, must have been in the wrong. Both cannot be safely extolled for their action in a quarter of the theater of war that was of the very first importance to the cause at issue. All the political capital that Governor Butler makes out of his New Orleans service is at the expense of Lincoln's administration. Which will the people sustain? The ending of the Governor's military service at Fort Fisher shows what the true character of his New Orleans service was.

But apparently the great merit of Governor Butler consists rather in his exalted services to the Masonic lodge than in any thing which he has done for the country. This is a matter which the country will have to decide at last, in some way. The lodge may take both sides of a question of moral significance, but a Christian government cannot do so with safety. It is a matter of grave moment to the interests of the country to have it clearly understood which was in the right in the military operations of the Southwest, President Lincoln or General Butler. It is also matter of the very first importance to have it known to the country by what agency General Butler has been elevated to the governorship of Massachusetts, whether it is by the free, uncontrolled votes of the people of the State, or by the machinery of the Masonic lodge.

The same Masonic machinery that has hitherto, during the last thirty years, made generals, and governors, and other officers, and has promoted them at will to the Presidency, is still operating in that direction; and it remains with the people to decide whether they will allow the Masonic lodge to control their affairs any longer, or whether they will take the management from the lodge, and turn it over to the constitutional government of the country. In the election of Freemason Butler to the governorship, the lodge has shown that it feels the need of his services. Will the people at large show a similar degree of shrewdness at the next Presidential election, and show that the Republic stands greatly in need of the services of some Anti-mason—some one whose first allegiance is not due to the Masonic lodge?

THE TEMPERANCE OUTLOOK IN WORCESTER.

BY REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

The course and issue of the late vigorous temperance campaign at Worcester, resulting in the election of a no-license mayor, Hon. Samuel E. Hildreth, have a special interest for the friends of temperance at large, as well as in Massachusetts. At a meeting of citizens since the election, called for the purpose of consulting as to the duty of the hour, it has been resolved,

"That, whereas, the incoming city government, chosen the first time for years on the great moral issue of temperance, will need the special moral support and co-operation of citizens at large; therefore it is wise and expedient to form a Worcester Law and Order League, to aid the authorities in the enforcement of the laws relating to the liquor traffic."

A proposed address to citizens is in these terms: As the organized supporters of no-license, who have succeeded in the election of a Worcester mayor upon that issue, by a majority vote of 187, but have failed through fraud in the popular vote for license by 117, we take occasion to declare that we find the day to have been technically lost for no license (although really gained), not through neglect or indifference of friends, but through fraudulent and illegal ballots circulated at the polls by the agents of license. These made their way into the ballot-box unbeknown and undetected on the part of the honest voters who threw them. The false ballot was cunningly prepared with the purpose and the effect of deception, and the pro-license Board of Aldermen, on the flimsy ground of technicality, refused the petition of thirty-seven qualified voters for a recount, by which recount the exact number of such spurious ballots might have been ascertained and a true report of the voting had.

Another reason for the apparently lamentable result as to no-license we find to be the attitude of a number of respectable well-to-do citizens who, using alcoholic beverages moderately themselves and in their families, are not willing to be put to any inconvenience in obtaining their supplies through licensed grocers. They consent to fraternize and consent to vote at the polls with the "roughs, rowdies and rascals" that make up the majority of the pro-license party rather than to suffer any diminution of their facilities for being supplied with domestic liquors through licensed sellers.

We put it to the intelligence and conscience of such men whether they will not now be willing to unite with the great number of law-abiding citizens (3768) who have voted no license, in a moral pressure upon the incoming Board of Aldermen to procure their absolute refusal of any licenses for the sale of liquors to be drank upon the premises, and the lowest minimum of licenses for any purpose whatever.

To our Democratic fellow-citizens, not a few of whom, without regard to party, independently voted no license, we tender hearty congratulations, and in the temperance reform we hail the help of the Democratic journal of this city, which is making vigorous war upon the liquor organization that has so long had its grip upon the throat of each of the two political parties by which our city has hitherto been governed.

"There was a way," says the Democratic Daily Times, "to accomplish the defeat of the liquor organization, and to remove their grip from the throat of the two political parties, and that was to refuse them license. Owing to the skill of these men [meaning their fraudulent and spurious ballots procured to be cast] they have been able to strengthen their hold upon the city government, and to make more difficult the task of restricting their sphere of destruction. Their success has made them inordinately proud of their powers and arrogant in their treatment of those who dare oppose them, while it has given over to their dictation the entire Democratic party. The tactics of these men on election day and since will be the cause of the application of a salutary dose of law to them next May and a probable defeat at the next municipal election."

To such of our citizens as are represented by the Daily Times, the determined friends of no license, it is clear that we may look in future for the effective co-operation in the work of freeing our city from the debasing tyranny of the liquor league and the liquor traffic. In the holy alliance of all good citizens of every party for temperance, law and order, there is hope; and the people of Worcester of all parties friendly to the organization of a league to secure the enforcement of the restrictive features of the existing laws for the regulation of the liquor traffic, are invited to co-operate and to choose delegates to represent them at a convention to be holden at Tremont Temple, Boston, on the 22d of February, 1883.

Your New England correspondent, Rev. E. D. Bailey, has had a useful part in the moral and political revolution now begun in Worcester, and from his present established position as a reform preacher here he will be able to render yet more efficient help toward the good time coming. I need not say how that help will be timely and well appreciated by those who have hitherto borne the burden and heat of the day, and who are now almost ready to lay down their armor and give precedence to their betters.

FAITH IN PRAYER.

BY WM. HAZENBERG, MISSIONARY IN SOUTH AFRICA.

It is often said that we must pray in faith, but not have faith in prayer, which saying is true in a very important sense, yet faith in prayer ought also to exist in order to make prayer available. By faith in prayer—I do not mean the prayers of Pharisees trusting in the worth of prayer, without consideration of its nature, but the assurance, founded on the Word of God, that our prayers avail much, if all the conditions in the case are met, namely, if we pray in the name of Christ, in faith, according to God's will, we ourselves doing God's will, with the object of glorifying God and promoting the welfare of men.

Praying in faith is the belief that God hears our prayer according to his promise, and if any one prays thus, he will have faith in his prayer also, inasmuch as he is conscious to bestow a great favor upon such as are, in the providence of God, the objects of his prayers.

He knows that he can make many rich by means of his intercession, though in worldly things he may be poor. If we do not have faith in our prayers, believing that very little or nothing is accomplished by them, then the result will be according to our faith; nothing will be effected by them, and under such circumstances the form of prayer is liable to cease, though conscience will not be satisfied in this way. If all Christians understood the nature of praying in faith to the full extent of God's promises, the whole world would soon be holy and happy, but now the dominion of Satan, spiritual and physical suffering, are quite common in this world of ours. A proper faith in the prayer of faith induces us to pray always.

Since the Lord has taught me the power of praying in faith, and in connection with this given me faith in my prayers, I am praying always, considering prayer as primary and work secondary; this, however, was formerly not the case.

Some time ago I met with a deist in Cape Town, who spoke very erroneously about God, Christ, the Scriptures, and the way of salvation. This man I made an object of prayer. Now he is somewhat under conviction of his errors, but he is still quite obstinate as to the main points. He often makes use of awful language. It appears to me that the devils within him know that they will be cast out, therefore using the more violence. It is not improbable that the evil spirits by which such a man is possessed might be sufficient to cast a herd of swine into the sea, if permitted by the Lord. I trust the poor fellow will soon be delivered of them, and come to his senses. Might it not be generally understood that the conflict is not so much with an intrinsic evil nature within, as with the power of darkness, filling both the air and human souls.

The minister of this miserable man is of the same faith, and has served the devil faithfully for many years in Cape Town, by preaching these false doctrines and by occupying a high position in the Masonic lodge. This man I have also visited several times, warning him, and also praying for him in faith. While speaking with him in the power of the Spirit, he seems to be impressed; anyway he respects me for my faithfulness, being convinced that I do it from a right principle, he even visiting me in town. I do not talk with him about Masonry, since this is good enough for a man who is fully in the power of Satan, but after he has become acquainted with its natural condition, I intend to bring up the subject of Masonry also.

I have prayed in faith for two paralyzed ladies in Cape Town with glorious result, one being almost cured a few weeks after my first prayer for her. The other I prayed for a couple of days ago, and she could sit up immediately after that. To God be all the glory, but Satan is angry.

The small-pox, which has caused many deaths in Cape Town and throughout South Africa, is gradually diminishing. Many Mohammedans have died of it. One told me the other day he had prayed Jesus to give him spiritual light, that this disease might make them better. This is especially my continual prayer for them. I go daily around among them, often preaching the Gospel to hundreds of them in one day, speaking a few words to each household I met with. I also administer medicine to the sick, by means of which I get much influence with them. They almost always derive benefit from my medical treatment, often being entirely cured in a very short time, which fact is rather to be attributed to my prayers than to my medical skill. However this may be, the result is that they respect me for it, especially because I charge nothing. From a principle of justice or gratitude they sometimes feel inclined to give me a little for it, which I do not refuse, considering such as coming from the Lord, though by means of the servants of the devil. From Christians we often receive not that measure of sympathy we might reasonably expect, they often only with their mouths approving our difficult work, but the Lord is able to sustain us in unexpected ways. The Lord's dealing with us is such that we are entirely losing our trust in man, in order that we should trust in him only. Such lessons, however, are often very hard for human nature. A priest had long been afflicted with the gout, being thereby unable to walk; but after having used for a couple of days my medicines, he walked again, praising me for the kindness done to him and his family, which he evidently did not enjoy as he should, still he patiently bore with it, for the sake of the kind physician. This gives me an entrance to their homes, and I pray and believe to many hearts. Pray much for us and our work.

REFORM STORY.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LITTLE PEOPLE," "A SUNNY LIFE," ETC.

CHAPTER XXXVI. SOME EXAMPLES OF MASONIC BENEVOLENCE AND MORALITY.

Half a dozen summers previous to the one in which occurred the scenes related in the last chapter, there happened one of those common and yet most sad events, a serious accident to a laboring man with a wife and children dependent upon him for their daily bread. He was a carpenter and fell from an imperfectly built staging, receiving severe internal injuries that resulted in his death after a year of lingering illness.

"The lodge will see to you and the children," whispered the dying man to his weeping wife, whose always delicate health had been shattered by incessant watching at the bedside of her sick husband, and, knowing that his death would leave her without a penny, could not see in the dark night of approaching widowhood the glimmer of a single star of earthly hope. "I've always paid my dues regular till that accident happened. The lodge owes it to me to see that you and the children are well provided for."

"They have given us in all but twenty dollars since you have been sick," answered his wife, who was only a woman and reasoned as women are apt to in such matters. "That is but a fraction of what you have paid them at one time and another. And I am sure we have needed the money."

"I know twenty dollars don't go a great ways, but we've rubbed along. And now I've got pretty nigh the end. So there'll be all the more for you and the children."

His wife was silent. She had her misgivings, but not for worlds would she breathe the shadow of a doubt into the ear of that soul that was passing into eternity, happy in the thought that he belonged to a brotherhood which made the widow and the orphan the objects of its especial care.

That night he died. The lodge buried him with Christless prayers and dirges, and to do it justice spared none of the honors to which a defunct "worthy brother is Masonically entitled. The widow's hopes revived. Surely they who would do so much for the dead would have a care for the living. But the lodge when applied to for assistance viewed the matter in a slightly different light. For to state the simple truth, a number of grand suppers given by the fraternity, sundry bills of cost for regalia, gloves, aprons, etc., to say nothing of a great many extras for wine, beer and cigars, had swallowed up so much of the charity fund as to leave the lodge in no condition to heed her appeal. But it must not be supposed that any such explanation of the case was given to the indigent widow when she asked for further aid. Oh, no. She was coolly told that her husband had not paid his dues for a year, and they had done all that could reasonably be expected of them in giving him Masonic burial.

She could not prove that the lodge had taken her husband's money, and paid him back not counting interest, scarce a fifth part of what was his actual due. The widow struggled along for awhile; a few individual Masons contributed to her relief from their own pockets; but as benevolently inclined persons are to be found everywhere, and the lodge collectively had nothing to do with these contributions, it may be fair to infer that they might possibly have done the same thing whether Masons or not. It was a hopeless struggle even with occasional aid from private charity. Her health completely broke down at last. Her two children were bound out, while she went to the almshouse as her only refuge, dying there soon after in a quick consumption.

Death, in separating her from her children, however, spared her, as death so often does, the pang of a deeper anguish—for she was Mary Lyman's mother.

It doesn't matter where I gathered these facts. They are true. This is not a statistical book, or else I should be tempted to give a few figures that would demonstrate to the most sceptical that the benevolence of the lodge is on a par with its morality—a hollow sham, a whited sepulchre.

Mary Lyman's father was a Mason, but this fact did not save her from ruin and death at the hands of a brother Mason who had solemnly sworn to preserve inviolate the chastity of all women with near Masonic kindred; though with this very convenient little proviso attached, "knowing them to be such."

Women of America, do you hold your purity so lightly that you can afford to countenance such a system as this? Will you, knowing these things, still continue to smile on the lodge, and accept its slimy favors? Sisters of the church of Christ, does it matter nothing to you that Masonry rejects his name from her ritual as "too sectarian," and tramples his atoning blood underfoot by teaching another way of salvation? that by the testimony of her own writers she traces back her origin to the ancient heathen mysteries with their abominable rites of darkness; and aspires, as we learn from the same unquestionable source, to become finally "the universal religion of manhood?" Can you pray for the speedy coming of Christ's millennial reign, and be indifferent to the fact that another kingdom is being set up in which he has neither part nor lot? Will you apologize for such a system, defend it by your silence or worse still "care nothing about it?" As it rejects Christ, so it has no place for woman, and should the day ever dawn when Masonry becomes the universal religion, God help her!

Rachel herself gathered the flowers from her own garden to lay about the dead girl's white, still form. She placed a half opened rosebud between the closed fingers, kissed the cold forehead; and with solemn words of prayer that seemed in their tender, impassioned earnestness like a personal appeal to that infinite, unchanging Pity which is at the heart of God in Christ, visibly manifested before his eyes—it was Elder Stedman who performed the last services—Mary Lyman was laid away in a corner of the potter's field outside the cemetery to slumber till the resurrection morning.

But before the grave had set its seal of corruption on the statuesque beauty of a single lineament, her murderer was released on a writ of habeas corpus and admitted to bail!

Elder Stedman when the funeral was over came back to our house; but, unheeding the cup of tea that Rachel poured out for him, he paced up and down the room in stern and solemn silence, broken at last by these abrupt words,

"I have been like one of the foolish prophets. I have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly. God forgive me. Henceforth every faculty of mind and body shall be devoted to an unceasing warfare against this dragon of Masonry that stands like his prototype in Revelation ready to engulf and swallow the church with the devouring flood he casts out of his mouth."

"Why Mark;" said I, "you do yourself injustice. When hardly a preacher in these parts dares to mention Masonry you have scourged it unsparingly from the pulpit. What can you do more?"

"I tell you, Leander," said Mark, pausing a moment in his agitated walk, "I feel as if I had only tickled the monster by throwing wooden darts at him. Henceforth it must be a hand to hand combat. Only the iron of truth can penetrate between the scales of his armor, for like Apollyon his scales are his pride. I must lecture as well as preach on this subject."

"But Mark," I answered, a little startled, "you will only rouse persecution. A good many people seem to think Masonry is like the Giant Pope, Christian saw sitting in the mouth of his cave—too old and decrepit to hurt. But I know better. The lodge don't care much for a few side thrusts; but attack it at close quarters and you will find that it can turn with as deadly vengeance as it did in Morgan's day."

"Well," answered the elder quietly, "I am old and gray-headed now, and a few years of life less or more matters little to me. There is a conflict coming, and woe unto me if I gird not on my armor to meet it. My old belief comes back to me. This is going to be no ordinary contest. It is the battle of Armageddon, the last great conflict before the final end."

Mark spoke with the same kindling eyes and solemn fervor with which he had dilated on this very same subject forty years before.

"I have had some such thoughts myself," I answered after a moment's silence. "Organized secrecy seems to be Satan's last and most cunning move. In the old pagan and popery times he tried to conquer the church by sheer open force. Now he is trying to undermine the citadel, and the worst of it is the church won't be roused to see her danger. However, I suppose I can no more keep you out of the battle than I could Job's war-horse. Only have a care of yourself, Mark, for Hannah's sake."

The elder started as if I had touched a tender chord, for he and Hannah were a lonely couple now. Of their two sons, one had died in the service of his country, the other was a toiling missionary on the far-off soil of Southern Africa. But it was only for an instant, then the pole star of his life shone out clear and steady.

"I told Hannah the day she married me that she must take me as the Covenanter John Brown took his wife, Isabel, with the assurance that when she least expected it the hand of violence might part him from her. We have learned to hold nothing back—not even each other."

But while the elder was thus absorbed in thoughts of that great pre-millennial contest which he believed was approaching, Colonel Montfort was likewise thinking—though on a different subject and with a good cigar to aid the process. Two difficult tasks lay before him; one was the triumphant delivery of Maurice Jervish from the hands of justice, the other was the sacrifice of Anson Lovejoy to violated Masonic law.

The colonel was not a man of generous impulses, and had there been no other tie between him and Mary Lyman's murderer than mere friendship, he would in all probability have washed his hands of him. He desired to shield Jervish, firstly and primarily, because the honor and glory of Masonry demanded it. What was to become of the fraternity if its members could claim no special privileges over honest men? A vital question to the colonel, who knew very well that there had been times in his own political and military career when he might have fared badly if the shielding of each other's crimes had formed no part of lodge obligations. However hopeless the situation might appear to unMasonic eyes, in the light of these encouraging items of his past experience, the colonel did not despair of bringing off his friend with flying colors. It was over another subject that he spent the most anxious thought, and consumed the greatest number of cigars.

He hated Anson Lovejoy as wickedness will always hate rectitude. He was furious that he had dared to pursue Jervish, and deliver him over to the grasp of the law; and as the controlling spirit of the lodge he was well aware how very easily the wrath of the fraternity against him could be made to bring forth its legitimate fruit—murder. Nor is it too much to say of the colonel that he knew he could at any moment put his finger on the men who would not scruple to dispose of Anson Lovejoy after the most approved Masonic fashion. The possibility however of another Anti-masonic excitement was a factor which continually came in and disturbed the colonel's reckoning, for he was a man accustomed to weigh duly all the pros and cons before committing himself to a course of action which might entail disagreeable consequences. But his hatred of Lovejoy burned with so intense a flame that for once passion overpowered the cool and calculating selfishness which with him as with most men of that peculiar caliber was the governing principle of his life.

The sound of his name spoken in low and cautious tones by some one standing outside broke in upon the colonel's meditations. He rose and opening the long window stepped out upon the piazza. A man stood there in the moonlight, a prominent member of Fidelity Lodge.

"Oh, it is you, Mugford. I suppose all the arrangements are made then; but don't let too many into the secret. Half a dozen would be enough if the affair was managed properly."

"I've talked with Golding and Peck and the others. They will be all ready to do their part when the time comes. But Whitby we can't depend on I am afraid. He hangs back."

The colonel muttered an oath.

"Well, shut his mouth up some way. If he is disposed to blab give him a hint that we know how to manage traitors. We can deal with one as well as another." And after a little more conversation of like tenor the two conspirators separated.

Masonic murders would be much more common than is happily the case if the brethren everywhere lived up to their obligations; but just as the majority of slave-holders were far more humane than the system which gave them irresponsible power, so Masons as a rule are better than the institution which swears its devotees.

Among the hardened and desperate men, the rowdies, gamblers and drunkards who surrounded Colonel Montfort and moved obsequiously to do his bidding, there was one who shrank from the crime of secret assassination. The result was that Anson Lovejoy the next day received from an unknown source a much crumpled note with a rude imitation of the square and compass in the corner, which after correcting some peculiarities of orthography ran as follows:

"Don't go to the lodge to-night. They mean to ask you to resign, then drag you from the chair if you refuse, and murder you in the lodge room. In the scuffle it will never be known who struck the blow. If you value your life, stay away." A FRIEND AND A MASON.

"How do I know but this is a mere foolish trick to frighten me?" said Lovejoy. "It would look too cowardly to stay away. I can't do it."

"No," I said earnestly. "This is no trick but a friendly warning. You must heed it."

Lovejoy stood irresolute. I knew he felt as a brave man always does at the thought of saving his life by what seems like cowardly flight from a post of duty.

"I have thought of a plan," I said after a moment's silence. "Go to the lodge to-night as usual, and your life shall be protected."

THURLOW WEED.

SKETCH OF HIS EARLY LIFE.

[New York Tribune.]

Thurlow Weed, journalist, and called by some men the "American Warwick," was born in this State at Cairo, Greene county, November 15th, 1797. Of parents in humble circumstances, he early learned the neeessity of work, and engaged as a cabin boy on one of the river boats in the tenth year of his age. But finding the work unsuited to his liking, he engaged two years later as an apprentice in the office of the Catskill Review, a newspaper owned and edited by Mackey Croswell, father of Edwin Croswell, who, as editor of the Albany Argus, became one of the famous Albany Regency, in opposition to which a large share of Mr. Weed's early political work was directed. Soon after this he removed with his father's family to Cincinnatus, in Cortland county, where he was engaged for a time in backwoods labor. At the age of fourteen he returned to the printing business in the office of the Herkimer American, a Federal newspaper, where he met William L. Stone, also an apprentice, and who afterward enjoyed distinction as the editor of the New York Commercial Advertiser. The war of 1812 found Mr. Weed only fifteen years of age. He enlisted as a drummer-boy, but soon appeared on the frontier as a private soldier and later as a quartermaster's sergeant. Returning home, in 1817 he became editor of the Norwich Journal, which had been started one year before by the Hon. John F. Hubbard, who died in October, 1876. Mr. Weed in the following year started the Chenango Agriculturalist in his own name and edited it in the interests of DeWitt Clinton, whose fallen political fortunes were then being restored by his advocacy of the completion of the Erie Canal. From that time Mr. Weed continued an active supporter of Clinton, and finally took up his residence at Rochester, where he became the editor of the Anti-masonic Enquirer, continuing it until 1830 as an organ of the opposition which grew out of the disappearance of William Morgan.

HIS ANTI-MASONIC CAREER.

[New York Times.]

Thus far Mr. Weed had not been remarkably conspicuous before the public. He was known as an opponent of the elements that afterwards consolidated into the Jackson Democracy, as a pungent writer, and as an excellent worker in committees and in the general management of party affairs. The time had come when the quiet and reserved blue-eyed man of destiny was to expand into a political Warwick—a very king-maker in a land where all were kings. The precipitating events were the disappearance of one William Morgan, the charge that he had been made away with by members of the fraternity of Freemasons and the unexampled excitement that spread over western New York and speedily over the whole State in consequence. On September 11, 1826, William Morgan was arrested at Batavia on a charge of theft and was taken to Canandaigua and put in jail, released at 9 P. M., and carried off toward Rochester in a close carriage in company with two or three other men. He was never afterward seen, and it was believed that he had been taken to old Fort Niagara, confined for a time in the magazine, and secretly murdered. The reason for the crime was found in the fact that Morgan was about to publish a book exposing the secrets of Freemasonry, and such a book did afterward appear in spite of all attempts to suppress it.

Public meetings were held, the press took up the matter and the wildest excitement prevailed, but at that time no one thought of making it a political affair. At the November election in that year, Clinton and Judge Rochester (Bucktail) were candidates for governor, and both were leading Freemasons, Clinton holding a high office among them, being Most Grand High Priest of the State Chapter. It was evident to those who were not Masons that the secret order not only refrained from investigating the charges made against them, but endeavored to prevent others from doing so by inducing witnesses to leave and by denouncing the leaders of the excited people. They, in turn, charged the crime upon the order at large. The most startling stories were told of the nature and dangerous character of Freemasonry. The grotesque rites of initiation, and the blood-curdling oaths that were taken, were held up in pictorial illustration, and the dead walls were covered with handbills that might have served the Ku-klux of 1870. Then followed a denunciation of secret orders of all kinds, and even to this day the feeling then originated exists among a large class of intelligent and prominent men.

There were trials of various kinds concerning the abduction of Morgan, but when, in one case, the opponents of the order thought to make important disclosures, the defendent pleaded guilty and shut out further scrutiny. About this time delegates from several self-constituted committees met at Lewiston and formed the first official Anti-masonic body. This was afterward known as the Lewiston Convention. This convention ascertained, to the satisfaction of its members at least, that Morgan had been murdered at or near Fort Niagara. The book of exposures was already published, and added materially to the excitement. But so far no political action had been proposed. At the town meetings in the spring of 1827, however, it was not uncommon to hear of resolutions declaring that no member of the Masonic order ought to be voted for. Such action began in Genesee and Monroe counties, but where the very first resolution was adopted is not known.

Party leaders did not hasten to take sides on the new question. They were busy with the approaching Presidential election, and were more interested in knowing whether Crawford or some one else would have the vote of New York. Jackson was in the field, and Clinton and Van Buren were supposed to lean in his favor. As both Jackson and Clinton were high Freemasons, it is probable that the Crawford party gained some strength from the opponents of the secret order.

For the election in the autumn of 1827, the Anti-masons ran local tickets in some places, especially for members of the Legislature, and—quite as much to their own astonishment as that of the old parties—carried Genesee, Monroe, Livingston, Orleans, and Niagara counties. Parties now essentially changed their composition. The Jackson Democracy were forming and took in a portion of the Bucktails, some of the leading Clintonians, and most of the Freemasons, who felt aggrieved by the sudden and successful proscription begun in the western part of the State. The Adams party was small, composed mainly of Clintonians, who, though many of them Freemasons, were unwilling to join the Jackson party, and could not act with the Anti-masons. The Anti-masonic party—for a party it must now be considered—took in nearly all of Clinton's followers and a considerable portion of the Bucktails, but not a large array of leaders from either faction. In March, 1828, the first regular Anti-masonic convention was held at Le Roy, and embraced delegates from twelve counties. No political resolutions were passed, the work being solely that of opposition to Freemasonry and the declaration that Freemasonry was unworthy of existence in a free government. This body recommended a State Convention to be held in Utica in August.

Thurlow Weed was in the foreground of this new movement. He took up the Morgan matter with promptness and pursued it with untiring zeal. Finding that he could not speak out freely against Masonry in the Rochester Telegraph, he left that paper and started the Anti-masonic Enquirer, the first journal in this country that gave expression to Anti-masonic opinion. By tacit consent he became the leader of the movement, though there were on every side older and better-known captains. The first Anti-masonic committee, consisting of Thurlow Weed, Frederick Whittlesey, Samuel Works, Hervey Ely, and Frederick F. Backus, was appointed, and continued until the end of the fight, only two names—those of Bates Cook and Timothy Fitch—being added. The new party immediately commanded attention from the older organizations. It being understood that they would nominate Francis Granger for Governor, the Adams men bid for their votes by nominating Granger for Lieutenant-Governor. The Anti-masons made a miserable nomination in the selection of Solomon Southwick, and the result was an easy victory for Van Buren, the candidate of the Jackson Democrats. The Anti-masons were not discouraged, for while the Adams party had been falling to pieces they were building up, and in 1829 elected Albert Tracy State Senator from the Eighth District, carried 15 counties, and polled 67,000 votes. They sent Francis Granger, Millard Fillmore, Thurlow Weed and others to the Assembly.

In February, 1830, they held a convention at Albany, and provided for holding a national convention in the summer. The Albany Convention prepared specific charges against the Grand Chapter of Freemasons of the State—a chartered body—accusing them of misapplying their funds by contributing to pay the expenses of the Morgan abduction. Mr. Fillmore moved in the Assembly for a select committee to investigate the charges, but the Freemasons choked off the danger by sending the whole subject to Attorney-General Greene C. Bronson, simply requesting him to look into it, and, if he thought proper, to file an information, in the nature of a quo warranto, for the forfeiture of the charter. The vote was 75 yeas and 30 nays, the latter being a little more than the Anti-masonic strength. It was clear that no investigation would be permitted if avoidance was possible. Under an act of 1828, for special counsel to inquire into the outrage, John C. Spencer was appointed. He had worked the case up to a point where he thought the offer of $2,000 reward would expose the whole plot, but Gov. Throop refused to authorize any reward, and the Legislature, instead of aiding Mr. Spencer, reduced his salary to $1,000. This Mr. Spencer took as an insult, and immediately resigned. It was now justly charged that the Jackson Democracy upheld and protected Freemasonry, and, of course, the Antimasons had nothing to expect in the way of favor from them.

In August, 1830, the Antimasons held a State Convention at Utica, where political affairs were freely discussed. Their indignation against Frank Granger was forgotten, and they nominated him for Governor, with Samuel Stevens, of New York, for Lieutenant Governor. Had the National Republicans supported Granger all over the State as they did in the Eighth District, he would have been elected; but in the East, especially in the river counties, the Republican Freemasons preferred a Democrat to an Antimason, and voted for Throop. He was elected, having 128,242 votes to 120,361 for Granger. They tried Granger once more—in 1832—running a full Electoral ticket for their Presidential candidate, William Wirt. On this occasion the National Republicans adopted the Anti-masonic State candidates, and victory seemed almost certain. The tidal wave of Jacksonism, however, was too much for them—Marcy (for Governor) had 166,410 votes and Granger 156,672.

The history of the Anti-masonic party proper ends here for not long after this election the various anti-Jackson elements in this State and throughout the Union were reorganized into the Whig party. Of this party in the State of New York the Anti-masons were the heart and soul, and most of the Anti-masonic leaders became Whig standard-bearers. Foremost among the Whig managers was Thurlow Weed, now doubly powerful from his experience in organizing the Anti-masons, while among the foremost directly before the people was William H. Seward. He was the first Whig candidate for Governor, in 1834, and came well up to Marcy's vote. In 1836 Marcy beat Jesse Buel, Whig, by 30,000. But in 1838 there was a change. The Whigs put up Seward again, and the Democrats brought up the old war-horse, Marcy. The campaign was lively, and resulted in a sweeping Whig victory—the party's first—Seward being elected by 10,000 majority. In the whirlwind of 1840 Mr. Seward was re-elected.

When Anti-masonry was at its height, the leaders of the party felt the need of an organ at the State capital where they had no newspaper voice. It was decided to start such a paper, and Mr. Weed was of course the first man thought of to take charge of it. He was then in Albany as member of the Assembly. On the 22nd of March, 1830, the Evening Journal appeared, published by B. D. Packard & Co., and edited by Thurlow Weed. The paper was a success from the start, and rapidly rose in circulation and influence. In those days there were few neutral or independent papers. Nearly every one was in favor of some political party, and there was no objection to a paper being called an "organ." The Argus was the Democratic scripture, and continued to furnish orthodox pabulum for years afterward. The Journal was the Anti-masonic and afterward the Whig bible, especially throughout the State of New York. The arrival of the mail in country villages in those days was a notable event. As soon as the horn of the stage-driver was heard the magnates of the place began to gather at the postoffice, but were unusually reserved in political discussion until they had seen the papers from which they took their cue—the Democrats from the Argus, and the Whigs from the Journal. No man who pretended to political wisdom ventured to express an opinion on any matter of consequence until he had read what Weed or Croswell had to say.

HIS LATER YEARS.

[New York Herald.]

In April, 1867, Mr. Weed became the editor of the New York Commercial Advertiser—a position which he occupied for a little more than a year—when his failing health forbade further labor. His physicians laid their prohibition upon him, and he reluctantly abandoned the profession in which he had spent a lifetime. He went to Europe during the summer of 1868, and remained there several months. He returned with health somewhat improved but was still incapable of accomplishing steady or prolonged labor. The winter of 1868 and 1869 he spent at Aiken, S. C. Since that time, except with some intervals of travel, he remained in New York. But Mr. Weed was unable to resist the temptation to work, and out of the vast storehouses of his memory he summoned legions of reminiscences, some of which are to form chapters of his autobiography. His contributions appeared mainly in the Galaxy. In May, 1870, he published in that magazine a humorous paper, entitled, "Stagecoach Traveling Forty-six Years Ago." The next month he contributed "Early Incidents of the Rebellion," which extorted in July, from Mr. Gideon Welles, a vigorous reply and criticism. Indeed, all of Mr. Weed's papers attracted much public attention and were widely copied. In many instances they kindled the fire of heated controversy, which, however, he left unnoticed. In August, 1870, "Diplomatic Incidents" appeared in the Galaxy. This paper was chiefly commemorative of the author's sojourn in Europe during his diplomatic mission with the two bishops. In December of the same year he published "Some of My Experiences," an amusing chapter of incidents in his life. Other articles appeared as follows: July, 1871, "Mr. Lincoln and the Three Friends in Council;" May, 1872, "Letters of Junius," a subject which he never wearied of investigating; March, 1873, "Recollections of Horace Greeley." In addition to these papers Mr. Weed published similar articles in Harper's Magazine, and was besides a frequent contributor to the newspaper press. It is understood that Mr. Weed's autobiography is not entirely completed, but enough is prepared to form a large volume and to throw much light upon political history and party movements for the last three score of years. This autobiography is not a connected or continuous work. It is rather a series of independent monographs on important political events or crises. On the 17th of June, 1882, Mr. Weed, again seeking relaxation and freedom from care, made another trip to Europe.

The last ten years of Mr. Weed's eventful life were spent in comparative quietude. It was impossible, however, for his active brain to remain altogether at rest. Whenever any question of moment arose, whether national or municipal, a vigorous letter with the well known initials "T. W." appeared in the public press and with no uncertain sound, proclaimed the veteran's views. It is safe to say that during the greater portion of this period his mental faculties were undimmed. On all the great topics of the day, and especially those touching on American politics and statesmen, he was open to the interviewers. He always had something good to say and said it well. In his accounts of his early years he was especially interesting and never gave way to the garrulity of old age. It was his custom to celebrate his birthday by a dinner party, to which he invited his old friends; but lately his infirmities prevented him from keeping up the festival. In March, 1880, he went to Albany to be present at the fiftieth anniversary of the Albany Evening Journal, occupying the editorial chair and writing the leading article. Perhaps one of the most effective of his later letters was one published in the Herald in August, 1880. It was a sturdy denunciation of Robert Ingersoll and an earnest declaration of his own belief and faith in Christianity.

Mr. Weed returned at the end of the summer with an invigorated constitution. His intense mental activity and his submissive listening to the pressing claims or the preferred complaints of the many who sought his advice or assistance severely taxed his brain and wore upon his sympathies. Hence those "head troubles" with which those who knew him best were so familiar.

REFORM NEWS.

NOTICE.

To the Friends of Reform in Southeast Pennsylvania and Adjoining Localities.

We, the undersigned, were appointed a committee by the official meeting of King Street Church, Chambersburg, to call a general convention of the anti-secrecy reform advocates to meet in Chambersburg, Pa., Feb. 13th, at 7 P. M., and to continue through the two following days. Speakers of ability are expected to be present and to address the meeting.

H. H. HINMAN,
W. O. TOBEY,
J. S. YAUKEY.

NOTE FROM THE MINNESOTA LECTURER.

I wish to say to the members and friends of the Minnesota State Christian Association through the Cynosure, that I expect to be able to commence work as their agent about the 20th of this month, D. V. I was sick at tthe time of the convention at Blue Earth, and got no better until near the close of the year. Since that time I have been meeting former engagements and arranging my affairs as best I could to leave home. I have but little talent and less experience in the work, but I have strong convictions, and with the Lord Almighty for my helper, I do not hesitate to go and do what I can. I expect to begin here at home, and spend a little time in the two adjacent counties, assist in our next meeting, and then go elsewhere as the Lord shall direct.

ROBERT J. WILLIAMS.

Winnebago City, Minn., Jan. 15, 1883.

PENNSYLVANIA.

OUR CLIFFORD MEETING.

Let it be noted that this meeting is now settled for Feb. 1st and 2nd, 1883. It is to be in the old church formerly occupied by the Methodist society, located at Clifford Corners, and will commence at 7 o'clock, evening of Feb. 1st. S. E. Starry is to be present and conduct the degree meetings. We have written to H. H. Hinman, at Chambersburg, Pa., with some hope of having him with us at Clifford.

The Chambersburg brethren are anxious to get Starry there and Bro. Hinman proposes a grand convention at Chambersburg to represent southeast Pennsylvania, Maryland and the District of Columbia. Chambersburg is central and easily accessible and would afford ample entertainment. Why not have an Anti masonic conclave?

Let Bro. Hinman come to Clifford if he can, and we there inaugurate a general campaign as proposed by him.

BRO. HINMAN'S LETTERS.

WELCOME AND FRIENDS.

CHAMBERSBURG, Pa., Jan. 15, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have just beheld thy fair countenance, and goodly apparel. My heart rejoices as did Solomon's, as he exclaimed, "Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness leaning on the arm of her Beloved." May you indeed go forth "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."

I have been here a little more than two weeks, and have preached ten sermons and given five lectures, two of them at Fayetteville. I have never had, anywhere, a more cordial reception or kindly hearing than here. The lectures in the King St. church were fully attended and so far from diminishing the congregations attending the usual services, they were greater afterwards than before.

At Fayetteville I spoke twice in the Covenanter church and was glad to believe that the truth was most cordially received by all who heard. The power of the lodge is manifestly waning. Some who ought to be friends of our reform are false to their professed principles, but other friends are rising up. The outlook is full of promise.

LUKEWARM PHILADELPHIA

"For John came neither eating nor drinking and they say he hath a devil. The Son of Man came eating and drinking and they say, Behold a man gluttonous and a wine-bibber." Matt. 11: 18,19. Centuries roll on, but human nature remains unchanged. John and Christ were rejected by the Jews for exactly opposite reasons. The professedly good men of today treat their principles in the same manner. In the days of slavery we were told that we need not oppose it in the North, for we had no slaves, and that we must not speak against it in the South, for the slaveholders would not endure it.

There are in the city of Philadelphia more than thirty churches, some of them large and financially strong, that by their terms of communion, adopted in their purer and better days, exclude from their fellowship all members of secret societies. To them may be added the large and influencial Society of Friends, who have a strong testimony against the oath bound orders, and who boast that none of their members belong to the secret lodges. And yet, in all that great city, there are only two or three congregations that will listen to a word of testimony on the subject.

I visited a considerable number of the pastors and ministers of the churches, (Reformed Bresbyterian, United Presbyterian, United Brethren and Frec Methodists.) I found them courteous and talented men. They understood the nature of the secrecy question. They sympathized with my views and desired my success; but with one consent excused themselves from active participation. Some honestly told me that they had some Freemasons in their churches and feared to offend them; but most said that they had no such members and therefore the matter did not concern them in the least. This particularly is what the Quakers told me. Of the large number of United Brethren churches in the Cumberland Valley, I have found only the King St. church of Chambersburg that does not exclude all discussion of this subject, and for just the above reasons: either that they have or have not some secretists in their membership. Of these two reasons the last is far the worse. There may be some apology for a man who, finding an iniquity in his church hopes by personal faithfulness and forbearance to remove the evil, and does not want to precipitate a conflict; but what possible excuse can there be for a people who plead their freedom from all complicity with iniquity as a reason why they should be wholly indifferent to its prevalence? "Am I my brother's keeper?" is a question just as mean and impudent now as when Cain thrust it in the face of his Maker. It deeply concerns me, that any man should do wrong in any degree. The moment I show any indifference, I disavow Christ. The ministers and churches who have been educated in correct principles and take this ground, sin against great light, and if the blood of all the prophets from Abel to Zacharias was required of the Jews, what shall we say of those who reject the accumulated light of the centuries?

COUNTRY WORK IN WESTERN KANSAS.

HUTCHINSON, Kans., Jan. 17, 1883.

I have just closed a meeting in the western edge of Stafford Co., and as it is perhaps a fair sample of the work in Western Kansas, I give a more detailed account than I would otherwise do.

THE HOUSE

where we meet is a neat and comfortable school-house, just completed. It does the neighborhood great credit. But good school-houses are the rule in Kansas. The people may live in sod houses, with floor and roof of earth, but they will have a neat frame school-house, painted and plastered, and furnished with patent seats.

The settlement is scattering, averaging, perhaps, two families to the square mile, or scarcely so much; and they have been there on an average about three years.

THE FARMS.

It sounds funny to call them farms. True, the soil is good; but a fence is nowhere to be seen, and timber is scarcely thought of. I thoughtlessly spoke to one of the men about an axe, and was quickly informed that he had no such article. Those who have many cattle herd them, and those who have but few tie them out to grass with long ropes.

Their houses are many of them sod, and often consist of a single room. This is true, as yet, of a large portion of the extreme western part of this State. Yet it is wonderful how one good crop is changing this state of things as with magic touch.

The fuel is cornstalks and hay, and the droppings of cattle and sheep dried and used instead of coal. Such people deserve to succeed, and succeed they surely will. Indeed, they are succeeding, and one and another are constantly stepping over the line of pinching poverty into ease and plenty.

THE RELIGION

of the people is as various as the localities whence they came. The use of their house was granted me, but not without some hesitation on the part of the school board. The people came out en masse to hear what I had to say. There were some to welcome me, in some I encountered a bitter prejudice, while many seemed simply curious to hear me. But the "Universal Brotherhood" was there, and some lost their jewel. Speaking of the progress of "Hiram Abiff," I made "Jubilum" assault him at the wrong gate. One Mason quickly asked me which gate I said, and, as I repeated it as I had said it, he quickly shouted, "That's all you know about Masonry." The thing was ridiculously plain that I was all right except in naming the wrong gate. The people were not slow to see it, and better testimony I could scarcely have had. The Lord gave victory to the truth, and the meetings closed with many expressions of interest and approval. They raised five dollars to speed me on my way. That may not seem much to Eastern ears, but it is more for this people than a thousand dollars from an ordinary congregation in an Eastern city. P. S. FEEMSTER.

THE WORK IN MICHIGAN.

GENESEE COUNTY.

Dr. Wicker went with me to Davison Station, ten miles east of Flint on the Chicago and Grand Trunk Railroad.

The meeting was held in the Baptist meeting-house. Elder Cuvier, an old Baptist minister. was appointed chairman. He made a few excellent remarks, in which he pleaded for an impartial hearing and expressed great satisfaction in being permitted to aid in the investigation of so important a public question. Bro. Wicker spoke briefly, but strongly and very instructively.

My Masonic experience was then detailed and the people got a view of the undisguised home life of the man of sin, called Freemasonry. In response to a loud call appointments were made for Monday and Tuesday of the following week.

Monday P. M. I walked from Flint to the place of meeting, there being no train till evening. The house was full. Bro. C., being called to the chair again, stated that he was well known in all that region and did not know that any one could truthfully accuse him of any act unworthy of a Christian, and so far as he knew no one had ever so accused him; but in consequence of his having acted as chairman of the first meeting he had been treated very abusively by Masons—men of the first respectability in the community. He now rejoiced that he had been the chairman, and as a servant of the Lord Jesus Christ he felt greatly honored by the reappointment. He had never liked Masonry, but the revelations of the other meeting had so astonished and impressed him that he felt like standing his ground in the face of all opposition.

The fundamental principles of speculative Masonry were then discussed and each proposition established by the highest Masonic authority, and the same was done on the following evening. It is not too much to say that the sentiment of the community was entirely revolutionized.

The Baptist pastor was present the first night, but I did not make his acquaintance. A Protestant Methodist minister from another neighborhood was present one evening and strongly approved what he heard, and said he had gone much out of his way to be there and was very sorry that he could not attend the other meetings.

The M. E. pastor, after the first meeting seemed to to feel a deep interest in the work we were doing. One afternoon he walked from Flint to Davison so as to be there in time in the evening. He did not say anything publiclo.

The Baptists were much stirred up by the strange conduct of their pastor. Some of them thought he was eithe- Masonic or a little timid, as he was generally considered a courageous man.

John Flint, who had taken two or three degrees of Baalism, told me that Masons in Flint City called on him for money to help Vanderpool, who, they said, was a Royal Arch Companion.

I talked with a Baptist granger, and when he saw what grangeism was he exclaimed, "I an no granger now.," and renounced it with abhorrence.

I conversed with a leading business man in the village who was in sentiment a strong Anti-mason, but he was afraid that it would ruin his business to speak against it. He said that the Methodist minister who was stationed there the previous year, told him that he undertook to oppose Masonry, but finding that it was harming him greatly he decided to say no more I questioned him closely, and learned that the preacher was harmed only in his salary. I have no room for comments, and will only ask the reader to ponder what I have said. The best of all is, God was with us. We did all with a single eye. Praise God.

MACOMB COUNTY.

I spoke twice in the meeting-house at Ray Centre. A prominent farmer in that vicinity had plead with me to expose Masonry in that place. On my way there I called at the house of my brother-in-law, who lives only a few miles from the Centre. He was much alarmed, and said that Ray Centre was the hardest place in all that country. He said it was a Masonic den, and he would not expose Masonry there for his farm.

I went to the "Centre" and learned that my good friend had given out the meetings, but, out of fear, had not given the subject. His brother said he knew all about Masonry, and was very glad I had come. But he said that I had struck the worst place in the country. After hearing the first speech, he concluded that he had known but little about the monster, and told me that he would not be in my place for his farm. He was afraid to have me stay at his house, though he wanted me to—and I did.

The preacher had just delivered a lecture in favor of Masonry, and he was present at our first meeting. A 32 degree Mason was up in front. Bro. Palister and

CORRESPONDENCE.

LET US HAVE THE WHOLE TRUTH.

Mr. John O. Walsh writes a long letter to the President in which he charges the prosecution of the Star-route frauds with trifling in the interests of the accused, and a mockery of justice. At the conclusion of his letter he says:—

> It is the first time, I believe, in the history of the Republic, that men unblushingly, and in the full glare of day, as organized plunderers, openly defy the power of the State. The laws of the land have been most wantonly and shamefully violated by these men; witnesses for the Government have been terrorized by them and their agents; juries corrupted; officers of the Government made to violate their oaths, and justice itself made a mockery of in the capital of the Republic. Such has been the weak, halting character of the prosecution, as a whole, that men knew not on which side the Government was arrayed. Such feelings of doubt and distrust have been engendered by this vacillation, that, in the opinion of many law-abiding citizens, nothing less than your active and positive direction in these cases, Mr. President, will insure a result commensurate with the gravity of the occasion.

Now this is not the first time, by any means, that "men unblushingly and in the full glare of day, as organized plunderers, have defied the power of the State," for the Masonic lodge has been engaged in such works ever since the beginning of the War of the Rebellion. The Star-route conspiracy is not worse than the war's delays and peculations; the back-pay grab; the Credit Mobilier swindle; the fraudulent pensions; the Indian war outrage; the land grabs and the river and harbor appropriations that have marked the course of Congress under Masonic management. Mr. Walsh accuses the Star-route prosecution of trifling, and of leaving it in doubt which party it is aiding, the Government or the conspirators. But these are the prominent, fixed traits and features of Freemasonry. One never knows when the members of the lodge are not trifling; for when men begin trifling, as Masons do, with the oath, with sacred things, with justice, with the dignity of human nature,—when will they not trifle? Who can say when they are in earnest, and when they are in jest? How can men who so far trifle with their own character as to sustain the Masonic lodge, ever be trusted in any thing? If they should happen to be serious at one moment, who can tell that at the next moment they will not go off into some joke?

Men who will unblushingly maintain such a conspiracy against truth and decency as the Masonic lodge might easily find a Star-route fraud a mere pastime. The man who will receive office from the Masonic lodge and remain silent about it, is morally as guilty as the Star-route conspirators.

In fact, this wicked resort of the Republican party to the Masonic lodge for carrying on their operations, is involving the country in the necessity of something more than a mere change of administration. It demands a complete change of the personality of office-holders. It involves the necessity of a revolution; and we, the people, must begin quickly to accomplish that revolution, by the peaceful means of ballots, or it will be forced upon us, together with a change of government, by the sword and fire of war. The God of justice will not long tolerate such trifling as Freemasons indulge in in his name.

AMERICAN.

A COUPLE OF MURDERERS.

CAMERON, W. Va.

That the lodge screens its criminals from justice, is a proposition that needs for proof only the every-day facts open to the view of every observant man; but that in semblance of a holy horror it wreaks particular vengeance on criminals who refuse to seek shelter within its tyled portals, is a fact not so generally known. In illustration I would offer a brief account of a couple of murderers of my own neighborhood.

Nearly thirty years ago a young man named Staggers, about eighteen years of age, son of a Freemason, shot and instantly killed Wm. Ashbrook, a peaceable and respectable citizen and church member, living at Ryerson's Station, Greene County, Pennsylvania. Staggers and a number of other young men were out fishing in Wheeling Creek. Ashbrook's house stood on the bank. The fishing party were opposite Ashbrook's house when Ashbrook was sent for to come out to speak to friends in the party. He didn't go out immediately, but went out at length all unsuspicious of harm. No enmity was known to exist between any of the parties. True, Mr. Ashbrook is said to have mildly advised his daughter to have nothing to do with young Staggers as a beau, he being a low, rough character. Staggers waited till Ashbrook had got within eight or ten steps of him; he then took aim and fired. The ball entered just below the left nipple, and the victim fell lifeless on the spot. Staggers had just been boasting that the pistol which he was flourishing should take a man's life-blood before he went home, but this at the time was regarded as mere bravado. A more cold-blooded, cruel and unprovoked murder was hardly ever committed. Staggers was arrested but immediately bailed out. He showed no signs of repentance, but openly boasted that he intended to kill two more men (a couple of witnesses). He got married and declared he had no intention of either being hung or going to jail.

Three or four papers were published at the county seat, all under the domination of the lodge. They all smoothed it over for the murderer—made it out a very innocent, boyish freak—but struck at the victim venomously. They said that he had provoked the fishing boys by threatening to arrest them for violating the fish laws, which was a lie.

When the trial came off, after much delay, only part of the witnesses were examined, and they only asked a few unimportant questions and then dismissed. The rest were not called to the stand. The murderer was acquitted and returned home in triumph.

Now for the other case. Ira Jobs, who was not a lodge man, some five years ago was engaged in fight with a man named White, when Thomas Evans, an Odd-fellow, came up and kicked Jobs, who seized a stone, threw it at his new assailant and struck him on the back of his head, causing death in a few days. A warrant was issued but Jobs avoided arrest. Finally he went over to the State of Ohio and engaged in coal digging. He worked at one place something near a year and had settled with his employer and was about to leave. He stepped up to a saloon-keeper with whom he was acquainted to shake hands before leaving, when the saloonist drew his pistol and shot him, two balls taking effect, one in the arm, the other in the abdomen. The saloonist, who was undoubtedly a lodgeite, explained that he had been told that Jobs had threatened him, and he thought best to be ahead of him. It was evident Jobs was mortally wounded, but instead of arresting the saloonist it was resolved to arrest Jobs, who, though he had misbehaved in Pennsylvania, was now in Ohio, and in that free and happy country there is no statute authorizing a man's arrest for allowing a man to shoot him. So the Ohio sheriff telegraphs to the Pennsylvania sheriff the state of affairs, and forthwith Jobs was recalled to his native State; to the cost of said State, however, of over five hundred dollars. But at every cost it was necessary to have Jobs where he could not give trouble to the brother in distress.

Jobs was put in jail, where he languished a couple of weeks and died. He was not allowed to be bailed out to come to die under his own father's roof. The men who had contentedly let him run at large for five years after committing the offense for which he was arrested, now suddenly became afraid he might escape. But the most notable thing was the great change in the Waynesburgh papers. They had been pressed to give a more full account of the Staggers murder, but refused, on the plea that they feared to prejudice the public mind against the accused, and chose to leave the matter wholly with the courts. Now they came down on Jobs with unsparing venom. His past life, which indeed was rough enough, was paraded before the public; his features were made to tell tales of inborn villainy; he was another Gniteau; he was beset with quizzing, taunting reporters. The papers had no fears of creating prejudice against him. While in jail Jobs professed deep repentance and prayed most of the time, and called on a clergyman to pray with him and for him. This was regarded as only "possum playing." True, a death-bed repentance is not always to be relied on, but the local press which showed such sympathy for Staggers, now was almost mad at Jobs for repenting. But the penitent Jobs died and was buried, and the unrepentant Staggers still lives and laughs to scorn the powers that be, or rather should be.

EXPERIENCE MEETING.

Rev. J. Renfroe, an aged brother of Troy, Madison county, Illinois, born in 1796, after hearing the sermon by Bro. R. W. Laughlin (mentioned in last Cynosure), went to his home after this, the first sermon he ever heard against Masonry with the words of Simeon on his heart: "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace * * * for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." That evening he was taken sick. He writes by another that he turns over his books and commission to Bro. Laughlin, whom he commends, and adds:

> I am as strong an Anti-mason as ever. My heart is with the Cynosure and the reform work. For the last eight or ten years I have spent money freely to help it on and would love to do still more, but cannot now.

Harold Hakonsen, Eau Claire, Wis., sends the following very agreeable and interesting information respecting an important publication in his native land.

> I have just got for announcement from the author, "Lectures against the Human and so-called Christian Freemasonry" held in Kristiana, the capital of the kingdom of Norway, and now published according to challenge and on several demands from authorities both in the church and state there. The author, Prof. H. G. Stub, at the Theological University of Madison, previous pastor of "Our Savior's" church in Minneapolis, proves himself to be thoroughly posted on the subject, and the book, written in a plain, excellent and convincing manner, recommends itself to every reader and merits a wide circulation. I would call the attention of the Cynosure to the book, and should like to get it translated to the English language and also published here in the Norwegian, because of the high price (now fifty cents) on account of the unreasonable high dues and charges on imported books. The lectures are printed in Kristiana, Norway.

Thomas Reid, of Superior, Nebraska, speaks hopefully as he sends in a list of subscribers:

> This is the opening up of a new field and I will try to keep it open and widen it.

M. L. Worcester of Kingston, DeKalb county, Ill., is an earnest brother whose purse backs up his professions. He says:

> I feel it important that the Christian Cynosure light be in every home in the civilized world in order that this gross darkness, morally speaking, be expelled. I am anxious to have an Anti-masonic lecturer here in Kingston who can work the three Masenic degrees and give a little expose of Odd-fellowship. If one can come and hold an open lodge or something of the sort to open the eyes of the public I would see that there were $25 or $30 given for his services and that he was provided with a home.

TIME TO QUIT.

Of Thaddens Stevens, the eminent statesman, it is said: "During the whole time of his residence in Lancaster, Mr. Stevens was an uncompromising 'teetotaler.' The following is the history of his resolution to abstain. While he was in Gettysburg, he was a member of a select circle who were accustomed to meet around at each other's houses and spend the evening in playing whist and drinking wine and choice liquors. One evening one of the party, a great favorite, who was cashier of the bank in Gettysburg, becoming a little inebriated, was escorted home by two of his friends, who, finding his latch-key, let him in and left him in the entry. supposing that he would find his way up-stairs. In the morning when his wife came down she found him lying upon the entry floor dead. He had had an attack of apoplexy during the night. When Mr. Stevens heard of it he went into his cellar with a hatchet, broke open the heads of his wine and whisky barrels, and would never taste anything of the sort afterward. When he became an old man and very delicate, Dr. Carpenter prescribed some alcoholic stimulants as a medicine. He absolutely refused to touch it."

How many such lessons must others have before they too will banish the accursed drink? How many brilliant minds must be shadowed, how many happy homes must be darkened, how many loving hearts broken, before people will learn that ancient lesson of wisdom, and look not upon the wine when it is red, and so escape the sorrow of that awful hour when it shall bite like a serpent and sting like an adder.—Sel.

FEAR NOT.—An exchange says: "A man crossed the Mississippi recently on the ice, and, fearing it was too thin, began to crawl over on his hands and knees in great terror; but just as he gained the opposite shore, all tired out, another man drove past him gayly, sitting upon a sled loaded with pig iron. And for all the world that is just the way most of Christians go up to the heavenly Canaan, trembling at every step lest the promises shall break under our feet, when really they are secure enough for us to hold up our heads and sing with confidence as we march to the better land."

If I hit your conscience, it was that I meant to do. Not to your ears do I speak, but to your hearts. I would use the words that would be most rough, if I could get at your hearts better with them than any other, for I reckon that the chief matter with a minister is to touch the conscience.—C. H. Spurgeon.

"The church in the world is like a ship on the water The ship is safe enough in the water so long as the water is not in the ship. The church is safe enough in the world, so long as the world is not in the church."

Of the 120,000,000 women of India, 40,000,000 from eight years old and upwards are prisoners for life in the Zenanas, and only 1 in every 1,200 receives any kind of instruction.

The Southwest Holiness Association voted that "no professor of holiness ought to buy or sell tobacco, much less use it."

More than half of the members of the Freshman class in Yale College are professing Christians, the first class in that college of which this was true.

HOME HINTS.

CARE OF CARPETS.

To make sweeping an easy task get carpets of a kind that are easily swept, then save them from unnecessary litter by care about scattering fine chips or crumbs of wood, cloth, paper, or food. Eating should be done in rooms easily cleaned, with carpets of oil-cloth, or similar material, or with bare floors, or with a linen crumb-cloth, spread upon the carpet underneath the table. Children should not be allowed to run about the house with pieces of food in their hands. If their food is not all taken at the table, the child should be obliged to sit still somewhere, catching his crumbs upon a napkin, bib, or apron, instead of dropping them upon the floor. Children who learn "to save mamma trouble," and so get at least a smile of gratitude from her for their thoughtfulness, are far happier than those who are not trained to care, but are allowed to make themselves a general nuisance among orderly people. If they wish to whittle, or to cut paper or dolly things, in your best rooms, you need not necessarily refuse them. Spread a large cloth or newspaper down to catch the chips or clippings, and see that it is safely emptied as soon as the child's work is done. Grown-up people are sometimes very annoying, because of their lack of this kind of early training. They pull flowers to pieces in your parlors, whittle on your smoothly-shaven lawn, scatter fruit peelings and cigar stumps about the yard, scribble on the covers of your magazines and margins of newspapers, and scratch matches on the walls of the house, or leave disagreeable marks of some kind in every possible place.—Agriculturist.

DEADENING PAIN.

The last number of The Medical Record contains a notice of a new and curious method of deadening pain, which is of striking simplicity. It was discovered by Dr. Bonwill, a dentist of Philadelphia, in 1875. In using the method the operator merely requests the patient to breathe rapidly, making about one hundred respirations per minute, ending in rapid expirations. At the end of from two to five minutes an entire or partial absence of pain results for half a minute or more, and during that time teeth may be drawn or inscisions made. The patient may be in any position, but that recommended is lying on the side, and it is generally best to throw a handkerchief over the face to prevent distraction of the patient's attention. When the rapid breathing is first begun the patient may feel some exhileration; following this comes a sensation of fullness in the head or dizziness. The face is at first flushed, and afterward pale or even bluish the heart beats rather feebly and fast, but the sense of touch is not affected, nor is consciousness lost. The effect is produced in females more readily than in males, and in the middle-aged more easily than in the old; children can hardly be made to breathe properly. It is denied that there is any possible danger. Several minor operations, other than frequent dental ones, have been successfully made by this method, and it is claimed that in dentistry, minor surgery and obstetrics it may supplant the common anæsthetics. Dr. Hewson's explanation is that rapid breathing diminishes the oxygenation of the blood, and that the resultant excess of carbonic acid temporarily poisons the nerve centres. Dr. Benwill gives several explanations, one being the specific effect of carbonic acid, another the diversion of will force produced by rapid voluntary muscular action, and, third, the damming up of the blood in the brain, due to the excessive amount of air passing through the lungs. The Record is not satisfied with the theories, but considers it well proved that pain may be deadened by the method, which it commends to the profession for the exact experimental determination of its precise value.

HAIR TURNING GRAY.

I did not dare to use any of the fashionable hair dyes and restoratives. I had seen too many fearful results accrue from their use, and would rather wear a skull cap than become an invalid for all my days. At last I learned what would stop its falling off, and also preserve its color. That was eleven years ago, and my hair is as bright and as brown as ever. It is quite thin on the top of my head, and I ought to expect it, as it is hereditary in my family on my father's side, but it has not come out since I used this recipe. I know it will give neither a stiff neck nor softening of the brain, and it is perfectly harmless.

Recipe.—Take a teacupful of dried sage and boil it in a quart of water for twenty minutes. Strain it off and add a piece of borax the size of an English walnut; pulverize the borax. Put the sage tea, when cool, into a quart bottle; add the borax; shake well together, and put in a cool place. Brush the hair thoroughly and rub the wash well on the head with the hand. Then after a good hard rubbing, brush the hair well before a fire so that it will become perfectly dry. Never use a fine tooth comb, as it irritates the skin, and consequently inflames the roots of the hair. I have given it to many, and they have all had successful results. It does not color the hair, but restores and preserves it. If she is satisfied with the result let her manifest it after she has tried it two or three weeks and say what sage tea and borax has done for her, so that others can be benefited by her experience, and not be tempted, by patented coctions of sulphur and sugar of lead, to risk their health and lives.—Farmer's wife in Country Gentleman.

CURING CHILBLAINS AND FROST-BITES.

Having a reliable remedy for this affliction, I gladly send it: Put one ounce of alum into a tin wash-dish (or old basin), add a pint of water, and place on the stove to dissolve and boil. Throw in a cloth, and when well soaked, lay it as hot as you can bear on the frosted parts without wringing the cloth, and keep it on till cool; then repeat. A frozen foot will bear more heat than the hand. This remedy cured my chilblains twelve years ago, and I have never felt them since.

A friend of mine used dry white chalk in his stockings and found relief. Another remedy is to bathe the feet at evening before retiring, and adding ten drops of muriatic acid to each gallon of water used.—Country Gentleman.

—To cure cold feet the Philadelphia Record says: People who write or sew all day or rather those who take but little exercise, may warm their cold feet without going to the fire. All that is necessary is to stand erect and very gradually to lift one's self up upon the tips of the toes, so as to put all the tendons of the foot at full strain. This is not to hop or jump up and down, but simply to rise—the slower the better—upon tiptoe, and to remain standing on the points of the toes as long as possible, then gradually coming to the natural position. Repeat this several times, and by the amount of work the tips of the toes are made to do in sustaining the body's weight a sufficient and lively circulation is set up. Even the half frozen car-driver can carry this plan out. It is one rule of the "Swedish movement" system; and, as motion-warmth is much better then fire-warming, persons who suffer with cold feet at night can try this plan just before retiring to rest.

THE CHURCHES AGAINST LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

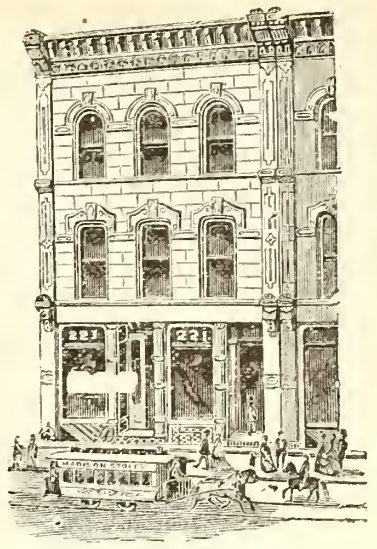
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Rhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.
College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill.
First Congregational, Leland, Mich.
Sugar Grove Church, Green county, Pa.
Military Chapel, M. E., Lowndes county, Miss.
Hopewell Missionary Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Cedar Grove Miss. Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Simon's Chapel, M. E., Lowndes Co., Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Miss. Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Brownlee Church, Caledonia, Miss.
Salem Church, Lowndes Co., Miss.
West Preston Baptist Church, Wayne county, Pa.



Other local churches which have adopted the same principles are—

Baptist churches: N. Abington, Pa.; Menomonie, Mondovi, Waubeck and Spring Prairie, Wis.; Wheaton, Ill.; Perry, N. Y.; Spring Creek, near Burlington, Iowa; Lima, Ind.; Constableville, N. Y. The "Good Will Association" of Mobile, Ala., comprising some twenty-five colored Baptist churches; Bridgewater Baptist Association, Pa.; Old Tebo Baptist, near Leesville, Henry Co., Mo.; Hoopeston, Ill; Esmen, Ill.

Congregational churches: 1st of Oberlin, O.; Tonica, Crystal Lake, Union and Big Woods, Ill.; Solsbury, Ind.; Congregational Methodist Maplewood, Mass.

Presbyterian church, Hoopeston, Ill.

Independent churches in Lowell, Countryman school house near Lindenwood, Marengo and Streator, Ill.; Berea and Camp Nelson, Ky; Ustick, Ill.; Clarksburg, Kansas; State Association of Ministers and Churches of Christ in Kentucky.

THE HOME.

JESUS WENT BEFORE.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Their faces o Jerusalem,
They stepped with laggard feet,
Half timorous, defiant half,
At what they went to meet.
But as they rested, or they talked
Their sad forebodings o'er,
Still leading on the little band
Their Master went before.

He saw in vision maddened throngs,
He saw the crowded hall
Where scribe and priest should mock and flout,
Where cruel scourge should fall.
He saw the cross; its shadow lay
The toilsome pathway o'er,
But pressing on with ardent soul,
The Master went before.

To-day thy pledged disciples, Lord,
Meet sorrow, pain and shame,
Their watchword in the trial time
Thine own all-conquering name.
Though flesh be weak and spirit faint,
And heart be spent and sore,
They cannot fail in any strife
While thou shalt go before.

In presence of thy bitter foes,
In midst of dark defeat,
They yet shall snatch a victory
And taste a triumph sweet.
Nor death itself shall crush them, Lord;
Its final conflict o'er,
The ransomed hosts shall shout and sing,
"Our Saviour went before."

INFIDELS AND THEIR WORK.

[Letter of Thurlow Weed in N. Y. Herald, Aug. 4, 1880.]

Colonel Ingersoll, whom I do not know, has the reputation of being a gentleman of education, with a well-stored mind and attractive personal manners, who speaks fluently. A man thus gifted can do much good, but much more evil, according to the principles espoused and the line of conduct marked out for himself. Colonel Ingersoll, it seems, upon his entrance into active life, chose the left instead of the right pathway, and becomes a reviler of, instead of a believer in, a religion which has been making the world wiser, better, and happier, for almost nineteen centuries. Without questioning Colonel Ingersoll's sincerity or impugning his motives, I am persuaded that if half the time and labor expended in fortifying himself with arguments against religion had been devoted to an intelligent and impartial consideration of the evidences establishing its truths, the country would have had, instead of a reviler, a gifted follower of Him whose mission, labors, and character, viewed merely from a worldly standpoint, inspire admiration, affection, and gratitude. Is it not therefore painful to see men richly endowed perverting their gifts, misusing their talents in presumptuous revilings and ribald jestings against a Creator and a Saviuor from whom every earthly bounty and blessing emanate?

No act of the Saviour's life and no word he ever uttered has been or can be construed or tortured into hostility to the welfare and happiness of every member of the human family. Human laws are founded upon the divine law. All that concerns our happiness here and our hopes of happiness hereafter is derived from the Scriptures. On the other hand, what has infidelity done for us? Who profits by its teachings? After depriving its followers of their belief in a future, how does it compensate them? What does it offer in exchange for a life of immorality? If, for example, Colonel Ingersoll should be summoned to the bedside of a dying friend or a relative, what words of comfort or of hope could he offer? Of what service could he be to that stricken friend? Would he aggravate the sufferings of one whose last hours needed soothing by telling him there was nothing but the cold, dark grave awaiting him? This cruel theory is repelled not only by revelation, but by the laws of nature. Nature is instinct with evidences and confirmations of the truths of revelation. The vegetable and floral world only die to live again. The products of the earth live and die annually. The buried acorn reproduces the living oak. And yet infidelity insists that man, the image of his Creator, wonderfully endowed and gifted, under whose auspices the world has been enlightened, elevated, and adorned, is after a brief existence to be as though he had never been. Contrast the labors of Voltaire and Paine with those of John Wesley. Can it be said with truth that the two former made any one better or happier? Hundreds of thousands of the followers of John Wesley have lived and died, and other hundreds of thousands survive, rejoicing in their conversion from a sinful to a Christian life. The memory of Wesley is everywhere cherished by the good and the pure, while Voltaire and Paine are only remembered for the evil, rather than for the good they did.

If it be urged that the promises of the Saviour have not all been realized, that sin still abounds, and that the world is as bad as ever, it may be answered that religion is working out its mission; that its benign influences are constantly extending, and that light is irradiating the darkest recesses of heathenism and idolatry. It requires no argument to demonstrate the fact the fact that our race is improved by civilization, or that civilization owes its origin and progress to religion. To religious influences we are indebted for all the reforms which benefit society. Our Sunday schools were instituted in obedience to a divine command. In these schools children are taught, "without price," all that concerns their present welfare and their future happiness. These intellectual nurseries have enriched and fertilized, and continue to enrich and fertilize, every city, village, hamlet, and household, throughout the Christian world. If religion had done nothing more than to bless our race with the consecrating influences of Sunday-schools, scoffers should be shamed into silence.

Our city furnishes many examples of the beneficence of religion. Forty years ago a locality to well known as the "Five Points," with a population of several thousands, was the home of the vilest of the vile, and the resort of others equally debased. Men, woman, and children, of all nationalities and colors, herded together, differing only in the degrees of crime and the depths of profligacy habitually practised. Their days were passed in either idleness or depredations. Their nights were spent in dance-house debaucheries. All healthy or wholesome influences were excluded. Children grew up to become either street beggars or inmates of the almshouse' and their parents filled penitentiaries and prisons. These orgies continued year after year, defiant and aggressive, until that pandemonium was invaded by Christian men and woman whose patience would not tire, whose courage was indomitable, and whose devotion has been rewarded by a moral and religious reformation so complete that no part of our city is now more quiet and orderly than the once dreaded Five Points. Thousands of children, then growing up either vagabonds or culprits, are now attending schools, in which they are stimulated by precept and example to live industrious and virtuous lives. Instead, therefore, of going forth, idle, ignorant, and vicious children to prey upon society, the destitute and orphan children of the 'Five Points,' prepared for usefulness by moral and religious training, find happy homes in our rapidly-developing Western States and Territories.

Again, eight years ago, Water street and its surroundings northward from Peck slip had a notoriety almost as unenviable as that of the Five Points. That region was rife with drunkenness, burglaries, pugilism, and their kindred vices. Jerry McAuley was conspicuous in all that was wicked and demoralizing. He had the reputation of being a terror to the precinct, a reputation which, by his own confession, was deserved. But this disturber of the public peace was converted, and then he resolved to devote the remainder of his life to the service of his Master, and, with a faithful, affectionate wife as a helper, he has abundantly atoned for all his offences. For a long time the hisses and howlings of his former associates seriously disturbed his meetings, but courage, perseverance, and patience, finally prevailed, and his work now progresses without interruption. The general character of the neighborhood has been improved; its social and moral tone and atmosphere have been purified. Sailor boarding-houses have been reformed. Sailors now carry their Bibles with them to sea. Moody and Sankey hymns are sung in forecastles. Hundreds of half-naked and hungry wives and children, by the conversion of drunken husbands and fathers, now rejoice in comfortable and happy homes. The Mission church is crowded every day and evening, and three times on Sunday, with intelligent Christian men and women, who, rescued from garrets and gutters, are now reputable citizens, enjoying the fruits of their industry and relating with greatful hearts the miseries of their past, the joys of their present, and the hopes of their future. By all who "went to scoff, but remained to pray,' Jerry McAuley and his exemplary wife are regarded with affection and will be remembered with gratitude.

Infidels of all ages found their strongest arguments against revealed religion upon what they regard as improbable. And yet we are not called on to believe anything more incomprehensible than our own existence. We might, with about the same degree of reason, deny this fact, as to refuse to believe in a future existence. We know that we live in this world. Is it unreasonable to believe that we may live in another? If we are to belive nothing but what we understand, we should go through life incredulous and aimless. We are ready enough to believe on information the things that relate to this world. But we are slow to believe in prophecy and revelation, though both are corroborated by observation, experience, and events. Infidelity, claiming superiority in 'reason' and common sense, asks us to believe that all of grandeur and sublimity, all of vastness and power in the beautiful heavens and upon the bountiful earth.comes by chance; that everything is self-created and self-existing, and that law, order, and harmony are accidents. Those who accept this theory would find its application to their business affairs anything but advantageous. Infidelity and communism are kindred in character, and aim by different methods to undetermine the sanction and securities upon which the world's welfare and happiness rest. Infidelity strikes at religion, communism at property. One seeks to weaken our faith, and the other demands for the idle and worthless an equal share in the savings of the industrious and frugal. Agrarianism (communism of a milder type) came to us some forty years ago from England, with Fanny Wright and Robert Dale Owen as its apostles. This bad element has been reinforced by communism from France and Germany. All three are working out their destructive mission in a city where unhappily they find co-operation and sympathy. To these birds of ill omen comes infidelity equally aggressive, with Robert G. Ingersoll as its teacher. If it be said that, unlike the communistic leaders, Mr. Ingersoll is a 'gentleman and a scholar,' the danger is thereby intensified. The wonder is why a man of good character and associations should take pleasure in teachings whose practical effect is to make his hearers and readers worse instead of better citizens. The strongest argument urged against Christianity, from the days of Voltaire and Paine, is that bad men made a profession of it; that hypocrites are found in all our churches. This is true. But is it not equally true that everything intrinsically valuable gets debased? Frauds are practised in business. The richest fabrics have their imitations. Gold and silver coins are debased or counterfeited. The evils, however, resulting from impositions of this nature are not serious. The intelligence of our people and the penalties to which offenders are subjected afford adequate protection, and for one hypocrite who makes a false profession there are at least nine concientious, devoted Christians. Another argument against religion is that our Saviour was an impostor, and as a corollary that his teachings exert a baneful influence. And yet both of the accusations are disproved by the experience of 2,000 years. If Jesus of Nazareth had been an impostor, his name and everything connected with it would hardly have survived a second generation. There would then have been no occasion for the labors of Voltaire, Paine, or Ingersoll. Other and numerous false teachers have appeared and disappeared. But time and truth have been attesting the divinity of our Saviour. His apostles and their successors, obeying his instructions, have carried and are carrying the glad tidings to the uttermost ends of the earth. As far and as fast as this gospel travels, the world is civilized and its inhabitants benefited.

Civilization and its beneficent institutions abound by the religion which our Saviour instructed his apostles to preach to the heathen. Geographical lines are not more distinctly established than those which mark the progress of missionaries; and while religious light brightens the Christian world, its rays dawn upon the darkest portions of the earth. What have the doctrines of Confucius, Mohammed, and other false teachers, done for their followers but to hold them for centuries in ignorance and barbarism?

But, returning to our own city, let us contrast the labors of two prominent contemporary teachers; one, Mr. Moody, a Christian, and the other, Mr. Ingersoll, an infidel missionary. Mr. Moody is self-made and self-educated. Mr. Ingersoll is a gentleman of some education and culture. That Mr. Moody's labors have been; in the highest degree beneficial to all classes will not be denied. The highest and the humblest listened with charmed interest, and all left the Tabernacle better and happier. The general effect of his preaching, supplemented by the never-to-be-forgotten voice of Mr. Sankey, cleared, braced, and purified the religious, moral, and social atmosphere of the city. The labors of Moody and Sankey were practical. They not only asked, 'What shall the harvest be?' but they obtained in their inquiry-rooms gratifying responses to their questions. Hundreds of drunkards were reclaimed, gamblers and prize fighters were converted. Destitute wives and children and desolate homes have been made happy and bright by the rescue and return of reformed husbands and fathers. Long and gratefully will the advent of Moody and Sankey be remembered. The city is still fragrant with Tabernacle memories. Mr. Moody is turning the results of his labor to good account. The Moody and Sankey hymns, well known to the Christian world, are now sung by native converts in the interior of Africa. The sale of these hymn-books produces a handsome fund, which Mr. Moody devotes to missionary purposes. At his home in Northfield, Mass., he has erected a suitable building for a mission school and home for Indian girls, some fifty of whom from the far West have already been received. Mr. Moody, therefore, has taken up and will carry on the good work so auspiciously commenced by the late lamented Father De Smet. And now I invite Mr. Ingersoll or any of his followers to inform the public how and to what extent they have profited by his missionary labors in this city, what salutary reforms he has inaugurated or even suggested, or in what manner and to what extent he has contributed to the general welfare or happiness of his fellow-citizens."

WEEK-DAY SERMONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

A question that seems to be troubling not a few at the present day when there is such an extensive letting down of the old Puritan bars of practice and creed, is the question of amusements. I do not refer to innocent and wholesome recreations, but to those methods of diversion which are either distinctively worldly or dangerously near the verge.

"What is the harm in my going to the theatre now and then to see a good moral play?" asks some professed believer.

Not long ago a Christian father, keenly alive to the moral dangers of the stage, was expostulating with his son for his theatre going habits. "But members of the church, right here in this very town, go to the theatre. Why shouldn't I?" was the answer. And that perplexed parent, baffled and discouraged could have told you at least one phase of the "harm."

"Why shouldn't I allow my girls to dance?" says the professedly Christian mother. "Not in promiscuous assemblies, I don't approve of that, but at quiet home parties among themselves."

"What is the harm," asks another "of letting my children play with cards? A game of whist is no worse than a game of checquers. Young people need diversion, and if they don't have it at home they will seek it in some questionable resort."

Satan's lies are very plausible. When he said to Mother Eve, "What is the harm in eating an apple? To be as gods knowing good and evil is surely better than a state of stupid innocence, tending this garden of Eden," it was simply a masterpiece of falsehood which with suitable variations of time and place he has tried on her descendants ever since.

The harm is this: You are learning your children the taste of forbidden fruit. Is it less deadly eaten at home and from your hand? Will you let them play with Satan's edge tools and expect no harm will follow?

"But is there any rule in the Bible that covers the question of amusements?" asks a voice at my elbow.

Open your Bible at the twelfth chapter of Romans and read the second verse. "Be not conformed to the world." Is not this a rule, plain, simple, direct? It forbids a Christian from attending a good moral play though patronized by church members or even prominent ministers. It forbids the game of chance whether played in a gambling saloon, in the home circle or at a church fair. And so on through the entire list of amusements which the world has from time immemorial claimed to herself, but which she has always been generously willing to share with any professed Christian who is willing on his part to lower the standard of the cross and come down to her level.

Only half a dozen words in this short Bible rule, but like all the commands of God it is exceeding broad, and covers a good many things besides the theatre, the dance or the card table. It forbids that Sunday paper issued in flagrant violation of His day, but bought and read in many a so-called Christian household. It forbids the Sunday drive which has only pleasure for its object. It forbids all worldly associations secret or open. It forbids the jewels and costly trimming; the feathers and flowers and eight button kids that make so many a professor of godliness nowise different in outward appearance from her worldly, pleasure seeking sister. It forbids not only union with the world, but the shadow of union. It tears away the miserable sophistry that such and such diversions are not sinful in themselves, or no worse than something else that could be mentioned, and all the other specious arguments by which unstable souls are deceived. It says to every Christian, "Come out and be separate." Let the world go its way and you go yours, the straight and narrow way, the King's Highway of Holiness.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE.

Go forth in the battle of life my boy,
Go while it is called to-day;
For the years go out, and the years come in,
Regardless of those who may lose or win,
Of those who may work or play.

And the troops march steadily on, my boy,
To the army gone before;
You may hear the sound of the falling feet
Going down to the river where the two worlds meet,
They go to return no more.

There is room for you in the ranks, my boy,
And duty, too, assigned,
Step into the front with cheerful grace—
Be quick, or another may take your place,
And you may be left behind.

Temptation will wait by the way, my boy,
Temptations without and within;
And spirits of evil, in robes as fair
As the holiest angels in heaven wear,
Will lure you to deadly sin.

Then put on the armor of God, my boy,
In the beautiful days of youth;
Put on the helmet, breastplate and shield,
And the sword that the feeble arm may wield
In the cause of right and truth.

And go to the battle of life, my boy,
With the peace of the Gospel shod,
And before high heaven do the best you can
For the great reward, for the good of man,
For the kingdom and crown of God.

GETTING A SITUATION.

Mr. Silas Brown had advertised for a clerk. He wanted one to begin in the lowest place in the office; but that if found competent he would be advanced. Mr. Silas Brown was a sharp, and some said hard, business man. But he was just, and had really a kind heart under his sharp way.

Edward Clayton had seen the advertisement, and as he wished to do something to help his widowed mother he determined to apply for the situation, though he had heard not a little about Mr Brown's sharp ways. So he presented himself in that gentleman's office, and told him why he had come.

"Your name?" said Mr. Brown.

"Edward Clayton," was the response.

"Age?"

"Seventeen."

"Ever been in business?"

"No, sir."

"What do you know?"

"My teacher, Mr. Grey, of the high school, will tell you that I stood well in my class."

"Do you smoke or chew tobacco?"

"No, sir, my mother would not allow that, even if I wanted to."

"So you are not too old to mind your mother," said the merchant.

"No, sir; and I hope the time will never come when I will be too old to obey her wishes."

"Go to church?" said Mr. Brown.

"Yes, sir, and Sunday school."

"Why?"

"Because it is right and I like it."

"If I employ you will you do exactly as I tell you?"

"Certainly, sir," said Edward, "so long as you do not tell me to do anything wrong."

"Well, that's cool, I declare," said the merchant. "Who is to be the judge, I should like to know, as to what is right and wrong?"

"So far as I am concerned, Mr. Brown," replied the young man, "I must decide by my own conscience. But I do not believe that you would ask me to do anything that was wrong."

"Have you any recommendations?" persisted Mr. Brown.

"No, sir; I have never been in business and so have no one to give me a recomendation."

"Oh well," said the merchant, something like a smile coming over his hard features, "I think you have some very good recommendations. A young man in these days who does not smoke or chew, who is willing to acknowledge that he is obedient to his mother, who attends church and Sunday school, and who says he will be governed by his conscience is, to my thinking, well recommended. I will try you in this situation and we will see how you will do."

So Edward got the place, and I fancy will be able to keep it, at least until he goes out of it into a better one.

Good principles, boys, are the best foundation you can have for a true success in life. You are assured of good principles when you give the keeping of your hearts in loving trust to the Savior.—Kind Words.

A SERMON STOPPED.

A remarkable episode in a public religious service occurred while the clergyman was preaching from the text, "Is it well with thee?" It was at a little church in Yorkshire, England, in the year 1831. The minister was a good man, with no little gospel power in his heart and manner, and he made it solemnly plain to the auditory that the Savior was present, looking into their thoughts with kind inquiry and testing the spirit of every one. "Is it well with thee? Is it well with thee?" Suddenly an exclamation was heard from one of the pews, and a boy twelve years old, who had been intently listening, fell on his knees and began to weep and pray. A strange thrill ran through the congregation, and many rose to their feet. The minister paused in his sermon, and all attention was riveted on the kneeling boy. Everybody knew little Tommy, for he belonged to one of the oldest Yorkshire families, and his ancestors of Barnsley had won the arms of a baronet. He was a bright, gifted boy, now six years motherless, but carrying in his heart the indelible impressions of his mother's religious teachings. The honest Yorkshire people felt too deeply themselves the effect of the sermon to misunderstand Tommy's emotion. They did not think he was crazy. The minister did not. "Let us pray," he said, for he saw more need of prayer than of preaching at a moment when before men and angels a young soul first spoke its want. The whole congregation at once assumed the attitude of devotion. Many strong and loving petitions went up to God for the little boy whom, like Samuel, He had called in his own tabernacle. The scene was a strange one—that sudden prayer-meeting in the middle of sermon-time. The prayers were answered, too. Tommy rose from his knees with a radient face. Thenceforth the zeal of a divine annointing was on him. For the next eight years he continued to give increasing proofs of a Christian spirit, and Christian zeal, and rare and happy fitness for winning souls. When very young he was licensed to preach. At the age of twenty he left his native land and came to the United States. Since then he has not neglected the gift that is in him. The voice that so long ago said to him on the other side of the sea, "Is it well with thee?" has ever been recognized, and he has "followed Jesus all the way." It led him to Long Island; it led him to Albany; it led him down the Hudson again—and very many whom his words first taught the heavenly lesson, now know "it is well" with them. To-day few stand higher among the American clergy, or more honored of the Great Master, than Tommy, the Yorkshire boy—the Rev. Dr. Thomas Armintage, of New York.—The Open Door.

BE HONEST.

A youth was once employed in a large woolen factory. One day the proprietor called the boy into the office, and bade him take hold of a long piece of cloth and pull. "What do you mean?" said the boy. The proprietor then told him he had sold thirty yards of cloth to a lady, and he was ready to deliver it, but that there were but twenty-nine and a half yards in the piece and he wanted to stretch it a half yard. The boy stood in deep thoughtfulness for a while, and then said, "There are but twenty-nine and a half yards in that piece, and if we stretch it that won't be honest, and I can't pull." That boy grew up to be an honest man, and afterward wrote a highly prized commentary of the Bible. His name was Adam Clarke.—Morning Star.

TEMPERANCE.

THE GAINS OF PROHIBITION.

A review of the State legislation of the past year on the liquor question, recently made by Mr. Henry Hitchcock, of St. Louis, before the Missouri State Bar Association, contains some very suggestive and interesting facts. During the year 1881, legislation intended to restrain or prohibit the sale of liquor has taken place in six States, differing very widely in social conditions—viz., Kentucky, Mississippi, South Carolina, Massachussetts, Connecticut and Iowa. In Iowa it took the form of a constitutional amendment, absolutely prohibiting the manufacture or sale within the State of any intoxicating liquor whatever. One of the courts has, however, pronounced the amendment invalid because it was not submitted to the popular vote in proper form, and the question is still under appeal. In Kentucky the legislation has taken the curious form of special acts prohibiting or providing for the regulation of the sale of liquor in particular counties or districts, apparently in satisfaction of the prevailing sentiment on the subject in each locality. Some of these acts, too, show that in some localities the state of opinion which once called for such legislation has changed, for they repeal the prohibitory laws now in force in these localities. In Mississippi things have taken a similar course. The sale of liquor is prohibited in fifty different towns, and within five miles thereof. One act prohibits it in all the towns of a particular county except one, and in another permits the sale of malt liquors only. Another act relieves from the operation of the law which prohibited the sale of liquor within seven miles of two specified churches, "that portion of territory lying north of Strong River and east of Pearl River." In South Carolina we find a similar series of special acts prohibiting liquor-dealing in certain localities, and one general one, providing for a local vote in any town, city or village, on the demand of one-third of the legal voters, to decide by a majority whether there shall be "license" or no "no license," but exempting domestic wine sold by the gallon from the jurisdiction of the local majority.

In Massachusetts the existing license law has been made more stringent. In Connecticut the question of "license" or "no license" was remitted to a majority vote at town meetings, and liquor-dealers were made punishable for selling to habitual drunkards, minors or intoxicated persons, besides being made liable in civil damages for injuries committed by men made drunk on their premises. In Texas the local-option law already in force was slightly amended. In Ohio the so-called "Pond Law" endeavored to evade the constitutional prohibition of licenses, by im posing a heavy special tax on liquor dealers, but the Supreme Court pronounced it unconstitutional. Another act closed on Sundays all "places" in which liquor was sold or exposed for sale on other days, but the difficulties of enforcing it have been found so great that it remains a dead letter. This increasing tendency to legislate about the liquor-traffic in various parts of the Union may of course have several different interpretations put upon it but there can be no doubt as to its indicating increasing public contempt and condemnation of excessive drinking, which, whatever the efficacy or inefficacy of liquor laws, must result in promoting temperance. In England the spread of popular education has already exerted a marked influence on the yield of the liquor taxes, which now constitute about forty per cent. of the revenue, or about $155,000,000.—The Nation.

REFORM NEWS.

one or two other Free Methodists came a few miles to "stand by" me, and they acted as though they had a banner that they were not ashamed of. Praise God.

I did the best I could to put in the breaking-up plough beam deep, and felt that none were able to pluck me out of my Father's hand. There was no open resistance. The devil had always had his way undisputed and undisturbed in the place so far as men are concerned, if I was rightly informed. Perhaps the craft were taken by surprise; perhaps they had never known how bad their chosen system was. Probably they knew they had every thing to fear from investigation, for they were reported as saying that they did not thank the resident minister for advocating Masonry publicly.

The lesson to be learned from these developments is two-fold:

1. The craft have succeeded in making the people of Ray believe that it is not safe to exercise the civil rights guaranteed them in this land of liberty, and that it is equally unsafe in this so-called Christian country to obey God; that an irresponsible, anti-republican, anti-scriptural power, working in the dark, with the power of vengeance in its own despotic hand, and the spirit of vengeance in its infernal make-up, aspiring to inquisitorship over conscience—and grasping after supreme dictatorship in civil and political administration makes it thus unsafe to act like a Christian or citizen of a free republic.

2. To consent to be thus ruled or intimidated is approaching alarmingly near to taking the mark of the beast.

A community ruled by the lodge! A community of slaves! and if religious, of hypocrites! But the people of Ray cannot sin as cheaply as they did, and I hope they will not sin as much as they did.

OAKLAND COUNTY.

I lectured two evenings in the new meeting house near Ortonville, Oakland County. Bro. Webster had advertised the meetings thoroughly and the attendance was good. Hon. Geo. Kipp was chairman both evenings. There are a number of them who hate iniquity and love righteousness, and the Lord was with us. There was no disturbance and no open opposition.

I then spoke two evenings in the Highland, Oakland Co., in the Baptist house. Several persons had spoken against secretism in their preaching and testimonies. There were some real live saints there. The large house was full, some coming ten miles, I think. The lodge men were there in force. One 32 degree Mason was present. It was no time to be weak. The saints prayed and God answered gloriously; praise his name. On the second night I preached from Masonic publications and the Bible. I challenged reply, but none was made. I then gave the steps, grips, signs, etc., and the storm of Masonic indignation burst. The spirit of Masonry breathed out its hate and foamed out its own shame in such a manner as to show that they had made astonishing and ruinous proficiency in the school of depravity. The lodge and the speaker together succeeded in giving the people a pretty thorough knowledge of liberty's most deadly foe, and piety's greatest hindrance.

There were some who professed to be Christians,—young converts, who had taken their demits. After my first lecture much was said about demitted Masons, though I had not mentioned it. It was claimed that they were no longer Masons. I knew it to be a Masonic device to deceive the church people. In closing my second lecture I proved that a demitted Mason was actually a Mason, and in every sense a Mason. The lodge managers are very anxious to have some of their agents in the church. But I struck their device a death blow, and being flanked, they made a stampede. All they seemed to aim at was to show that they had kept still just as long as they could!

Two persons were gloriously saved by grace through the influence of those meetings. Many incidents I must pass by. Money, friends, life, etc., are not troublesome questions! O for grace to do the will of God! How we need the Spirit of power! Lord send it upon us! Amen!

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with book of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

AMERICAN PARTY CLUBS.

The local work of reform politics which, while it may require more labor and self-denial, is at the same time more fruitful of good to the reform, is usually neglected for want of a leader, whose time and energies can be given tirelessly and without stint. But the first step, the organization of a society or club, is often the hardest to be taken; and as a most useful assistance in this direction we are happy to present the following constitution and by-laws prepared by Bro. M. N. Butler of the American Freeman, as a model for American clubs, which can be adopted as a whole or modified to snit the special cases. This is a good step toward the organization of American voters. We shall be happy to note the formation of many local societies upon this basis.

CONSTITUTION.

NAME. ART. I.—The name of this organization shall be "The . . . . . American Club, Number . . . . ."

OBJECT. ART. II.—The object of this organization shall be the dissemination of truth and light concerning American party, as enunciated in its political platform of principles, by lectures, discussions, circulating printed platforms, tracts and books; through newspaper correspondence, and by all lawful efforts, in such way and manner as shall be deemed practical by its membership.

MEMBERSHIP. ART. III.—Any person may become a member of this Club by signing the Constitution and giving his or her influence and means for the promotion of the objects and aims of this organization as declared in Article second.

OFFICERS. ART. IV.—The Officers of this Club shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer, and these Officers shall constitute an Executive Committee.

DUTIES OF OFFICERS. ART. V.—Section 1. It shall be the duty of the President to preside over the meetings and deliberations of the Club and superintend its general interests.

Section 2. It shall be the duty of the Vice President to render the President such assistance as may be desired, and to preside and perform the duties of that officer in his absence.

Section 3. It shall be the duty of the Secretary to keep a record of all meetings and proceedings of the Club, and prepare brief monthly reports concerning local work and forward the same for publication in the official organ of the Club, and other papers.

Section 4. It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to collect all moneys pledged, the membership fees and dues, if any, and pay bills at the order of the Club, or its Finance Committee.

TIME AND PLACE OF MEETING. ART. VI.—The time and place of meeting shall be designated at adjournment, subject to change for sufficient reason by the Executive Committee.

ART. VII.—This Constitution may be altered or amended by a majority vote of members present, provided one month's notice be given at a regular meeting, of such proposed change.

BY-LAWS.

Section 1. The President and three members may call special meetings of the Club, due notice being given to the members.

Section 2. There shall be the following standing Committees: A Finance Committee, whose duty it shall be to solicit funds to aid in defraying necessary expenses, holding special conventions and facilitate further organization of new clubs adjacent thereto. A Political committee, whose duty it shall be to attend such conventions, caucuses, etc., not connected with this body, as may be practical, and report the action and doings of the same to this Club, and otherwise carry out the pleasure of the Club as its representatives; and the Chairman shall be a committee to report all political items pertaining to the work, to the National Committeeman residing in the State. A Committee on Lectures and Public Meetings, which shall make such arrangements as may be the will of the Club. A Committee on Newspapers, whose duty it shall be to solicit subscriptions from all members, and others, urging them to become readers of American party papers, and especially of the journal in which the official proceedings of the Club are published.

Section 3. . . . . members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

Section 4. These By-Laws may be altered or amended by a majority vote of all members present at any regular meeting.

RELIGION AND GOVERNMENT.

I must not forget to mention religion, both in rulers and people, as of the highest importance to the public. This is the most sacred principle that can dwell in the human breast. It is of the highest importance to men, the most perfective of the human soul. The truths of the gospel are the most pure, its motives the most noble and animating, and its comforts the most supporting to the mind. The importance of religion to civil society and government is great indeed, as it keeps alive the best sense of moral obligation, a matter of such extensive utility, especially in respect to an oath, which is one of the principal instruments of government. The fear and of God and the terrors of eternity are the most powerful restrainst upon the minds of men, and hence it is of special importance in a free government, the spirit of which being always friendly to the sacred rights of conscience, it will hold up the gospel as the great rule of faith and practice. Established modes and usages in religion, more especially the stated public worship of God, so generally form the principle and manners of a people, that changes or alterations in these, especially when nearly conformed to the spirit and simplicity of the gospel, may well be esteemed very dangerous experiments in government. Human conduct and character can never be better formed than upon the principles of our holy religion; they give the justest sense, the most adequate views of the duties between rulers and people, and are the best principles in the world to carry the ruler through the duties of his station, and in case a series of faithful services should be followed with popular censure, as may be the case, yet the religious ruler will find the approbation of his conscience a noble reward.—Election Sermon, Boston, Mass., 1778.

What a new day is dawning when men like Edward Atkinson, Francis Parkman, President Eliot, Mark Hopkins, and the faculty of Amherst College, together with a thousand prominent business and professional men of Massachusetts, set their names and seals to a document which says: "We have resolved to vote for no one at the next election of members of Congress whose character and record do not satisfy us, and who will be found, in office, to be a consistent, earnest, and aggressive supporter of civil-service reform. We have no wish to separate from the political parties with which we have always acted and in whose principles we believe; but when any party nominates a candidate from whom adherence to one of its leading principles cannot be expected, it forfeits its rights to the support of its of members. We wish to assure the triumph of our party principles by the nomination and election of men who believe in them all and who will earnestly labor to carry them out. To this end if a candidate for Congress is nominated whose sympathy with the cause of civil-serviee reform is doubtful, we shall seek for ourselves some better representative and cast our votes for him. We advise our fellow-citizens to adopt the same course, to organize in their respective districts, that their strength may be used to the best effect and to so vote that their influence may be felt against the dishonest and degrading system which corrupts the government of our country."

AN INCIDENT OF SEWARD.

A correspondent of the Raleigh News, in the course of an account of a visit of President Johnson and some of his Cabinet to the University of North Carolina, gives this incident: It was the custom of the two literary societies to invite all distinguished visitors to become honorary members. Governor Seward and Postmaster General Randall consented to join the Philanthropic Society, of which I was a member. When they were escorted into the hall the members all rose, and the president of the society put to them the usual question: "Do you promise to keep the by-laws and transactions of this society a secret?" Mr. Randall responded, "Yes," and we all resumed our seats, thinking that Governor Seward had done likewise. To our surprise he remained standing, and said in a distinct and emphatic voice: "I do not, Mr. President; I never joined a secret society in my life. I never was a Freemason, Oddfellow, or Know Nothing. I do not promise." We were at our wits' end, when one of our cleverest members rose and said: "Mr. President, I move the rules be suspended in Governor Seward's case, and he be admitted without the usnal promise." This happy but unconstitutional mode of disposing of the question was immediately adopted, much to our relief, and the Governor became one of the Socii.

THE CHURCHES.

—Ex-Congressman Green Clay Smith, of Kentucky, is now pastor of the Baptist Church in Louisville.

—Rev. H. C. Leland, well known to many of our readers in Wisconsin and Iowa, has entered on pastoral work at Highland Park, Chicago, Ill.

—A General Convention of the United Brethren is to be held in the month of June next, at (or near) Petersburg, Ohio, for the purpose of organizing a general United Brethren Holiness Association.

—Rev. Dr. Henry H. Jessup has been appointed as United States minister to Persia. He has long been laboring as a missionary in Syria, and his familiarity with Oriental people fits him to be our first representative before the Shah of Persia.

—Messrs. Moody and Sankey, as we learn from the London Christian of Dec. 14, have been holding very successful meetings in Southhampton and Portsmouth. The attendance has been from 3,000 to 4,000 at each meeting, completely filling the large halls in which they were held.

—Rev. J. L. Fonda, for nine years pastor at Morris, Minn., spent the Sabbath with old friends at Wheaton, where he graduated in 1868.

—Rev. Geo. R. Milton, son-in-law of Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit, has received a call from Winnebago. Ill., Congregational church of very favorable nature. The church has been for some time divided on account of the location of the meeting house, but a settlement of this question and the bnilding of a new church is promised if Bro. Milton will accept.

—The Wesleyan church at Wheaton has for years depended upon the Missionary Society at Syracuse for $100 or $200 in order to snpport a pastor. But this year under Prof. Stratton's pastorate they have become self-sustaining and are ablc to aid other weaker churches.

—The students under the energctic Augustana Swedish Synod, who are studying at the seminary at Moline, are early put to work. About fifty of them were lately sent to different places in twelve different States to assist in the work of the church. Snch energetic measures are good for both church and students.

—The First Church of Christ, Galesburg, Rev. A. R. Thain, pastor, has just closed its year. The funds are raised by voluntary contributions made each Sunday morning. Last year they received in this way $2,596, and from other sonrces about $300. They have expended about $400 in improvements in the way of heating and furnishing. The pastor's salary has been incrcased from $1,800 to $2,000.

—The teachers in the Chinese Sunday-school which meets at Farwell Hall, Chicago, prepared a Christmas entertainment for their pupils dnring the season. A performer, masked and hideously arrayed was introdnced during the performance, whose appearance on such a solemn occasion startled and shocked the simple Chinamen, who thought they beheld onc of their heathcn deities reappearing in a Christian land.

—The death of the wife of Rev. J. D. Baker of cambridge, Ill., on the 29th of December is announced. She died at the age of 67 years. Mr. Baker began pastoral labor with the Congregational church in Cambridge in 1852 and remained in this work for seventeen years, greatly esteemed by the churches throughout the county. After laboring in other places for several years, he returned to the place endeared by many associations last April where with his companion he wished to spend the remnant of their days.

—The firm of sugar refiners, consisting of Bros. R. L. and A. Stuart, was formed in 1828, and the co-partnership was not dissolved until after the death of the junior in 1879, a period of fifty-one years. Great as was their business success, their names as philanthropists will be remembered long after that is forgotten. The Stewarts were Old School Presbyterians, and devoted to the interests of the church. It was the custom of the brothers to distribute yearly a certain nnmber of thousands of dollars for benevolent purposes, whether the profits of the year had been large or small. Up to the time of the death of Alexander Stuart, in 1879, the brothers had given away for various objects $1,391,000. Since the death of his brother, Robert L. Stuart has given a half million dollars for charitable purposes.

—The Rev. Mr. Seguin, who is now laboring in connection with the Judson Mission in this city, says congregations fill the church three times a week. It holds about a thousand. There are three missionaries, including himself, assisting Dr. Judson. He has charge of the French work, and the two others have different branches. Dr. Jndson commenced with forty members and has now 400. The Sunday-school has about four hundred children and the French Sunday school, which has just commenced, has fifteen children. The French services are attended by about fifty. A French library and reading room is commenced, and Mr. Seguin asks for books and periodicals. This admirably arranged and thoroughly live city mission, will doubtless ere long have Italian and Spanish-speaking missionaries in connection with it. There is a French-speaking population of 27,000 in its vicinity.—N. Y. Witness.

REVIVAL.

A brief bnt interesting letter from Bro. Isaac Hyatt, of Dale, New York, tells us of a gracious visitation of the Spirit upon his people:

"Last Monday (Jan. 8, '83,) the Free Baptist Church at Dale, N. Y., closed a week of meetings. Rev. A. P. Graves, D.D., Mr. W. S. Nickle, with their wives, assisted and rendered very efficient service.

"Bro. Graves stoutly rebukes all kinds of sin, and teaches his fellow-men to renounce everything wrong and come to God in the name of Jesus. Sister Graves' talks to parents and children were excellent. She is an able speaker, and lovingly persuades her hearers to accept the truths of the Gospel.

"Mr. Nickle and his wife are sweet singers. They sing with the spirit and understanding. The church has been quickened, and many are inqniring to know what they shall do to be saved."

UNDENOMINATIONAL CHURCHES IN KENTUCKY.

SECOND PAPER ON BEREA COLLEGE

Persecutions multiplied, Still the churches and the school continued to grow. The war came. The school was for a time suspended. At the close of the war it was again resumed. Bro. Fairchild and others came. We have now five professors and six lady teachers. We have spacious grounds,—good buildings and a hundred thousand dollars as an endowment fund. About four hundred pupils—male and female, colored and white in nearly equal proportions, attend each year—harmonious—very orderly.

The testimony of the church and the college is against Sabbath desecration, intemperance, secret oath-bound societies which subvert justice and, to the extent of their influence, the religion of Christ.

The students in the college, the people of the village and region ronnd about, worship in the one church and one church honse of the place. Thus we seek to exhibit before the people the idea of the purity and unity of God's church. Several of the churches previously referred to, are twenty, thirty, and even a hundred miles from Berea. These churches are feeble and need pastors who can be in their midst, and nurse them into vigor in the midst of surrounding opposition. For this undenominational work the sects are not prepared to aid. They are busy in what they call "church" (sect) "extension." The mission boards are the propagandas of these sects and denominations. We know these divisions are contrary to the spirit and letter of the gospel, a source of weakness to the church, a source of stumbling to the world, and the great hindrance to the reforms.

With these convictions and our observation and experience of the past, shall we abandon the work of thirty-five years and now set up another denominational work—take a name indicative, as we may assume, of some ONE feature of the Gospel plan and thus naming ourselves help multiply schisms, already the bane of the South and the world? Does the benevolent public demand this at our hands as a condition of that aid and cooperation necessary to highest efficiency? Or will they say, Go on as God has seemed to lead and defend? Whatever others may do or not do, our mind is made up. With God's help, we shall go forward.

The American Missionary Association started nudenominational. Soon after the war it committed its self as the organ of one denomination, and now, as in the November number of its magazine, styles itself the "left wing of the Congregational corps."

I was made to see that so long as I received aid from that association—reported as a missionary with commission from that Association, I would be considered, by the great body of readers, as doing their denominational work. I may not, whatever be the sacrifice, allow myself to be thus regarded.

In 1848 I declined the aid of the Home Missionary Society. It was then sustaining quite a number of slaveholding churches. I remonstrated again at the policy pursued. The society thought I ought to be satisfied with their aid to me, whilst I was bearing testimony against the iniquity of slavery. However small my name, my influence, I felt it ought not to be where it would bid God speed to an association in a wrong work. So I now feel in reference to denominationalism and have therefore declined the aid of the Am. Miss. Association

I cannot make this people here feel that I greatly deplore the evils of denominationalism so long as I am commissioned by and receive the aid of denominationalism. If needs be, I must suffer for their good; but "Jehovah Jireh."

The time is, and has been for eighteen hundred years, when evangelists, in obedience to their Lord, should "Go, disciple"—convert men to Christ in all the fullness of his character—baptising them in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit—exhort them to come together as the one church of the place, and take the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament as their rule of faith and practice. There are ministers here in the State, like Bro. J. F. Browne, Bro. Cone and others who would like to do this work; but they need aid in the work. The people of the South have not been educated to the work of sustaining the gospel as they ought to do. Those who will receive the gospel referred to, are at present, comparatively few, and have not much of this world's goods. Also the people, colored and white, are bewildered by denominational factions, and their time and money sponged up by numberless secret orders offering them false religions and delusive hopes. Men who will labor successfully with such a people, and against prevalent vices, cannot at first expect an adequate support.

We need an association that will see that faithful men are wisely and faithfully sustained. JOHN G FEE.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON V., Feb. 4, 1883.—THE PRINCE OF LIFE.—Acts 3: 12-21.

GOLDEN TEXT.—In him was life; and the life was the light of men.—1 John 1: 4.

[☞ Take your Bible and study the Lesson before reading the Notes.]

NOTES.

When Peter saw it, i. e., the crowds rushing into Solomon's porch, and their wonder, as may be inferred from his opening words. Now was Peter's opportunity; and he improved it with promptitude and skill. The Master, in calling him, had promised to make him a fisher of men; and here the tact and energy of the fisher appear.—Arnot.

Ye men of Isreal, why marvel ye at this? Why are you at a loss, astonished, as if something unaccountable had happened? A miracle had often occurred among them; God had already, through the apostles, exhibited signs and wonders, especially on the day of Pentecost.—Peirce.

The God of Abraham, etc. Thus Peter shows them that this was no new religion, no new power, but their own proudly acknowledged God who had done this, as he had done wonders for them before.—Peloubet. No words could have riveted the attention of the people like these. "We have not done this great thing which so astonishes you, but the Eternal of hosts, the Glory and Hope of Israel, the covenant God, in whose royal house we all are standing—he has done it.—Schaff.

Pilate....determined to let him go. Not, was determined, which indicates only mental purpose, but had adjudged him innocent, and then retracted his decision and permitted the crucifixion, only in obedience to the clamor of the mob and the threats of the priests (Luke 23: 14, 16; John 19: 4; Matt. 27: 24; Mark 15: 15).—Abbott.

Denied the Holy One....desired a murderer. The picture St. Peter paints to the Jews of their guilt is exceedingly vivid. He piles up the terrible contrasts. This Jesus God hath glorified; but ye, denying that he was Messiah, have delivered him up to shame and death. Pilate, the mocking, careless Roman, could not find in his heart to condemn him: but you urged him on, clamoring for his blood. You were offered (ver. 14) the choice between a murderer and the Holy and Righteous One, and you choose the murderer. The Prince of Life, whom God raised from the dead, you in your shortsightedness deprived of life.—Schaff.

The Prince of Life. The Author of Life, i. e., of life in the fullest sense in which the Scriptures ascribe that property to the Saviour, viz., spiritual or Christian life—eternal life (comp. John 1: 4; Heb. 2: 10), and also natural or physical life (comp. John 5: 26; 11: 25).—Hackett. Its primary meaning is one who is the originator of that to which the title is attached. The "Prince of Life," is accordingly he who is the source from which life and salvation flow.—Plumptre. Christ is the Author (Prince) of life, because he preached eternal life to the world, proposed it to believers, purchased it for them by his precious blood, and shall at length bestow it upon them.—Gloag.

Yea, the faith which is by him, hath given him this perfect soundness. The faith which Peter possessed, and by means of which he had healed the lame man, is represented as the work of Christ (i. e., faith in Christ is the gift of Christ); in other words, the expression "which is by him" may be explained thus: Faith in Jesus of Nazareth as Messiah came to Peter, partly owing to his having witnessed the life and work, and especially the resurrection of Christ—partly through the revelations of the Spirit sent by Christ from the Father at Pentecost.—Schaff.

I wot (know) that through ignorance ye did it. The language of Peter concedes to them such a palliation of the deed as consisted, at the time of their committing it, in absence of a distinct conviction that he whom they crucified was the Lord of Life and Glory (Luke 23: 34; 1 Cor. 2: 8); but it does not exonerate them from the guilt of having resisted the evidence that this was his character, which had been furnished by his miracles, life, doctrine and resurrection.—Huckett. Sins of ignorance may be forgiven more easily than wilful sins, because they do not show so hard a state of the heart.—Peloubet.

Should suffer. The doctrine of a suffering Messiah was totally at variance with the current views of the Jewish church, and hard to digest even by the Twelve, up to the day of their Lord's resurrection. Our preacher himself revolted at it, and protested against it, when first nakedly announced, for which he received a terrible rebuke. Here he affirms it to be the fundamental truth of ancient prophecy realized unwittingly by the Jews themselves, yet by a glorious divine ordination. How great a change had the Penteeostal illumination wrought upon his views!—J. F. and B.

That your sins may be blotted out. (The first effect of repentance.) Instead of remission we have here the stronger figure of obliteration. The Greek verb is applied by Xenophon to the erasure of a name from a catalogue or roll. It may here denote the cancelling of the charges against any one, and this amounts to the same thing as remission (2: 38).—Alexander. This figurative expression was much more foreible with the ancient mode of obliteration. The ancients wrote on tablets with wax, and when they wished to blot out what they had written, they used the flat end of the iron pen, and thus obliterated every trace of it. So the repenting sinner who turns to this risen Savior has the promise of an utter expunging of his sins—rubbing out every trace of them—from God's book of account.—Jacobus.

Until the times of restitution. Better, RESTORATION of all things, i. e., at Christ's second coming. But this phrase, "the restoration of all things," is used in two senses in the New Testament. First it is said (Matt. 17: 11; Mark 9: 12) that Elias must "first come and restore all things." There it signifies the beginning of Christ's kingdom. As Christ's death was for all men's redemption, the restoration of all things may be said to have begun then. In the present verse the words have reference to the time when the course of that restoration shall be completed.—Cambridge Bible. The full signification of the word is renewal or restoration of primeval purity, order, happiness; setting right the present wild disorder and confusion; good will then triumph over evil, truth over falsehood.—Schaff.

God hath spoken by all his holy prophets. All is omitted in the best manuscripts. (See Deut. 18: 15, 18, 19; Joel 3: 17, 18; Ezek. 34: 23-27; Isa. 60: 13; 62: 4; 65: 17-19.) This glorious restoration to holiness and happiness is the theme of all prophecy in every age in the Old Testament. It was the expectation of this "restitution," so deeply rooted in the hearts of all Jews, which was the principal cause of their summary rejection of a suffering Messiah. They read their glorious sacred books in the strong, false light of their own jealous hopes and burning desires; and so they passed over the plain intimations of some of their noblest prophecies, which told them how the glory they longed after could only be reached through a long, weary training of pain and sorrow, and the triumph of Messiah only through his suffering and death.—Schaff.

THURLOW WEED'S RECOLLECTIONS.

EXTRACTS FROM HIS LETTERS.

My first employment was in attendance upon an ashery. The process of extracting lye from ashes and of boiling the lye into black salts was common-place enough; but when the melting down into potash came all was excitemnt and bustle. This labor was succeeded, when the spring had advanced far enough, by the duties of the "sap-bush." This is the season to which the farmers' sons and daughters look forward with agreeable anticipations. In that employment toil is more than liberally sweetened. The occupation and its associations are healthful and beneficial. When your troughs are dug out (of basswood, for there were no buckets in those days), your trees tapped, your sap gathered, your wood cut and your fires fed, there is leisure either for reading or "sparking." And what youthful denizens of the sap-bush will ever forget the "sugaring off" their share, or the transparent and delicious streaks of candy congealed and cooled in snow?

Many a farmer's son has found his best opportunity for mental improvement in his intervals of leisure while tending "sap-bush." Such, at any rate, was my own experience. At night you had only to feed the kettles and keep up your fires—the sap having been gathered and the wood cut "before dark." During the day we would also lay in a good stock of "fat pine," by the light of which, blazing brightly in front of the sugar-house, in the posture the serpent was condemned to assume as a penalty for tempting our great first grandmother, I have passed many and many a delightful night in reading. I remember in this way to have read a history of the French Revolution, and to have obtained from it a better and more enduring knowledge of its events and horrors, and of the actors of that great national tragedy than I have received from all subsequent readings. I remember, also, how happy I was in being able to borrow the book of a Mr. Keyes, after a two-mile tramp through the snow, shoeless, my feet swaddled in remnants of a rag carpet.

In the autumn following our removal to Cincinnati I had "worked out" and earned leather (sole and upper) enough for a pair of shoes, which were to be made by a son of Crispin. (Deacon Badger, if I remember rightly), who lived on the river a mile and a half away. The Deacon, I doubt not, has gone to his rest, and I forgive him the fibs he told, and the dozen journeys I made barefooted over the frozen and "hubby" road in December before the shoes were done.

My mind retains most vividly incidents rather than individuals. In those days, hard as it may seem now, poor men, however honest, lived in dread of imprisonment. My father was one of a class whom ill-fortune tracked through life. He worked hard, but never prospered. His horse was always sick, or lame, or was backing off the dock. The debtor's prison, therefore, was ever staring us in the face. But there was this blessed mitigation of the horrors of the debtor's prison: there were goal liberties connected with the prison, of which a debtor, with a reputation for honesty, and a wealthy friend who would sign his bond, to remain upon the "limits," might avail himself. The limits, accurately defined, extended to business parts of the village, so that a poor man stood some chance of keeping the wolf from devouring his wife and children. This, however, was not the full measure of the law's humanity. On Sundays the debtor was free, and on these days I used to roam with my enfranchised father down to the "Point," over to the Shad Fishery, or up to Jefferson, with a deep sense of gratitude that he was permitted one day in the week to walk God's earth and breathe his atmosphere unrestrained. Creditors were on the watch always for truant debtors, who sometimes failed to return to the limits before 12 o'clock on Sunday night.

In Everard Peck of Rochester, for whom I worked after a wife and children were upon my hands (that wife, God bless her, always doing more than her share for the support of all), and to whose office I seemed to have been providentially attracted, I found that friend who "sticketh closer than a brother."

I rejoice that the memory of Franklin is cherished by printers. No page of history is adorned by a brighter name. His precepts and examplet—both eminently wise and good—have exerted a salutary and living influence over the civilized world. But to printers, especially, have his teachings been profitable. Stimulated by his virtues, and emulous of his fame, printers have since risen to high and enviable stations.

There is no man, I venture to say, who has the slightest intellectual relation to our craft, who has not been rendered wiser, better and happier by reading the life of Benjamin Franklin. And many a printer's devil, who, but for his familiarity with the history of Franklin, would have groveled through life, has risen to eminence. Every State in the Union has furnished gratifying illustrations of this fact.

Progress and mechanism have divested our art of much of its interest. I have never been able to look with complacency upon these innovations; and if our great exemplar, Franklin, could visit earth, his spirit would grieve at the vandalism which has robbed "press work" of all its intellectuality. Benjamin Franklin, though a good "compositor," was a good "pressman" also, and worked as such, from choice, while a journeyman.

But now only one branch of our trade is taught to apprentices. A printer is now no longer connected with the "press-room." The printer of the present day is a stranger to its healthful toil, its rich humor, its merry laugh, its habitual jests, and, I am constrained to remember, its too frequent revelries. The customs of the press-room, along with its labors, are all obsolete. Who, of the present generation of printers, knows anything of the mystic and magic power of signature "O?" And how can a boy make a good printer whose initiatory steps were not taken in treading a pelt? Who has forgotten the weariness of of that treadmill? I remember with gratitude the innovation which gave us dressed deer skins instead of green pelts for balls.

Railroads, steamboats, canal boats, etc., have had their share, too, in plucking flowers from our path. The journeyman printer, like the hatter and shoemaker, used to go on his "tramps." These were delightful peregrinations. I have traveled on foot from Onondaga to Auburn, from Auburn to Utica, from Utica to Herkimer, thence to Cooperstown, thence to Albany, thence again to Utica, etc., working a few months or weeks, as chanced, in each place.

Time has wrought great changes, and nowhere else with such a legible hand as in your city (New York). I obtained a "situation" there in June, 1815. It seems as if but a night had intervened, and that all I now see, in waking, of grandeur and magnificence, of a wilderness of dwellings and forests of masts, is the work of enchantment.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich, and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of CAPT. WM. MORGAN. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DeGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the ChrisTIAN RELIGION. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen $1.25.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Gcesiin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the RePUBLIC, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen $2.00.

General Washington Opposed to SeCRET SOCIETIES. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one InITIATE. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. Each of these able writers in clear, forcible language treats the subject in one or more of its varied phases. Rev. David McDill in six chapters treats of 1. "Their Antiquity; 2 Their Secrecy; 3. "Oaths and Promises;" 4 "Profaneness" 5. "Their Exclusiveness;" 6. "False Claims." Prest Blanchard handles the topic: "Shall Christians join Secret Societies?" in a masterly way, showing clearly that they are all opposed to the genius of Christianity; and Dr. Beecher closes with his Report on Secret Societies, which was adopted by the Congregational Association of Illinois at Ottawa in 1866. In cloth, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.25. Paper cover, 15 cents; per dozen, $1.25.

Proceedings of Pittsburgh Convention. Containing Official Reports; Addresses by Rev. D. R. Kerr, D. D., Rev. B. T. Roberts, Rev. G. T. R. Meiser, Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., Prest. J. Blanchard, Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., Rev. Woodruff Post, Rev. Henry Cogswell, Prof. C. A. Blanchard and Rev. W. E. Coquilette; also Report of the Political Mass Convention, with Platform and Candidates for the Presidential Campaign of 1876. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin, objects, what it has done and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the end sought; the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and By-laws of the Association, condition of the Carpenter donation, with engraving of building donated by Mr. Carpenter; tables showing the number of pastors and communicants in churches that exclude members of secret societies, tabular view of local, county, state and national conventions, and list of organizations auxiliary to the National Christian Association; brief opinions of eminent men on secret societies, and testimonies of religious bodies against them. 25 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Minutes of the Syracuse Convention. Containing addresses by Rev. B. T. Roberts, Chas. W. Greene, Esq., Prof. C. A. Blanchard, Rev. D. P. Rachbun, Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Mrs. M. E. Gage, Elder J. R. Baird and others. Unpublished Reminiscences of the Morgan Times, by Elder David Bernard; Recollections of the Morgan Trials, as related by Victory Birdseye, Esq., and presented by his daughter, Mrs. C. B. Miller; Secretary's Report; Roll of Delegates; Songs of Mr. G. W. Clark; Paper by Enoch Honeywell; Constitution N. C. A.; Reports of Committees and a Report of the Political Meeting. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Anti-Mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 31 Cynosure tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies; and the dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized secrecy are shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public. Those who wish to circulate anti-Masonic Tracts ought to have the book to select from. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret SOCIETIES. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and CHURCH. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Although this Monitor is extensively used by the lodge, especially in conferring the higher degrees, it is publicly called an exposition, and not allowed as authority.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The National Board of Trade, at its closing session in Washington, adopted a resolution in favor of the abolition of all internal revenue taxes except those on tobacco and spirituous and fermented liquors.

—Rev. Arthur Little, of Chicago, was summoned from his pulpit Sabbath morning on account of the critical condition of his wife, who was dead when he reached her bedside.

—The Chicago Nail works and a Smelting establishment, both among the largest of their kind, were burned here last week.

—The Quincy House, one of the largest hotels in Quincy, Ill., was almost entirely destroyed by fire Thursday morning. Although there were nearly a hundred people in the building when the fire was discovered, there was no loss of life, owing to the promptness of the clerks and employes.

—A calcium light, in which hydrogen and oxygen gases had been improperly mixed, exploded on the stage of the Grand opera house, Milwaukee, Thursday evening, mortally wounding two men, and seriously injuring others.

—Another important measure has been introduced in the Illinois legislature, which requires all keepers or persons controlling hotels, seminaries, colleges, or other places where persons are lodged, to provide and keep in repair suitable fire-escapes.

—Throughout the entire western part of the State of Kansas a storm of snow, sleet, and hail, the fiercest ever known, prevailed last week. The ground was thickly covered with snow, and the cold was intense. Cattle and sheep suffered terribly, and it is thought the losses in that region will be greater than at any time since the sentlement of the country. The storm came from the west, and increased in violence as it neared Topeka, covering the railroad tracks to such a depth that men will have to work for days before travel can be resumed. In Nebraska there was a fall of dry snow, which was accompanied by high winds. The railroad tracks were covered to a great depth, and trains in the central and northern portions were delayed for several hours, while many were entirely blockaded. The storm reached Chicago on Saturday night, the thermometer falling to 32 degrees in the vicinity of the city —The boilers of the steamer Josephine exploded Wednesday in Port Susan bay, Oregon, while the passengers were at dinner. Eight persons were killed.

—The heaviest rainfall for many years occurred Thursday night in New Orleans. All the streets were flooded. Canal street was a river, and no land was visible in the Fourth and Third Districts. The city squares were lakes, and the streets perpendicular with the river ran a volume of water one to three feet deep, at a velocity of ten miles an hour. Many passed the night in the horse cars, being unable to get from them to their homes.

—The loss of life by an accident in Southern California on the Southern Pacific road is stated at twenty-one, eleven of the corpses being beyond recognition. Among the lost is Colonel Larrabee, formerly a member of congress from Wisconsin.

—Fifty Chinamen were killed Sunday by the explosion a giaut-powder establishment four miles north of Oakland, California.

—A stock-raiser in Wyoming named Swann leased a number of alternate sections and then fenced in an enormous area of school lands lying between. The secretary of the interior has called the attention of congress to the outrage, and directed the proper legal officers to prosecute Swann.

FOREIGN.

—The steamship Cimbria, from Hamburg, was run down by the Sultan off the island of Borknm, on Saturday, in a fog. She had 23 cabin passengers, 362 steerage passengers, and a crew of 92. One small boat landed at Cuxhaveu with 39 persons, and 17 others reached Weser light-nouse. Six steamers are out in search of the missing boats. It is feared that hundreds are lost, chiefly emigrants from Eastern Prussia.

—A terrible explosion occurred Friday in a powder factory in the suburbs of Amsterdam, and forty lives were sacrificed.

—The death is announced of Prince Frederick Charles Alexander, a brother of the emperor of Germany, at the age of 82. The silver wedding festivities of the crown prince have in consequence been abandoned.

—Advices from Geneva, Switzerland, report a great land-slide in the valley of the Fonery, but fortunately without loss of life. An immense seetion of a mountain became loosened, and began to move slowly downward on the village of Mara. When the movement was observed an alarm was raised, and the population fled in haste. Their departure was none too sson, for the great mass of earth and rocks kept on its way, demolishing the entire village.

BUSINESS.

TO OLD SUBSCRIBERS.

We want to keep all our old readers while adding many new ones to our list. We shall do our best to merit your confidence, and hope to receive your eo-operation and continued patronage. Give us a fair trial before you "cut our acquaintance." We come to you with a clean dress, a pleasant face, and words of truth and soberness, modestly asking a weekly welcome at your fireside. We shall aim to make your home brighter, your burdens lighter, and your hearts better, by our coming; so be sure it's the right thing to do before you say, "Discontinue my paper."

INTEREST, DUTY AND RESPONSIBILITY.

INTEREST.

You, dear reader and friend, are interested in extending the circulation of the Christian Cynosure, beeause it advocates your principles.

DUTY.

It is your duty to get others to take and read it, because they need the paper and the effort will do you good.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The responsibility of making it pay its bills is yours, and the surplus if any, will belong to the cause you love and are laboring to extend.

HOW TO GET SUBSCRIBERS.

1. Call on any persons you may know, who have religious convictions and after showing them a copy of the paper, quietly explain its mission and the necessity of knowing what the secret orders are and what they are doing in society, in church, and in state.

2. If you don't succeed in getting a subscription leave a few tracts specially suited to the particular case. Give some to the children, and the parents will be sure to read them. We have one illustrated for boys. If you are not supplied, we will furnish you. When you meet your neighbor again mention the matter or call if convenient.

3. Get a supply of tracts and distribute them judiciously in the Sabbath-school, (see advertised list.) If your pastor is friendly, ask him to mention it on Sabbath. Mention it quietly yourself in meetings where you deem it appropriate, and with a little grit, grace and perseverance you will yourself be surprised at your own success.

4. Look carefully over your field. Make up your mind how many subscribers you ought to get. Ask the Disposer of all hearts to help you. Then get them. When you go to your work remember you are not alone. Besides Him who says, "Lo! I am with you," there are other thousands engaged in the same cause.

☞We have arranged with dealers to furnish books, etc., in the general trade so that you need not divide you orders but send direct to headquarters.

☞Send your orders for the Weed pamphlet, one hundred thousand now ready. The general and the religious press are discussing it. Dr. McMurdy and the secretists generally denouncing it and its author. Everybody ought to read it. Next week we shall give our readers a portrait of its author and more facts in the case.

A PREMIUM WORTH HAVING.

We will send a copy of the Weed Pamphlet to every old or new subscriber who will send a letter containing the order for a Cynosure subscription, and money, plainly addressed to W. I. PHILLIPS, Christian Cynosure office, 221 West Madison St., Chicago, on or before the first day of February next.

☞Our friends will aid in meeting the expeuses of keeping up their Publishing House, by sending orders for books either anti-secret or the publications of the secret orders. Direct to W. I. Phillips, 221 West Madison St., Chicago.

A large number of the deeply interesting letter of the late Thurlow Weed to the Batavia Couvention are still awaiting the orders of friends. Single copy, 5c; $3.00 per hundred, or $20.00 per thousand. Now is the time to distribute this very important document. Send orders to 221 West Madison street, Chicago, office of the Christian Cynosure.

MASONIC BOOKS

FOR SALE BY

EZRA A. COOK,

7 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

Books sent post-paid on receipt of retail price, but books by mail are at risk of person ordering, unless 10 cents extra is sent to pay for registering them, when their safe delivery is guaranteed. Books at retail ordered by express are sold at 10 per cent. discount and delivery guaranteed, but not express paid. Postage stamps taken for small sums.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicographer, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority because they tell too much.

General Ahiman Rezon and Freemasons' Guide. By Daniel Sickels, 33d degree. The most perfect Masonic monitor published in the United States. Embellished with many engravings and containing monitorial instructions in the degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Masons, with explanatory lectures, the ceremonies of consecration and dedication of new lodges, installation of officers, laying foundation stones, dedication of Masonic halls, burial services, Masonic calendar, ritual for a Lodge of Sorrow, Masonic trials, etc. Bound in fine cloth, extra large 12mo, $2.00.

Female Masonry. Manual of the Order of the Eastern Star. Containing the ritual, symbols, lectures, etc., of the five degrees of "Adoptive Masonry," Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, profusely illustrated and handsomely bound. Price, $1.50.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the entire ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Scores of Masons have privately admitted that this is a standard text-book in the lodge and is strictly correct; but publicly it is not acknowledged as authority, though many officers of the lodge make use of it. Price, in cloth, $2.50.

Mackey's Text-Book of Masonic Jurisprudence. Illustrating the laws of Freemasonry, both written and unwritten. This is the great law book of Freemasonry. 570 pages. Price, $2.50.

Allyn's Ritual of Masonry. Illustrated by a large number of engravings, and containing a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, Orange and Odd-fellows' Societies Price, $5.00

CURRENT NOTES.

Joseph Cook is as popular as ever upon the Boston lecture platform. His two years' absence has by no means eradicated the effect of his former discourses from the minds of his hearers, who again crowd Tremont Temple every Monday morning. In his first lecture he grappled with the theological problem which is uppermost in New England churches—the after-death condition of wicked spirits. Quoting Dr. Gulliver, that "The Bible contains on any fair interpretation not a suggestion nor a word extending the offer of salvation beyond this world," he says, "I would not treat the new departure harshly; but I would not treat it cordially. . . . I think, indeed, that with the possible exception of a single professor, the history of the new departure in Andover Theological Seminary, as it now stands, might be written as the history of the serpents in Ireland was, in the famous chapter, consisting of a single sentence: There are no serpents in Ireland. There is no new departure. Almighty God is undoubtedly here; and I would have this discussion conducted as if on our knees and without applause. I am a student of the relations of the natural laws to religious truth, and I profess to you before God that I find the natural laws as stern on the topic of punishment after death as the Scriptures." These words, following an exhaustive array of Scripture proof, will have great effect in checking the influence of these lax theories upon the churches already weakened by the infiltrations of worldliness.

In his first lecture, on "Advanced Thought in England and Scotland," Mr. Cook said that he was profoundly convinced, after conversing with the leaders in philosophical discussion, that "really advanced thinking in England is fundamentally anti-materialistic, anti-agnostic, and so, really anti-Spencerian." One writer says, "What we need most is somebody to upset natural law," by which he meant, says Mr. Cook, "some one to show that natural law without God's will behind it is nothing more in itself than a glove without a hand." The reaction from the materialistic theories of Huxley, Tyndal, Darwin and Spencer, is already begun, and their power is shrinking into the mummy state where history will leave it.

A contested election is before the Illinois legislature. Judge Bradwell, a thirty-two degree Mason of this city, was at first counted out and McNally, his competitor, given the certificate of election. A recount changed the vote in his favor, but McNally testifies under oath before the committee on elections that he never received notice of the contest; but he is contradicted by several affidavits affirming that the document was put into his hands. The mail carrier recognizes him as having received it and signing a registered receipt, and the signature confirms the testimony. So that the gentleman is in danger of being expelled for perjury, even if he succeeds in the election contest. But how much worse is this gentleman in respect to the civil oath than Bradwell, who has sworn away his life to the lodge some hundreds of times, under horrible penalties and against all reason, religion and right. What better is the civil oath of one than the other, and what need that the papers should object so much to the perjurer, when (if his lodge oath is good for anything) Bradwell will commit the same crime before God if he swears into the legislature?

Congress has for a week been absorbed in the tariff discussion. The recommendations of the Tariff Commission which jaunted about the country last summer were too reformatory for the protectionists and were overruled in the bill presented, but Senator Sherman has gained one or two slight victories in favor of the Commission's report. The iron and manufacturing interests of the East will doubtless overbear the opposition that comes feebly from the distant Western prairies, but President Arthur is reported as openly declaring that he will call an extra session of Congress unless the revenue from tariff is largely reduced. Party lines are nearly obliterated in the debate, but there is little hope that any new party organization will arise because of the fact. It is worth noting that a memorial has been sent to Washington from the Arkwright club of Boston representing establishments in New England producing cotton, woolen and silk fabrics, machinery, paper and drugs, and employing about 100,000 persons and $100,000,000 capital. It asks for a tariff bill giving the lowest rates of duty upon raw materials and articles used in American industries, and keeping upon the free list articles not produced in this country.

The death of Gambetta has accidentally brought a more serious crisis upon the French government than was at first thought possible, and recalls much that has been said in the past of the weakness of French Republicanism to stand the test of time. The proclamations of Prince Jerome may be no more substantial than the stuff dreams are made of, yet it roused the Legitimists to imagine that the day when for them "God's hour will strike" had come. Even in the stories of the legions mustering in La Vendee, there is little to alarm if the central government was firm. But the cabinet difficulties, which were partially patched up last week, have assumed serious proportions. President Grevy has at length accepted the resignations of all the ministers, and is resolved on a dissolution of the Chamber of Deputies, with whom he finds it impossible to govern France. This condition of affairs threatens a catastrophe to the political arrangements of the country and the substitution of a more powerful ministry exceedingly difficult. Back of all these manifestations the French people lack that anchorage in religion which only a pure Christianity offers. The undermining of the priest on one side and of the infidel on the other has left a narrow margin on which to build the strong walls of an enduring republicanism.

The Milwaukee hotel tragedy is now in the hands of a coroner's jury. Last Thursday a great funeral was held over the charred remains that had been found in the smoking ruins and all classes of citizens, without respect of party or sect, were gathered on the solemn occasion in the Exposition building. Suddenly a steam pipe burst and a cloud of vapor poured into the building. A cry of "Fire" added to the panic, and the scene became instantly indescribable. The crowds within and without the building were frenzied; but by the efforts of the speakers on the platform quiet was secured after the choir and great organ began the reassuring strains of "Old Hundred." Of the cause of the calamity which swept seventy-five souls into eternity, the inquest is bringing the evidence to a center about the bar-room of the hotel, and fixing deep suspicions of guilt upon the keeper as the inhuman agent who started the fire.

Next morning early, after the funeral panic in Milwaukee, the Female College in the same city was partially destroyed by fire and its sixty inmates but just escaped a repetition of the Newhall House holocaust. We seem to be unusually beset this winter with such calamities. A portion of Tabor College, in extreme southwestern Iowa, was the other day burned, and the ruins of St. Mary's Seminary at Knoxville in this State are barely cool. These frequent warnings make the least neglect on the part of the managers of such institutions a crime. None too soon can every building used as a dormitory or for public resort be made safe in its means of escape from the accident of fire.

When David Swing got himself out of the Chicago Presbytery he wanted a pulpit and also a newspaper organ. So the Alliance was started. Its managers did not perhaps see what was at the end of the track on which they were running their enterprise, but many simple-minded, God-fearing people did, who remembered the way called "Destruction" in Bunyan's Pilgrim:

"Shall they who wrong begin yet rightly end?"

The paper has run a brilliant, devious, and troubled course; sometimes through the courts, often through a sea of expedients for a living. George C. Miln, the successor of the Unitarian Robert Collyer, who was compelled to leave that pulpit a year or two since because of his infidel views, has been the latest editor, and has joined with that business the study of a theatrical actor. He has finally dropped the paper entirely for the stage, and with his resignation the sheet becomes thoroughly infidel in name, as it has always been in tendency and practice.

It is announced that the daughter of ex-Secretary Blaine is to be married in a few days to a gentleman twenty-five years her senior, and a Romanist in religion, having served in the Pope's army before coming to this country. Miss Blaine is said to be a devoted Episcopalian while her father is a Congregationalist. This bit of Washington gossip is not pleasant reading when we remember the prominence of the Blaine family in government circles, and the aspirations of its head for the Presidency. If his religious convictions cannot be maintained in his own household he would be an ill-chosen leader for the nation.

DAILY WORK.

In the name of God advancing,
Sow thy seed at morning light;
Cheerily the furrows turning,
Labor on with all thy might,
Look not to the far-off future,
Do the work which nearest lies;
Sow thou must before thou reapest,
Rest at last in labor's prize.

Standing still is dangerous ever,
Toil is meant for Christians now;
Let there be, when evening cometh,
Honest sweat upon thy brow;
And the Master shall come smiling,
At the setting of the sun,
Saying, as he pays thy wages,
"Good and faithful one, well done!"

A TEMPERANCE CRUSADE OF LONG AGO.

BY MRS. E. M. BAILEY.

The woman's movement against intemperance in its present systematized and associated methods of work is modern, but it has had many beginings. Many little rills of influence and isolated effort have helped to swell the tide that is now sweeping with cleansing power through the Augean stables of our saloon-cursed land. But suffering and sorrow is old, and hatred to one great cause of it is old too, and woman's wit and woman's wisdom has always risen to the occasion where the occasion demanded it.

I recall a little story of my childhood, told by one who had heard it from a child and knew it to be true.

In a sea-coast town in Scotland, a hundred years ago or more, lived a man who had been for years a soldier in the British army. On being discharged he had returned to his native town where he married a wife and a little family soon gathered about him. But habits of soldier life clung to him and he not only failed to provide for his family, but drank excessively, and when under the influence of liquor was abusive to his wife and children.

His neighbors remonstrated time after time, and he always promised to reform. All that moral persuasion could do, was done, with no effect. Finally some of the women could stand it no longer. He must at least stop beating his wife or they would interfere in some more effectual way.

But his appetite for whiskey was stronger than his sense of honor or decency and his wife was weak, and one afternoon he came home unusually crazed with liquor and began his usual treatment. He had knocked his wife to the floor where she lay helpless under his blows, when the door suddenly opened and half a dozen stout, strong-armed women entered. Seizing the drunken fellow they marched with him to the shore where a boat lay waiting, into which they all betook themselves with their captive, who was indeed unable to resist. They rowed out into deep water and then lifting him suddenly over the edge of the boat they plunged him in the water and held him there while they propounded to him some questions.

(Said they): "Sandy McNeil, you are perfectly helpless and in our power, anp you must promise us some things or we'll drown you just as sure as you're a living man."

"I'll promise, I'll promise." he gasped, thoroughly sobered by his cold bath.

"Do you promise never to drink another drop of whiskey or anything to make you drunk as long as you live?"

"Yes, I promise, if you will let me go."

"Do you promise never to abuse your wife or children again and always to treat them kindly, and to go to work and take care of them like a man?"

"Yes; I will, I will," he protested.

"There, Sandy," they said, drawing him up, "we will let you go this time, but remember, if ever you break your word and we hear of your getting drunk and abusing your family, the same women who have done this can do it again and it wont go so easy with you another time."

The cold water treatment proved effectual, and with the help of these same determined women who followed up their vigilant measures with timely aid and advice, the man was cured of his drunkenness and his family made more comfortable and prosperous.

MASONRY NO RELIGION.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

So says the Scottish Rite ritual, page 558: Masonry is no religion, nor does it assume to take the place of any religion, etc."

Let us suppose, I am the inventor of a floating Something; not a ship, nor anything that assumes the place of a ship, but is perfectly sea-worthy in the best sense; indeed, the only craft really fit for the ocean, and best adapted for the safe and universal transportation of humanity from shore to shore, in the world.

Freemasonry is no religion, claims the place of no religion; yet is the most ancient, most honorable, "most moral institution that subsists," sure to carry all that embark, with absolutely no loss of a single soul, that obeys all its laws and usages. No one could possibly fail of "the Grand Lodge above," who steps upon her holy and sacred plank, and stays on, (and he cannot get off—"Once a Mason, always a Mason"). Yet Masonry does not even assume the place of any religion! For rites strictly religious, Masonry uses all and everything that we can think of, not ommitting baptism and the eucharist; and for sanctimoniousness, it out popes the Vatican in its palmiest days, and has outstripped Rome in profane titles, and blasphemous assumptions. This we most confidently assert, that if Masonry does not assume to be a religion, then Catholocism does not, nor any known system, which assumes all the essential attributes, principles and offices of religion. That the Masonic system is not the religion we need, and must have, to land us on the happy shore of immortal life and glory, we very well know. It is just like Satan to leave out of every system of which he is the distinguished author, the essentials of salvation, the only name by which salvation can possibly come to us. Satan never was afraid of religion. He can out-religion and out-saint the angels, to say nothing of the godly in Christ Jesus on this earth.

Masonry has all the usual ear-marks of its satanic author, in every regard but one, and in this he out-Satans himself. This exception is in denying that Masonry is a religion, or assumes to take the place of any religion! Does Lucifer assume to be a fool that he may more successfully befool others, or does he underrate the capacity and shrewdness of apostate humanity, to analyze and to detect his tricks, and imposture? How this is, we may not be able to see, but one thing is sure, Masonic authorities calculate upon idiotic credulity outside, as well as inside the order, if they expect their statements to be credited.

THE RIGHTS OF LABOR.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

We are a nation of laborers; a large percentage are employes. No class of persons contribute more to the public good and none deserve more at the hands of the government.

What are the rights of labor and how shall they be best protected?

They are, first, compensation. Unrequited toil, except as a punishment for crime, is no longer tolerated.

2. It is the right of all laborers not only to sell their labor, but to sell it in the market that pays the best. Free labor must have a free market, and any restriction of this freedom, whether by legislative enactment, by voluntary association with others, whether with a view of restricting or promoting the interests of the laborer, if it takes away this freedom it interferes with his rights and must sooner or later work injury to his interests. Labor is a marketable commodity. The law of supply and demand applies just as much to labor as to any of its products, for all wealth is the product of labor. This law is wise, wholesome and inevitable. Like the laws of life and health it sometimes brings suffering, but no wise man would ask that he might be restored to health by a repeal of the laws of his physical being, and no one could wisely desire any departure from this great law of exchange; for no human devising could suggest a better principle. Over-production of any commodity cheapens its price and works injury to the producer, but the consumer reaps a corresponding advantage. The remedy is not in suppressing labor or in extorting impossible wages, but in diverting a portion of the labor to other pursuits. A very meagre compensation is better than idleness. Nothing pays so poorly as strikes and lockouts. They diminish the productive wealth of the country and the ability of to support labor. They add to the burdens of society, they tend to the general demoralization which always comes from idleness, and they interfere with the sacred right of every laborer to sell his labor where he can sell it the best.

It follows then that one of the first and highest duties of the government is to protect labor in its rights by the suppression of all societies, open or secret, of employers or employes that have for their object any interference with the law of supply and demand as related to labor. The right of the individual to cease from labor should be respected, but the right of an organization to compel or even instigate idleness should be sternly denied. Trades unions and manufacturers' unions have cost the nation many millions of money, many valuable lives, and a vast amount of want, suffering, and crime. Their pretensions have been specious, their promises great, but their practical results most ruinous to labor and to the general good. They are nearly always secret, and while they vastly affect the public interests they deny all rights of investigation or responsibility to public opinion. Such institutions are not only injurious to individuals but dangerous to public interests. They will sooner or later destroy this nation if it does not suppress them.

The third right of labor is that of compensation in proportion to its relative value. Any arrangement that gives to poor labor the same wages as to good is an infringement of natural rights, and an injury to all classes of society. Like the law that dilutes and deteriorates the currency by adding to good dollars others of smaller intrinsic value, thereby diminishing the purchasing power of all money, so this arrangement wrongs all labor and all laborers by rendering all labor less remunerative as well as less productive. A society that compelled people to pay as much for the coarser grades of flour or sugar as for the better would not be tolerated for a moment, and the same law applied to labor is far worse, for the article on sale is far more important and costly. The trades unions that have insisted on uniform compensation among the same class of workmen have simply put a premium on incapacity and idleness and they have suffered the results.

A fourth right of labor is that of selling its products in the market where it can sell them best, and buying the product of other labor where it can buy them the cheapest. Some kinds of labor are illegitimate, and some products of labor ought never to be sold, but all legitimate labor has this right, and any interference of governments or societies is unjust.

Brazil produces coffee. The United States produce and manufacture iron and cotton. There mutual interchange is a blessing to both countries. All restriction of this free interchange or diminution of the prices of these commodities by the collection of duties is a wrong done to labor which will react to the injury of every department of society in both countries. Free trade is the auxillary of free labor, and free laborers ought to demand it. I hope to consider in another article the wrongs of labor and the remedy.

OUR TASK.

To rally all grand forces, and to stand
Armored and dauntless in the widening breach,
Closing the ranks where braver souls went down—
This is the task. To lift the banner high
That waves God's legions on to victory,
O'er wrongs that trailed that banner in the dust;:
To wage unceasing war upon the sins
That wreathe the nation's brow with scorn and shame:
To halt not on the march, sheath not the sword,
Nor rest the lance, nor lay the armor by
Till giant evils lie among our slain;
To keep the ear ajar for voice of God,
The eye alert for sign of messenger
From near or far that brings His high command;
To keep the hand to toil, the foot to haste,
The voice to echo loyally His own,
The heart to throb swift answer to His will:
All this and more. To lift the stricken up,
On grievous wounds to pour the oil and wine:
To heal where hurt is sorest, to bow down
To lift the fallen and to lead the blind;
To answer every plaint of human pain,
And strengthen e'en the little ones of God.

Ah, glorious work! worthy the knightliest soul
That ever 'neath the banner of the Cross
Set steadfast face toward far Jerusalem,
Or died for right to guard an empty tomb.
Small need to quarrel o'er His sepulchre:
His grave is wheresoe'er His Christhood dies·
He lies enshrouded in the hearts of men:
Where He should reign—He lies dethroned, uncrowned.
To rise in strength and cast the evils out
That stay the Christ-life in the human soul—
This is the work. And the reward is this:
To see on human faces, stained and scarred,
The dawning light that says the Lord is risen
That they have seen, like Mary, face to face,
The majesty of kingliness and power,
The tenderness of wondrous love and grace
By which all wrong shall measure its brief hour,
And one by one before the matchless sight
Slink, Judas-like, each to its own dark place.

ORGANIZATION UNDER COVER.

BY WILLIAM REID, D.D.

Never before in the history of the world have the advantages and forces of thorough organization been more fully understood, or more extensively utilized. Perhaps no better definement of these forces has been given than that by Napoleon to the art of war. He said: "The art of war consists in overwhelming the enemy by weight of numbers." It was, therefore, the work of his genius to create combinations and to maneuver his forces so as to precipitate them upon some point of the enemy's line and crush it.

The Macedonian phalanx, the Roman legions, and the squadrons of Napoleon were all organized so as to weld and consolidate into one mass the energy of each individual. The force exerted by one individual, or by an unorganized and incoherent multitude is insignificant and always barren of great results, either in war or peace. Flakes of snow falling softly in infinite numbers exert no power, but when they are consolidated into the glacier, a force is developed that is irresistible and grinds the mountains and rocks to powder.

The church of God within the last few decades has awakened to the importance and value of organization as an aggressive force; although the children of this world are wiser in their generation than "the children of light." The children of the world learned the value of organization and centralization many generations before the "children of light" emerged from the nomadic state. The church of Christ is still, as compared to the efficiency of worldly organizations, almost nomadic.

The difficultics confronting the church in organizing the moral and spiritual forces of Christianity arise largely from her deplorable discongruity of opinions, principles and methods. The extremes of these polarities are represented by two sections of the church. One imposes a discipline and testimony so stringent as to be impractible for a membership of erring and fallible men, while the other section lowers the conditions of membership so that the vilest and most erratic can endorse and accept them. The only "Shiboleth" demanded by the last section of the church is the declaration, "I am a Christian," although every avowed principle and every act of the candidate may give the lie to the declaration.

The children of this world are developing to the utmost the advantages of organization, which is seen in enterprises legitimate as well as those that are wicked. By the power of organized capital continents are severed, mountains are pierced, rivers are spanned. Crime, too, seeing the advantages of organization, is everywhere availing itself of this power. Christianity and Patriotism both look with alarm upon the numbers and power of these combinations.

The rum seller organization is an example of the latter. Powerful in numbers and in ill-gotten wealth, it seeks to overthrow all laws and barriers legislation has erected for the protection of society and the victims of intemperanee.

These observations apply to all other organizations erected for the purpose of overriding law and order, and adding to the wealth of the few at the expense of the welfare of society and morals.

Crime is sometimes intelligent, always enterprising, and quick to recognize the utility of perfect organization. This makes crime more to be dreaded, as, on the other hand, virtue and goodness are characteristically unsuspicious, slow to act and arm, and always accept the gauge of battle with reluetance.

There is also another element entering into many of the organizations of the day greatly adding to their power and danger, and that is secretism. This element has ever been an important factor in all enterprises that employ it, and gives them a fearful power for evil. They are enabled to develop their plans in secret, and their blows fall when least expected.

That secretism is generally inimical in its tendencies to the efficiency, if not to the existence, of civil government is a fact of history.

If the countries that are incessantly torn by factions, powerless at home and abroad, were stained black upon the map of the world, the dark stains would indicate with geographical accuracy the countries where secretism flourishes most luxuriously. Italy, Spain, some of the South-American States and Mexico are notable examples of nationalities torn by secret, lawless, and revolutionary factions.

In Mexico, life, property, and liberty are ever in jeopardy. Its government has ever been unstable, irresolute, powerless. Secret factions, mining, and counter-mining, are continually sapping the foundations of law and order. Every national interest languishes for want of protection. Every lawful enterprise is paralyzed, and capital dare make no investment, although invited by a country surpassingly rich in material resources, and glorious in everything except a noble, moral, and patriotic race of men. Ever tossed in the whirlpool of revolution, Mexico must arise and strangle these secret actions, or perish.

A few months ago Russia was the focus of the world's gaze, which has not yet been withdrawn. The ruler who had made his reign glorious by the abolishment of serfdom, was blown into fragments by a percussion bomb thrown by the hand of an agent of a secret society, the most godless and infernal the world has ever seen. Let secret Nihilism universally prevail, and our fair earth would be made a pandemonium, and every man might say, with Milton's arch fiend:

"Where I am is hell; myself am hell!"

The world had scarcely recovered from amazement and horror of the awful deed of the assassination of the Czar, when it was startled again at the terrible news that the newly appointed Chief Secretary of Ireland and his friend are cut to pieces with knives in an open park, and in broad daylight.

If heathen Rome, familiar with scenes of blood, was shocked at the "deep damnation of Cæsar's taking off," cut to pieces with knives in the Senate chamber of the Capital, with what unspeakable abhorance must the Christian people of a great nation look upon an assassination unparalled in its atrocity even among savages.

The shedding of such "costly blood" helped on no cause, satisfied no rational revenge; but it was the wolf's thirst for blood that tears the throat of the whole flock; it was the act of incarnate fiends, and the fruit of disobedience.

Whence did it originate? Where was the deadly viper hatched? The Christian world, as it were, assembled all around the horizon, and looking with mournful and inquiring interest upon Ireland, the land of the generous and brave. Anxiously the question is asked, why this awful deed?

Sir William Harcourt answers. In his speech on the floor of parliament, in advocacy of legislation to meet the crisis upon them in maintaining the supremacy of law and order, he said: "The preventative clauses in the new law prepared are meant to defeat the black conspiracies of the secret societies and unlawful combinations." He said, "The Government had come to the conclusion that resort to military law was yet necessary; that the heart of Ireland was sound, but she was suffering from the bane of secret societies."

This unravels the mystery: "secret societies and unlawful combinations." In other words, organizations and secretism. In all such societies the leaders are not the agents who use the knife. They, doubtless, would repel any such insinuation with indignation. They are, however, responsible; as the cardinal principle of such organizations is darkness and secrecy, which shields the assassins from the just vengeance of the law. Under these circumstances a trial by jury is a mere farce, and the ordinary tribunals of justice are powerless to enforce them.

The British Government presented the extraordinary spectacle of being compelled to suspend the right of trial by jury, so dear to the heart of every freeman, and that, too, in a time of peace. Truly, a society formidable enough in its secrecy to baffle the government of one of the most enlightened and powerful nations on earth, affords cause for alarm.

If the generalizations of history have taught anything, it is that power is invariably dangerous in the hands of irresponsible men. Members of secret societies are, to a great extent, irresponsible. The escape of the Irish assassins is a practical and forcible illustration of this fact. At the present writing, although months have elapsed since the foul murders were perpetrated, no information leading to the arrest of the guilty parties has been obtained. The untiring efforts of detectives have obtained information in regard to the "existence of a secret society organized for the purpose of assassination," but here inquiry is baffled, and crime is hidden in impenetrable secrecy

If any one thinks these views fanatical and our fears ungrounded, let him ponder over the following extract, clipped from a metropolitan paper, the publication of which was contemporaneous with the Irish murders. It was issued by the secret Fenian brotherhood: "Brethren, awake! Arise! And now labor with us to help on the good cause. Thus shall we in solemn secret conclave continue with augmented force to give the emphatic emphasis of dagger, fire and sword, and other available resources of civilization to our ancient and merciless enemy; to destroy whom we shall use, while life endures, every means within the reach of human effort." No comments can make the "immoral audacity" of the above more palpable; and we leave it to the consideration of thinking men, merely remarking that the vipers emitting the deadly hiss could have been hatched nowhere but in "secret conclave."

Another fact illustrative of the irresponsibility of members of oath-bound secret organizations. Half a century ago William Morgan was forcibly abducted from his home and family, and foully murdered by the members of an oath-bound secret society. Some of the attending circumstances making the case eminently illustrative of our proposition are these: There is no country that has a purer Judiciary than ours. There is no country where there is greater equality before law than in ours; and, to crown all, the courts were goaded to the keenest inquiry by an indignant people, and by the fiercest political animosity; and yet, in spite of all this, the murderers escaped, and justice was baffled. The saying "that murder will out" was not verified until after the lapse of half a century, and the murderers were all dead.

While there is no country in the world where equality before the law is better established than in our own; yet, even here, our citizens distrust our courts, and thousands suffer cruel injustice rather than enter the courts with a member of a secret society, or an antagonist, choosing rather "to suffer from present ills than fly to those he knows not of."

Again, it is asserted that while only one in eight of our voters is a member of an oath-bound secret organization, seven-eighths of our civil officers are members of these societies. Or, in other words, while they are numerically entitled to twelve and a half per cent. of the civil offices, they monopolize eighty-seven and a half per cent. of them. This statement, if true, proves that the powers of government is in the hands of a single class, which is contrary to the genius of our free institutions, and dangerous to our liberties.

These statements may be indignantly denied, especially by those who have only taken a few degrees in such societies. These degrees are comparatively innocent, and purposely so, that those merely on the threshold of such societies may vouch for the good, and deny the evil that is in them. Ministers of the Gospel, taken into the first degree, make excellent "decoys" for the society, and frequently vouch for the good in them, while they know just as much, and no more, of the nature, plans, and working of the higher degrees than a person outside.

In view of these facts, and in the light of history, we think the time is not far distant when the necessity will be recognized for spreading upon our statute books penal laws prohibitory of all extra judicial secret oaths. —Christian Instructor.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

THE AGITATORS.

It is unfortunate for our laboring men that this country contains as it does so many professional agitators. Men of the Herr Most and Dennis Kearney stripe are the positive enemies of labor. Their chief object is to brood discontent in the minds of the working people. To do this they resort to gross distortion of facts, and to unmitigated falsehoods. Their object in teaching a false philosophy is purely a selfish one, they hoping, by ingratiating themselves into the good graces of the laboring people to make a reputation, gain a fortune, secure an office, or obtain some other advantage. It is a species of refined cruelty to teach the men who are poor and compelled to toil to earn their daily bread that "all property is robbery."

This teaching begets hatred and jealousy, as well as discontent, in the minds of the very people whose other misfortunes are hard enough to bear. The man who is forced to toil from sunrise to sunset, or, worse, the man who works through the night, has a sad enough lot, without adding to the misfortune by instilling into his mind wrong thoughts, and by educating him to believe false and pernicious theories. These agitators are themselves generally too ignorant to know that poverty is not the only misfortune in life. Some men are born blind, deformed and sickly. Shall these men say that those who are well, perfect in form and in possession of their sight, are robbers and hence should be reduced to the state of their more unfortunate brethren.—Industrial World.

CO-OPERATIVE STORES.

A co-operative store is one in which the profits, if any, are divided among the purchasers and not among the shareholders. The pioneer society of Rochdale, [England] commenced in 1844, when twenty-eight working men contributed £1 each for the purchase of a small stock of provisions for their joint use. These provisions were to be sold not at cost but at market price to the members of the society. The difference betweeu wholesale and retail price was relied upon to pay the expenses of the store and a fixed interest on the capital contributed. Any profit beyond this was to be divided among the purchasers in proportion to their purchases. If, after the declaration of a dividend, the persons entitled to it preferred to leave the amount belonging to them undrawn, it was counted as additional capital and credited with interest the same as the original capital. The Rochdale store grew by the addition of members and the accumulation of capital, until in the year 1876 it had 8,892 members and $1,250,000 profits per annum.

The example of the Rochdale pioneers found a multitude of imitators in the manufacturing districts of England, which have yielded a vast amouut of good results to the working classes, not merely by saving to them middlemen's profits, but by encouraging habits of thrift, by establishing reading-rooms, and bringing light and knowledge to the members of their families in a thousand ways. In short, it was real co-operation applied to the satisfying of human wants. The principle of competition did not enter into it at all, or only to a slight degree. The success of the experiment among the working classes was so great that eventually the middle and upper classes became impressed by it, and sought to turn it to account for their own advantage. The conditions of retail trade in London, where aristocratic custom had brought about a system of long credits and correspondingly high prices, were very favorable for an innovation based upon cash payments and correspondingly low prices. The retail dealer in London was in the habit of collecting his dues from regular customers once a year, or once in two years, at the customer's convenience. Interest and bad debts were always gnawing at his profits, and these required to be offset by higher prices for his goods. The conditions of retail trade in New York, where monthly payments are expected from regular customers and cash from all others, are as different as possible from those existing in London before the advent of the so-called co-operative stores.

Co-operative storekeeping in London began with the Civil-Service Supply Association, in the year 1864. The Association was composed at first of a few post-office clerks, and was gradually enlarged by the admission of other members of the civil service. It was based upou different principles from those of the Rochdale pioneers. Its main object was cheapness, not savings. It furnished goods to members at wholesale price, plus expenses and a small advance to cover contingencies. In the course of ten years this small advance had resulted in the accumulation of a fund of $400,000 over and above current requirements. The question then came up how this fund should be divided—whether among the purchasers, accordidg to the Rochdale co-operative plan, or among the shareholders, according to the joint-stock competitive plan. As only shareholders were entitled to vote upon the question, the latter plan was adopted. The Civil-Service Supply Association became the model of the other London co-operative stores; that is, they all became joint-stock business undertakings, and exposed themselves to the perils of all business undertakings under the law of competition.

The stores were vastly popular in the beginning. They became the fashion. It was no uncommon thing, says Mr. Holyoake, to see a Marchioness elbowing her way in the Haymarket—an unfragrant locality—to make her purchases at "the store." The stores, buying and selling only for cash, made no bad debts, lost no interest, and could always command the lowest prices in the wholesale markets; consequently they could, and did, undersell the ordinary retailer. They really revolutionized London trade. They imposed upon the retailers the alternative of either following their example by cutting off long credits and selling at low rates for cash, or perishing. The retailers first bewailed, then threatened, then petitioned Parliament, but finally adopted the business methods of the new stores. They are now gradually but surely regaining their former hold upon the community of buyers, by the exercise of superior business qualifications.—The Nation.

ANOTHER OPINION,

Co-operative stores are liable to several dangers: 1st. Incompetent management; 2nd. Dishonest management; 3d. Unnecessarily heavy expenses; 4th. Differences among directors; 5th. Dissatisfaction of co-operative buyers. It is pretty much the same also with co-operative work-shops, which, if unsuccessful, injure all who engage in them, and if successful become the property, virtually, of the heaviest stockholders, who manage the business as a private enterprise, hiring workmen and dismissing them like other people. Upon the whole, therefore, it appears best to leave all these matters to private enterprise.

Will our readers who know anything about the success or failure of co-operative stores or workshops in their own vicinity have the kindness to inform us about them, and, especially, say how long they have existed. And in the case of any that failed what was the loss of the co-operators whose capital was embarked in them?

So far as our information goes the success of co-operative enterprises in England has been as remarkable as their non-success here. What causes the difference?—N. Y. Witness.

REFORM STORY.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LITTLE PEOPLE," "A SUNNY LIFE," ETC.

CHAPTER XXXVI (CONTINUED). SOME EXAMPLES OF MASONIC BENEVOLENCE AND MORALITY.

"How?"

"Station a guard round the lodge. There are plenty of Anti-masons in Granby that would rather enjoy serving in such a capacity. Take your seat in the chair precisely as at any ordinary meeting, and as soon as there is the least attempt at violence, give the signal and we will burst open the door and rush in."

"That will do," he said, after a moment's deliberation. "No better plan could be devised."

And with the understanding that I should as quickly and quietly as possible gather a force sufficient for his protection, Anson Lovejoy prepared to front the men who had secretly banded together to take his life. For what? For violating his Masonic obligations. In other words, for daring to do his duty as an honest, God-fearing citizen of this free Republic, consecrated to liberty by the blood and tears of our forefathers, yet fostering in its bosom a dark and terrible despotism which, when its laws are violated, knows neither mercy nor forgiveness, allows of no appeal from its sentence, and punishes without the form of trial.

Although the tide of popular excitement in Granby had subsided with the arrest of Jervish, it left, as such excitements usually do, a deposit behind it. Firm and settled conviction had taken in many minds the place of ignorance and doubt. Pronounced Anti-masons were scarce before; now they were very common. Consequently I found no difficulty in gatheriug a force sufficiently large to surround the lodge and prevent the threatened attack on Anson Lovejoy.

We allowed the brethren time to assemble, and then marchiug silently from our place of rendezvous we took our stations around the building, scarcely daring to breathe lest some sound should escape our ears from the upper room where the lodge was meeting.

Meanwhile Lovejoy had seated himself in the Master's chair and gone through the preliminary exercises with outward calmness. He no longer doubted the truth of the warning note. Even before he caught sight of a knife concealed under the coat of one of the members he knew himself to be surrounded by a band of secret assassins, and felt that on his courage and tact in co-operating with those outside his life depended.

Colonel Montfort, as before hinted, was a man that professed to do his dirty work by means of tools. He meant to keep his hand concealed throughout this whole affair. It was therefore no part of his scheme to open the attack on Lovejoy in person, but to put forward Simon Peck instead, as the mouth-piece of the lodge. Peck was an ignorant and illiterate man, and far from being a good spokesman, but he knew that the demand to resign would be felt by Lovejoy as an additional insult, coming from such a quarter. Peck was the most subservieut of tools under his master's eye, and in the present case some personal feeling, mingled with the infuriated hate towards Lovejoy which he shared in common with the other members of the lodge, for so violating his Masonlc obligations as to arrest a murderer.

Some writer has said that everybody is well connected in certain directions. So also is the opposite fact true, especially among the herotogenous elements that compose American socicty—for Maurice Jervish, the personal friend of Colonel Montfort, was also some connection of the Pecks. It was there he had first seen Mary Lyman, and though he moved in a so much higher social sphere than they, was quite willing to take all the advantage which his relationship to the family gave him in accomplishing the ruin of his victim. Peck had badgered his wife into denying before the coroner's jury all knowledge of the closed carriage that had been seen to stop at their door the night Mary was missing; he had likewise aidcd in secreting Jervish—it was believed on his premises, which the sheriff, true to his Masonic obligations, refused to search—all at the bidding of Colonel Montfort, who found in Peck just that mixture of bigotry and self-conceit which is so convenient in the underlings of the lodge when their superiors wish to manipulate them for purposes of their own.

Lovejoy listened calmly to the end of the halting, ungrammatical speech, which was really nothing but a low tirade of abuse. He was prepared for this part of the programme. Peck sat down and wiped his forehead, rather exhausted with his effort at oratory, but supremely satisfied therewith. There was an iustant's silence, during which Lovejoy's eye looked with eagle keenness over the throng of conspirators which surrounded him like a pack of hungry wolves thirsting for his blood; and then he answered slowly and firmly:

"If I have committed any offence against Masonic law I am willing to meet the charge, and if proved, submit like any ordinary member to the sentence of the lodge. I am denounced as a traitor. To resign the chair under these circumstances would be equivalent to a plea of guilty, and I therefore refuse most decidedly to do any such thing."

This reply was also in agreement with the programme. There was a murmur of rage as Lovejoy finished speaking, and a forward movement from the member who carried the concealed dirk.

"You shall resign, you blasted traitor!" he exclaimed, with an oath. "Take your choice, either be dragged from the chair, or give it up peaceably."

"I will neither be dragged from the chair, nor give it up," coolly answered Lovejoy, who knew that the fatal moment was fast approaching when, according to their preconcerted arrangement, the whole band of ruffians would be on him. "You have met here to take my life. I know it, and others know it, too. A guard of the citizens of Granby, at least a hundred strong, now surround this lodge, prepared to rescue me from your hands should you attempt violence. I have only to give a certain signal, and they will rush in. The result may be a worse Anti-masonic excitement than the one yon accuse me of heading. Now take your choice: give up your plan to assassinate me, or carry it through and take the consequences."

The lion's mouth was fairly shut, for the most infuriated Mason present did not care to provoke the popular vengeance that would have surely followed any attack on Lovejoy. Coloncl Montfort, under his concealing moustache, fairly ground his teeth with rage at this unlooked-for miscarriage of his deep and subtle plot. He had rightly calculated that with every member of the lodge pledged to keep Masonic silence over the affair, and Masonic sheriffs and juries to obstruct the course of justice in every possible way, there would not be the ten thousandth part of a chance that the actual perpetrators of the deed would ever be discovered or punished. Nor had it occurred to his mind that Lovejoy, even if he should hear of the plot against him, would take any other measure of self-defense than simply to stay away.

"I have one more remark to make on this subject," continued Lovejoy, looking round with unflinching gaze on the baffled conspirators. "You denounce me as being false to Masonry because, in the discharge of my duties as a citizen, I arrested a criminal who is also a Mason. If to be true to my lodge obligatious requires me to be false to God and my country, then I have had enough of the system, and the world has had far too much; and the only thing that I or any other honest man can do iu such a case is to quit it."

I will not transcribe the volley of cursing and profanity which followed this speech of Lovejoy's. It was as if hell had broken loose. Colonel Montfort, who had by this time assured himself that eager ears were really straining in the darkness and silence below to catch the least sound of tumult or uproar in the lodge, was alarmed.

"The brethren forget that this is a meeting for business," he said with cool effrontery. "We are only wasting time by this useless talk. Our Worshipful Master charges the brethren with a conspiracy to assassinatc him. I on my part charge him with un-Masonic conduct in hiring a mob of cowans and eavesdroppers to surround the lodge; with using inflammatory language designed to excite the public mind against the order, besides many other violations of his obligations and duties as a Mason. I therefore move that a complaint be presented to the Grand Lodge of the State, against Anson Lovejoy, Worshipful Master of Fidelity Lodge, petitioning for his expulsion and removal from office."

Lovejoy listened with calm disdain. To a man who had stood but the moment before face to face with death this was but the firing of blank cartridges. The after proceedings were unimportant, and after an unusually brief and quiet meeting the lodge disbanded fairly checkmated in its murderous purpose.

The hushed and silent crowd kept vigilant watch till Lovejoy came out; then greeted him with enthusiastic cheers that could be heard half over Granby. He was the hero of the hour, but I fancied that like some other heroes he felt that there was a certain thing lacking to his triumph.

"A Christian should not bear malice, Mr. Lovejoy," I took occasion to say as I shook his hand. Give us a call to-morrow, and allow Mrs. Severns to congratulate you."

Lovejoy hesitated. He had not crossed our threshold since the day Rachel had forbid his entrance; and I could not blame him if he entertained some rankling remembrance of her harsh and bitter words.

"If you think I shall be welcome—not otherwise," he answered.

"Try it," I said, with a smile. Lovejoy hesitated no longer.

"Thank you, Mr. Severus, I will, if it is only to prove that I 'bear no malice,' as you call it, because your good wife told me the truth. I was a companion of murderers as to-night's events have made me realize. But I am so no longer."

The next day, agreeably to his promise, he came over. Rachel met him with extended hand and a hearty, "Forgive me, I was unjust; but I have found out my mistake."

"I have nothing to forgive, Mrs. Severns," was his equally sincere and hearty answer. "The medicine was harsh, but I am no worse for it."

Verily,

> "A curse from the depths of womanhood
> Is very bitter and salt and good."

CHAPTER XXXVII.

IN WHICH HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF.

The community at large looked upon the speedy conviction of Jervish as a matter of course, and when the time arrived for the court to sit on the case the public mind had quieted down from its state of excitement to one of comparative apathy. Against such overwhelming evidence what possible chance for any verdict but guilty?

Anson Lovejoy thought otherwise.

"The lodge is bound to clear Jervish," he said to me one day when the subject of the approaching trial happened to be mentioned. "And they will do it."

Even I, who knew so well what Masonic craft and guile is capable of in the way of perverting justice, was surprised at the positiveness with which he spoke.

"Impossible!" I said. "No plainer case of guilt ever came before a jury."

"That may be," answered Lovejoy with a little touch of satire;" but you will find that when a fourth, or even less of the jury wear Masonic spectacles to assist their understandings the plainest cases have a faculty of growing strangely involved. Colonel Montfort and the other members of the lodge have a personal stake in this affair quite outside of any particular interest they may feel in Jervish. It is a kind of a test question. They want to prove to the world and to themselves that Masonry is strong enough to spread its protecting wing over the vllest criminal, and then defy the hand of the law to reach him. My word for it, Sheriff Simouds will fill out the jury with Masons and Odd-fellows to a man; with possibly one who is neither Mason nor Odd-fellow but whose sympathies or connections are all with the lodge, put in simply for a blinder to the public—nothing more."

I started, for this was the same dodge that had been played so often and so successfully in the Morgan trials forty years before. What should hinder its working equally well in the present instance?

The wide spread notoriety of the case attracted an unusually large number to hear the trial, and each day of the proceedings a crowded court room attested to the interest it had excited. The witness agaiust Maurice Jervish was clear and conclusive; the testimony in his favor slight and open to serious doubt from the character of the witnesses, or the suspicion that lodge influence had been at work, especially with Mrs. Peck who swore positively to having no knowledge where Mary Lyman went on the night she left the house, or in whose company; but was believed by every candid person to have perjured herself under terror inspired by her husband, who knew very well how to use the peculiar arguments of the lodge with most impressive effect on his weak-minded partner.

Lovejoy's prophecy had proved true to the letter in relation to Sheriff Simonds who filled out the jury with four Masons and one Odd-fellow, together with a sixth who was neither a Mason nor au Odd-fellow but a warm personal friend of the prisoner! And so the case proceeded,—a great deal of tedious quibbling and impudent brow-beating of witnesses from the Masonic lawyer who was counsel for the accused, and did his best, though signally failing in the attempt—for there are some things beyond even the power of Falsehood—to represent the whole affair as a malicious persecution of his client. And then, the evidence all being in, the departure of the jury to render their decision—guilty, or not guilty.

I remember with what hushed expectancy we waited for the verdict; how in the stillness of the court room the jury's returning footsteps after their brief absence sounded painfully loud. And I remember too the half-stunned, half-sick feeling that came over me, as if I saw Justice stabbed to the heart and was forced to stand by when the death blow was struck as the foreman pronounced their decision—

"NOT GUILTY!"

The lodge had triumphed. Mary Lyman's murderer was free.

(To be continued.)

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.
E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec'y.

WORCESTER MINISTERS.—The position of the Worcester ministers on the secret society question, so far as we can ascertain, is about as follows: Resident Congregational ministers opposed to secret societies, seven; noncommittal, one; and one belongs to several secret orders. Methodist, three not Masons (supposed to be in sentiment opposed); two Masons. Baptists, four opposed; one a Mason. Christian church, one opposed. Swedish Congregational, one opposed. Swedish Congregational, one opposed. French Congregational, one opposed. Swedish Lutheran, one opposed. The two Episcopalians, two Unitarians and one Universalist are not known. Of all the pastors only four are known to be Masons and only six altogether are believed to be. There is one seceding Mason among them.

CHRIST, NOT CHRISTIANITY.—The Apostles constantly maintained a devotion to the crucified Christ. They had seen him, they believed in his personal presence, they regarded his personal claims to worship, they believed in his personal reign as King. Now a change has taken place with many. There is much preaching about Christianity but little preaching of Christ. Many do not realize his personal claims to their affections. They are satisfied to patronize some of his teachings, forgetting the Teacher.

A man's clothes are not the man, his teachings are not himself. The ancients were prone to make images of God and worship them; we are prone to deify Christianity but insult Christ. If a man practices a few Christian virtues he calls himself a Christian though in his faith and practice he may utterly deny the personal claims of Christ. It is right to practice the Christian virtues but this is not the whole of our duty. Have we enthroned Christ? Do we love his personal reign? Paul did not simply claim to teach the principles of Christ, but he determined to know nothing but Christ himself.

Many are devoted to the reign of the churches. Everything with them depends upon the growth of the church. This was the papal notion. Protestants easily fall into the same error. While the preacher discusses the principles of the Gospel, he must not forget that he is to convert men to Christ—so fully convert them that if the Lord should appear in person they would rejoice in his presence.

"Lo, I am with you" was a living fact to the early disciples; it should be no less so to us. Let us preach Christ, let us plead for him, let us reconcile men to him, let us be jealous for his personal honor as well as the triumph of his principles.

TWO APOLOGIES EXAMINED.—When we object to secret societies on account of their secrecy, we are usually met in one of two ways. In the first place it is common to say, "O our secrets amount to nothing, they are only for our protection." Such an answer more frequently comes from members of the minor secret orders.

Why have them if they amount to nothing? As for protection, who will molest them if they are engaged in laudable work? If the secrets are silly then abolish them.

Where the secrets are claimed to be important, it is customary to claim that all institutions, including the church and the family, have their secrets. All bad institutions protect themselves by trying to seem like good ones. In this case, however, there is no resemblance. There is a vast difference between the ordinary privacies of life and the sworn secrecy and pretended mysteries of secret societies.

This argument or dodge being resorted to by a Mason once, his opponent replied: "I never made my wife swear to keep up a constant pretense of mystery in our home under no less a penalty than that of having her throat cut across, her tongue torn out by the roots, and her body buried in the rough sands of the sea."

These secrets are always the parts of the order which the members are ashamed of. There isn't an instance in which men are sworn to keep a secret which would enhance the influence of the order if made public. It is only the cover of secrecy that saves these orders from public contempt.

NO REVIVALS.—In a ministers' meeting sometime since the writer of this article, in discussing revivals, remarked that a large per cent. of the membership of our churches had never been converted. They had been drawn into the churches by the social, intellectual and esthetic advantages offered and were devoid of all spirituality. The ministers present bore witness to the truthfulness of the assertion, one of them remarking, "You never said a truer thing." One cannot gain an inside view of the churches without being painfully convinced of the reality of the indictment.

The result of the presence of this worldly element, in the management of church affairs, is to repress evangelicalism. Any preaching which closely sifts the experiences of men and insists upon genuine spiritual searchings of heart is distasteful to the majority. It not only finds no response from the members but, if persisted in, it soon meets an open opposition and is eventually suppressed. This accounts for the dearth of spirituality. To satisfy the tastes of church members a cold, unspiritual, philosophic or literary style of sermons must be preached which do not appeal to the hearts or consciences of the hearers.

What will be the end of this state of things? Whence will come deliverance? Manifestly there can be no deliverance without more or less disturbance. As the evil spirits used to rage and foam when being cast out by the Saviour, so this evil cannot be cast out of the churches without disturbance, some times of a violent character. We should not fear or dread upheavals but rejoice when the conflict of these two elements, the worldly and spiritual, becomes open and manifest, knowing that the day of separation will thus be hastened.

COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

WORCESTER, MASS., Jan. 22, 1883.

The proposition of Rev. J. S. T. Milligan of Kansas, to hold a Council of Churches, seems to me very important, and all the more so because it seems eminently practical. We have been having a series of marked successes since September—the monument, the wide circulation of Thurlow Weed's letter, the purchase of the Cynosure and the Washington movement. Why should we not look for a continuation of equally important events, looking to a wider sphere of influence for the reform? And what suggestion could possibly be more timely?

A year ago we commenced to discuss the propriety of such a movement for New England and only the past week, while in Connecticut, I consulted friends concerning a New England convention of the character described by Mr. Milligan, to be held probably in Boston. It seems as if that wise providence which shapes the affairs of men, was preparing the East and West alike for such a Pan-Reform Church Council.

While the churches which would be most likely to enter into such a movement have, in some respects separate interests, yet in reforms they are one and have a common interest. Either this reform must triumph or those churches which have espoused the cause must go to the wall. While the cause hangs in doubt their destiny is doubtful, when the cause succeeds their success is assured, for churches, like men, must rise or fall with the principles they advocate. There are several denominations to which this statement will apply as there are also many individual churches of which the same may be affirmed.

In New England there are Reformed Presbyterian, United Presbyterian, Wesleyan Methodist, Baptist, Swedish and Independent churches, all of which have as strong a bond of sympathy in reforms as any churches in past ages, driven together by common suffering and community of interests. A reform convention of these churches would not only strengthen them, but it would command a degree of respect from the public which no promiscuous assembly could possibly realize.

Is it practical? Looking at it from the standpoint of each church or denomination respectively I see no objection that can possibly arise and the only doubtful point seems to be will they all take hold of it heartily?

Besides those churches alluded to above as distinctively reform churches we are finding ministers and laymen all through the New England States who are earnestly inquiring into this subject and though they sometimes step shyly yet there is evidently an increasing boldness in meeting the question. For example, Mr. Spaulding recently visited Lowell, doing (I suppose) the first work for our reform. He called on six or eight pastors, all but one of whom purchased books of him, one taking six dollars worth, and the one who took none desired a book which he did not have with him. All these pastors showed a warm side for the reform and an evident purpose to investigate. It is probable that a strong and determined aggressive movement of the reform churches would be reinforced from unexpected quarters and would command the respect and attention of a class of men who are holding aloof for greater evidence, not of the evils of secret societies, but of the vital power of the reform itself.

While Pres. Blanchard is awaiting a response from the distinguished gentlemen to whom he refers the proposition may I not imitate him in publicly asking for an expression of opinion from the following named N. E. pastors: Rev. D. McFall, Rev. M. L. McCord, Rev. Mr. Curtis, Rev. A. M. Ahgren, Rev. W. R. Laird, Elder Hezekiah Davis, Elder J. L. Barlow, Rev. C. S. McCracken and others, who see this request and feel an interest in such a movement.

Last week was spent by me in Connecticut with encouraging results. I visited friends in Putnam, Danielsonville, Jewett City, Norwich and Willimantic. It was apparent that the recent work for the reform had borne fruit, for strangers with whom I conversed freely had become conversant with the reform through notices in the public print. An interview of several hours with a Congregational pastor in one place resulted in his purchasing books to study the subject and evincing a purpose to bring his influence to bear against the lodges.

Amid many difficulties and much adversity brother J. A. Conant, Elder Barlow and their allies keep on their way, abating nothing nothing in zeal, nor folding the banner of reform. There is nothing which makes me long to see the day of triumph speed its coming so much as the evidence of over-taxed workers, struggling manfully against wind and tide. May the Lord sustain his people and send speedy deliverance.

E. D. BAILEY.

PROTECTION OF CRIMINALS.

If a band of criminals were to organize for self-protection, it is not probable they would openly publish their evil intentions. They would probably bind one another to mutual aid and protection without specifying the nature of the deeds to be protected. Then if their oaths were discovered it would make proof of evil intent difficult. The worst conspiracies are couched in the blindest form.

It is well known that Freemasonry protects its members from the punishment of their crimes. On examination of a single oath, the Master Mason's oath, will reveal the dangerous character of this protection. Put three phrases of the oath together, and one can see the criminality of the obligation. The candidate swears as follows: "That I will answer and obey all due signs and summons * * * given me by a brother of this degree; * * * that I will keep a brother Master Mason's secrets inviolate; * * * if ever I should see or hear it (the grand hailing sign of distress,) given by a worthy brother in distress, I will fly to his relief if there is a greater probability of saving his life than of losing my own."

All signs and appeals by signs must be answered or the oath will be broken. No special signs would be necessary for the ordinary affairs of life. This is a secret appeal for something which would not be granted for ordinary reasons. The second part of the above obligation would make it possible for a criminal to appeal to a brother Mason to conceal his guilt, and he would be compelled to do so. Finally, if the guilty party comes to trial, or is in danger of trial, every sheriff, judge, juryman and witness who is a Mason, may be appealed to with the Grand Hailing Sign of Distress, and he is under the most solemn obligation to do his utmost for the release of the criminal, not limiting his efforts to any risk save the risk of losing his own life.

Some one asks, "Do you think every Mason would shield crime?" to which we reply that he must do it or break his oath, and as it is Masonic doctrine that the breaking of the oath should be punished with death, even well-disposed men have often been driven to protect their fellows before the law. Bad men understand these obligations better than good men, and are rendered bold in their crimes from the fact of the protection which they can claim. These obligations are in the highest degree inimical, and ought to be abolished by law.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE GREAT WORLD RELIGIONS."

An article in the Standard, under the above heading, I read with much interest, for some time ago I had read "The Light of Asia," which awakened a protest against its tendency. I was therefore pleased to see that it characterized the "school to which its author, Mr. Arnold, belongs," as one which would conciliate religions other than Christian, instead of protecting against them all and regarding it as "the duty of Christians and the destiny of Christianity to 'root out' every false religion." Every true Christian will cordially respond to the closing paragraph, viz.:

"It is not the mission of Christianity to conciliate any false religion. Its mission is to conciliate to saving faith in Christ every lost sinner on earth, pagan or what not, whom God's great grace shall enable it to reach in this sense, and in this way it is to root out all false religions and become the one faith of mankind."

I do not know what Mr. Arnold's religion really is, but allowing for the liberty to the poet in presenting the phases and fancies of Asiatic faiths in the most "amiable" spirit, we need not go far to find a "school" of considerable influence among ourselves quietly at work, not merely to conciliate the religions of the world but to teach another religion whose claim is world-wide, and therefore is a competitor with, and a subverter of, our common Christianity. It is not a professed opponent of any religion, but seeks to conciliate and subordinate every other to itself while it permits its members to maintain their profession of any faith, but binds them to conceal its ceremonial by awful oaths and penalties. It might be regarded as incredible that in our free country, and among our free churches, such a religion could make any progress, but alas! the facts furnish abundant proof that such is the case. We are divinely warned very often against false teachers and false Christs, and against deceivers and those who, like their real master Satan, transform themselves into angels of light. There is danger to the cause of Christ when the watchmen on Zion's towers are careless, even as there are calamities like the fire at Milwaukee, when proper watchmen are not employed.

If Mr. Arnold has been indoctrinated by this "religion in which all men agree" (as it is claimed they do), then we need not be surprised at his tender treatment of heathen errors, nor at his desire to promote among his readers as high a regard for them as he himself may entertain. Even among ourselves, as reported in the Inter-Ocean last April, one of our popular preachers, with others seated beside him enjoying themselves at a feast, was reported to have expressed these ideas: Freemasonry was a religion that he knew of nothing which had more direct bearing on the spiritual growth; and that Knight Templary is the Gospel where Masonry is the law.

Now it is well known that those churches which regard membership in "the religion of Masonry as a matter for discipline are in the minority, and that Freemasonry is rather popular among various large denominations. Yet if this reverend gentleman is right in his statement, and being a Knight Templar, he ought to be regarded as a competent witness, then how can we be of two religions at the same time? The one under Masonry, the other under our Lord Jesus Christ? The one open for all the world without money or price; the other is neither. Is the law of Masonry and the law of Sinai the same? If not, then the gospels for each are different gospels! But while Christianity "roots out" other religions, Masonry equally "conciliates" Jews, Christians, Deists, Buddhists, Mohammedans, and every other religion! Mr. Arnold may thus have pupils, even among the churches, willing to listen to his estimate of the great Apostle Paul, as "not more sublime in religious history....than the camel driver, Muhamed....that marvellous and gifted teacher whose followers must be conciliated." But Christianity aims to root out his teachings while Masonry allows them to be retained by its members. Thus Freemasonry, "the handmaid of [any] religion," must be the best "conciliator!" for also in its secret chambers the Koran and the Bible are equally honored—the one in Mohammedan, the other in Christian communities.

At one time the Roman power was universal, and persecuted Christians. Many regard it as the beast of the Apocalypse, and some people imagine that the secret empire, (Freemasonry, etc.,) is its "Image." What religion is more likely to become so exacting and so universal as Masonry? Can both continue to co-exist? Are the two religions inimical to each other or not? Masonry is largely physical; Christianity is purely spiritual. Let us remember that when the golden calf was made the priests said, "These be thy gods, O Israel," and so also on other occasions. Jesus said to his disciples and to all, Watch.

The question of Christians holding "fellowship with any such work of darkness" as Masonry, is answered by the Word of God. Probably the time is not far distant when Masonry shall divide the churches as slavery once did. Yours truly, SENEX.

POINTS FROM LETTERS.

A SIGNIFICANT OFFER.

Two ministers of Christ (?) made a clerical call on a friend recently in a mining town of Pennsylvania, to solicit him to join the lodge—Knights of Honor (?). "Come and join us," said they, "and we'll make a man of you." This young man, sober, industrious and exemplary, though not a church member, I think, was not invited to come to the model Man, Christ Jesus, but the all-healing, transforming power, where the faith of these embassadors of Baal rested. God save our young men from lodge-bound ministers. Shame on such ministers of Satan! N. C.

A NEW ADVOCATE.

The good work still goes on at Old Pleasant Hill, Howard county, Ind. Praise God, on seventh day night, the 7th inst., Bro. Levi Marshall from Iowa gave us a good lecture on secret societies. The Bible was his weapon of defense, he proved his points clearly to the satisfaction of a good audience save one, who tried to reply, but he had the wrong side of the question, and was so excited he said many things that helped confirm what the brother had said as truth.

O that there were more lecturers on this great and important work! Our church house at Pleasant Hill is open to every work of reform. If any feel disposed to come this way the door is open. The Friends are interested in the work at this place, and will lend a helping hand.

M. A. H.

TOWARD WASHINGTON.

I am favorably impressed with Mr. Stoddard's proposition for a home for our enterprise in Washington. Indeed I think we ought to and can provide homes for our work in all the main cities, at least such headquarters as we have in Worcester, where our books and publications can be had. And for the furtherance of this and the general lecture and tract work we shall need many and large bequests. It is perhaps better that those who give to benevolent objects as a rule should carry out their own wills, that is, while they are alive personally see that their money is used for the greatest good. We hope our friends will not forget the great work of the National Christian Association. J. S. H.

BERNADOTTE.

In a late Cynosure, under the heading of "A Model Princess," I read: "The family of Bernadotte, the only one of Napoleon's generals whom he placed upon a throne who stayed there," etc. This is an error. Napoleon never placed Bernadotte upon a throne. The fact is that Sweden having joined one of the coalitions against Napoleon in 1805, two thousand Swedish soldiers fell into the hands of Bernadotte; and the humanity and kindness with which they were treated, so won the hearts of the Swedish nation that they elected Bernadotte as their crown prince in 1810, and he became king on the death of the childless Charles XIII. in 1818, when Napoleon was on St. Helena. This may be a matter of small moment, (and the story is taken from the Christian Advocate;) but I mention it for the sake of suggesting to the writers for the Cynosure that we should not only say what we know but know what we say. W. T.

ANOTHER APPROVAL.

I read with anabated interest the Cynosure, and rejoice in every advance movement and effort to strengthen the N. C. A. reform work. I would God would put it into the heart of men of means, and men of heart to put in execution the proposition of Secretary Stoddard to take Washington and make the move national, in fact, as it is American in principle. The conception seems to me a grand one. Such boldness will beget boldness, and awaken true enthusiasm in zealous, if not in indifferent, hearts.

I am hoping yet by the blessing of God to have health so as to be able to do something for the Cynosure. God is healing others in answer to prayer. I am among the "any" (Jas. 5: 14, 15.) We are told, "according to thy faith," etc. I ask an interest in your prayers. 2 Cor. 1: 11. T. C. H.

OTHER REFORMS.

There are so many moral evils that we need to pray to God daily to keep us from the evils of the world; that while we oppose one sin we don't hug another. There are some that are coming out from the world and being separate. There are some who do not bear witness to what the Lord has done for them. It seems as though they were ashamed to, or ashamed of Christ (Mark 8:38). I want to say a few words to Christian mothers and sisters about dress. If we love the Saviour and those he died to save and want to be workers in the vineyard, we can't spend our time in bedecking ourselves with the pride and fashion of this world, when friends and perhaps children, are going on unsaved.

Six years ago this winter I listened to a sermon on the subject of Christian women's adorning. I seemed to see Christian mothers spending their time ruffling and tucking and trimming while their children could say "I never heard my mother pray." Then I saw their sons go to the war unbelievers. Some were shot, others died in hospitals. O how gladly their mothers would have gone to pray for them then! Think you those boys won't rise up in the judgment with condemnation. Well, the good Lord gave me grace to lay aside the weight and sin that had beset me all my life and run with patience the race set before me; and patience worketh experience and experience hope. MRS. R. J.

LITERARY NOTES.

Rev. Albert Sims, of Galt, Ontario, beside publishing the Radical Christian, issues some valuable tracts on dress, the tobacco habit, etc., which are a valuable addition to the purifying and useful literature of the day.

Choice Literature, the monthly eclectic magazine published by John B. Alden, 18 Vesey St., New York, in its January number, contains articles by Prof. Proctor, Samuel Smiles, Count De Falbe, the Bishop of Carlisle, and Vernon Lee. The cheapness of this publication is almost ridiculously out of proportion to its value—25 cents a year.

The same publisher issues a very neat little semi-weekly, the Elzevir Library, in which he proposes to print the choicest literature from our best authors; each number to contain a literary gem complete. The list of authors and articles which will appear in this scries will tempt every lover of good reading to invest in the publication.

Vick's beautiful Monthly Magazine opens its sixth volume with the year. Nothing can surpass the delicate accuracy with which the floral world is transferred to its pages. "Rose Gossip," "Flowers for Schools," "A Bog Garden," "Insects and Flowers," and "Native Ferns," are among the longer articles.

In St. Nicholas for February, Joaquin Miller, the eccentric poet, writes of the "Land of Clouds," and fine illustrations of an ascent of Mt. Hood accompany the article. H. H. Boyeson's accoun of the Norwegian skee, a kind of snow-shoe, is delightful for its pictures of northern life. The "Stories of Art and Artists" reveals to the young readers something of the life of Rubens. Of much else in the number, witty and bright will express the sum, but that is all.

Good Literature has approved its name of late in such reprints from the English reviews as "The Mills and Carlyle," "Macauley," "Mr. Anthony Trollope," "Some Points in American Speech and Culture," etc.

The Omaha Observer says of "In the Coils," "We are not in a position to verify the statements of this challenge to the Masonic society. Anyhow, we are concerned simply with the story as a work of fiction. Thus considered, it must be pronounced one of the most vivid, realistic and striking productions that has issued from the modern press. The author shows himself a master of terse rhetoric, of apt quotations, and of glowing wit. While it has been constructed rather with a view of producing effect, and forcing thought, than to present a more finished piece of artistic work: it yet is, of its kind, a masterpicce. The reader will not willingly lay it aside, until the fate of the brave young physician has been ascertained. The book is the product of home talent, it may be added, and for sale by Seaman, and at the Antiquarian Book Store."

In The North American Review for February six prominent theologians, representing as many religious denominations, give expression to their views upon the question of the "Revision ef Creeds". Prof. Alexander Winchell, in an article entitled "The Experiment of Universal Suffrage", institutes a profound inquiry into the essential conditions of stable popular government, which he finds to be, substantially, virtue and intelligence; but thesc conditions, he maintains, are absolutely unattainable under our existing political system, where an electorate either ignorant or viscious, or both, by the mere force of superior numbers, practically nullifies the suffrages of the better and wiser portion of the people, whose right to control the government of the commonwealth is grounded in the very nature of things. Bishop McQuaid of Rochester, is given a large space in an effort to prove that the Protestantism represented by Henry Ward Beecher and the State churches of Europe is declining. This is a stock theme with a few Romanists. "The Political Situation" is the joint title of two articles, the one by Horatio Seymour, the other by Geo. S. Boutwell, who offer their respective views upon the cause of the recent overthrow of the Republican party. An article by Dr. D. A. Sargent, on "Physical Education in Colleges", treats a subject of prime importance to the welfare of the youths in our higher educational institutions. Finally, there are two articles on "The Standard Oil Company", Senator Camden of West Virginia defending that corporation against its assailants, and John C. Welch setting forth the reasons for condemning it as a dangerous monopoly. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York.

Go, then, to a work so solemn that angels might tremble to bear the trust—a work so pregnant with issues for good or for evil, in time and in eternity, that imagination fails to embrace their number and full significance—as becomes the children of earth. Firm, yet gentle; bold to reprove, tender to restore; weak in ourselves, yet strong in the mighty God of Jacob: apply to your task. Go! Despair not amid difficulties, and shrink not from toil; and though no earthly recompense be yours, at the resurrection of the just you shall have a sure reward—a crown of righteousness that fadeth not away.—Selected.

ASSORTED.

Fifty-six suburban trains are run daily on the Illinois Central road, and earry 250,000 passengers per month, an increase of 40 per cent within the last year.

The stoekholders of the Philadelphia centennial are out of pocket $1,700,000. It will probably be some time before Philadelphia will hold another eentennial.

From the eonsumption of matches in Franee and England, it is seen that about 250,000,000,000 are made in those two eonntries every year. In the United States, about 40,000,000 a year are made, yielding a revenue to the government of about $3,500,000.

Since the last session of the Missouri Legislature, two years ago, Gov. Crittenden has pardoned 121 convicts from the penitentiary, and Lieut.-Gov. Campbell eight. Eight of these were convieted of murder in the first degree, twenty six of murder in the seeond degree, and four of outrages.

Curran was addressing a jury, when the Judge, who was thought to be antagonistic to his elient, intimated his dissent from the argument advaneed by a shake of his head. "I see, gentleman," said Curran, "I see the motion of his lordship's head. Persons unaequainted with his lordship would be apt to think it implied a differenee of opinion, but be assured, gentlemen, this is not the ease. When you know his lordship as well as I do, it will be unneeessary to tell you that when he shakes his head there is really nothing in it."

It is said that when Senator David Davis was on the judieial beneh in Illinois, he was onee interviewed about one of his deeisions, and his conversation taken down in shorthand. After the newsgatherer had copied his notes out in longhand he submitted them to the Judge, and asked him if they were correet. The Judge read them through earefully and replied with a fatherly smile: "My son, if you had written this in Choetaw, on the subject of raising hens, you could not have gotten further off the traek. You have jumbled up the words so that no man ean understand them. Otherwise, the report is very eorrect."

The purehase of the main Exposition Building at Philadelphia by Mr. B. C. Mitchell for $97,000 was a sueeessful speculation. The eost of removing the huge struetureand other expenses amounted to about $100,000, and the materials of which it was built have been sold for about $5,000,000, leaving a profit of $300,000 to be divided among Mr. Mitehell and the five other gentlemen whom he asso ciated with himself in the enterprise. At the time of his purehase Mr. Mitehell was frank enough to say that he fully expeeted to make a large sum of money by it, that he was prepared to pay eonsiderably more for the building than the price at whieh it was knocked down to him, and that he was astonished that Mr. Riehard Dobbins, who built it, and who was as well acquainted with its value as himself, should have let such a pretty plum slip through his fingers.

Helen F. Heffron is a student of the Hahnemann Medieal College of Chieago (Co-edueational). The Professor of Surgery, Dr. Hall, early in the termrequested the students to make a careful written report of the surgieal clinic, and to sign a fietitious name, that he might examine these reports, and select upon merit alone the person who, for the entire term, should be appointed the official reporter of his elinies. At the next meeting of the class, after the reports had been eare fully rated, Prof. Hall said: "If the gentleman signing himself 'Incognito' will please stand up, I shall take great pride in presenting to the class my official reporter for the present term." Whereupon amid the shouts of applause, Helen F. Heffron arose, and blushingly confessed to being "the gentleman who signed himself Incognito." Of eourse she was appointed.

Mr. Jeffrey has established the faet that bones disappear in the ocean. By dredging, it is eommon to bring up teeth, but rarely ever a bone of any kind; these, however compaet, dissolve if exposed to the aetion of the water but a little time. On the eontrary, teeth—which are not bones any more than whales are fish—resist the destroying action of sea water indefinitely. It is, therefore, a powerful solvent. Still, the popular opinion is that it is a brine. If such were the case, the bottom of all seas would, long ago, have been shallowed by immense aecumulations of earcasses and products of the vegetable kingdom constantly floating into them. Dentine, the peculiar material of whieh teeth are formed, and the enamel covering them, offer extraordinary resistance to these ehemical agencies, whieh resolve other animal remains into nothingness. Mounds in the West, tumuli in Europe and Asia, which are believed to antedate saered history for thousands of years, yield up perfectly sound teeth, on which time appears to have made no impression whatever.—Phrenological Journal.

The following are some of the great battles of the world, and the number slain in eaeh: At Durham, 1346, there fell 15,000; at Halidonhill and Agincourt, 20,000 eaeh; at Bautzen and Lepanto, 25,000 each; at Austerlitz, Jena and Lutzen, 25,000 eaeh; at Eylau, 60,000; at Waterloo and Quatre Bras, one engagement, 70,000; at Borodino, 80,000; at Fontenoy, 100,000; at Yarmouth, 150,000; at Chalon, no less than 300,000 of Attila's army alone! The Moors in Spain, about the year 800, lost in one battle 70,000; in another, four eenturies later, 180,000, besides 50,000 prisoners; and in a third, even 200,000 men. Still greater was the carnage in aneient times. At Cannæ 70,000 fell. The Romans lost 80,000, in an engagement with the Cimbri and Teutones. The Carthaginians attaeked Hymera in Sieily with an army of 300,000 men, and a fleet of 2,000 ships and 3,000 transports; but not a ship or a transport escaped destruction, and of the troops only a few in a small boat reached Carthage with the melancholy tidings. Marius, slew, in one battle, 140,000 Gauls, and in another 290,000. In the battle of Issus, between Alexander and Darius, 110,000 were slain; in that of Arbela, 300,000 more. Julius Cæsar onee annihilated an army of 363,000 Helvetians; and in a battle with Upsipetes, he slew 400,000; and on another oceasion he massaered 430,000 Germans, who had erossed the Rhine, with their herds, and flocks, and little ones, in quest of new settlements.

Sentiments must have undergone quite a dreadful change in Prussia since the days of Frederic the Great. He is said to have taken the following summary and very sueeessful method of suppressing dueling in his army: An offieer desired the permission of the King to fight a duel with a fellow-offieer. He gave his eonsent, with the understanding that himself would be a speetator of the eonfliet. The hour of meeting arrived, and the parties repaired to the place of slaughter. But what was their surprise to find a gibbet ereeted upon the spot. The ehallenger inquired of Frederic, who was present according to agreement, what this meant. "I intend," said the King, sternly, "to hang the survivor!" This was enough. The duel was not fought; and by this simple but effectual means, it is said dueling was broken up in the army of Frederic.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUAAY 1, 1883.

A WORD TO SUBSCRIBERS.

We have said but little about changes already made in your paper, and we do not intend to speak of others contemplated in advanee; we prefer to submit them to your inspection, and if you are pleased we shall be encouraged, and if you are displeased we shall hope to hear before it is too late to repent and try again. If you think we have done reasonably well, and have faith in the future sufficient to warrant a little extra exertion on your part, we ask you to call the attention of your neighbors to what is being done. If after making an effort you fail to secure a subscription for six months or a year, and can secure a trial subscriber we will send four consecutive numbers for 10cts., to begin with the number immediately following the receipt of the money. Please put us in communieation with persons who in your judgment ought to read the Cynosure, and let us see how many we can hold. We are willing to test this plan and e wmake this offer to eontinue for one month from the date of this issue. Give name, postoffice and State very plainly.

An additional 5 cents secures the Weed pamphlet with a wood cut and brief deseription of the Morgan monument. Please look out for "Business," on the last page.

TWO HUNDRED.—Thore is a balance remaining to the credit of the Cynosure Extension Fund. It is designed to aid those who are not able to pay the full price of the paper but can pay a part. We want the names of two hundred such persons to put on our list within a week. Will you look them up and send them along at one dollar per year. The Extension Fund pays 50 cents on each subseription, making up the price to our lowest club rates.

THIS WEEK

The Cynosure is especially valuable for its discussion of the problem of adjustment between the rights of labor and the interests of eapital. The relation of strikes, co-operation and the Custom House to this question are ably set forth by as able writers. We have no knowledge of any other single issue of any paper whieh contains so mueh and so varied information and argument upon this great and perplexing subjeet. Our readers will appreciate the effort to present its different phases in a clear and discriminating light.

NEXT WEEK

we are able to promise a discussion of Odd-fellowship whieh will add something to the information of our readers respecting this order, and much, we hope, to their abhorrence of its principles and methods of operation.

AN OLD WRITER says: "Many ask the origin of evil. It is enough for rational men, that there is evil and a way to escape it."

"THE BOTTOMLESS PIT" means, what we daily see, that sin is fathomless. That there should be such a pit in eternity is no more against reason or nature than that there should be such pits in time, as we see in the record of Jefferson Davis, Guiteau, and their sympathizers.

CHRISTIANITY, that is to say Christ, underlies every interest, question, and movement which bears on, moulds, or modifies society and the destinies of men. One side seek how little, the other how much Christianity can be infused into it.

CHRIST, in conversation with the woman at the mountain well, repealed the law of sacred places, and put a Mount Zion or place of pardon in front and within reach of every true worshiper around our globe.

WE ARE COMPLETE IN CHRIST, only and so far as we "abide in him and his words abide in us.

INFANTS, IDIOTS AND HEATHEN "who have not had a fair chance," according to some advanced teachers, are to have a new probation in the next life, or at least, the Bible does not say they will not have one. Put all these preachers together, and they would never produce a revival to save adult people of sound mind, and sinners in Christian lands. Their revivals, when they have any, are revivals of baptised worldliness. Convert these three classes to Christ and infants, etc., will follow.

THE HOUR OF PERIL.

The hour of danger to every good cause, is its hour of success. Satan has always wrung his greatest victories from the jaws of defeat. The barons gained Magna Charta and jury-trial from the craven King John at Runnymede; but pleased with the concession of the principle, they lost the thing conceded, and jury-trial did not go into practice till a century later. So Cromwell and his Parliament made all the forms of Christian religion free and equal. They have never been so since. In the hour of their triumph the friends of popular government fell. A handful of Freemasons went over to France, organized lodges sworn to the Pretender, sent secret emissaries back to England, instituted in English lodges the ceremony of drinking over water, that is, holding their mugs or glasses over water, and thus drinking to Charles II. who was across the Channel. Rebold, the Masonic historian (p. 55) says, "Charles II. during his exile, was received as an accepted Mason, and gave to Masonry the title of Royal Art, because it was mainly by its instrumentality that he was raised to the throne and monarchy restored to England."

The same Masonic author, Rebold, says on page 213, that Baron Ramsay "was converted to the Roman Catholic Religion and instituted the Holy Royal Arch degree" in the interests of popery and the Stuarts; and the Commonwealth of England and popular rights went down before that secret conspiracy. On page 214, he says, "A partisan of the Stuarts founded a lodge of eighteen degrees which took the name of the Scottish mother lodge of Francc." There is no record to inform us whether the silent and fraudulent General Monk who, with a Scotch Presbyterian army, crushed out popular liberty and restored popery, prelacy and the Stuarts was a Freemason, but his secrecy, deception, and love of despotism indicate that he was one. And we know how near Southern Masons, aided by their English brethren, came of swamping the whole American movement for popular liberty and putting empire based on human slavery in its stead. Thurlow Weed, Charles F. Adams, Seward, Stanton, Stevens, and other Anti-masons under God prevented it and restored our Union.

The Anti-masonry of fifty-six years ago was betrayed "in the house of its friends." Thaddeus Stevens kept up the party in Pennsylvania a whole year after it fell in the other States, by the temporizing policy of Seward, whom afterward the lodge defeated for the Presidency and came near assassinating. Andrew Johnson was not assassinated. Mr. Stevens told me that Mr. Johnson was "kept sober till they could raise him twenty-one degrees." Stevens was, at the time he told me, leader of our House of Representatives, and had means of knowing all that transpired in the lodges of the district. Johnson nearly swamped the results of our slavery war. He is said to have furnished to Kelly the first money to form the Grange, from the U. S. Secret Service money at his disposal.

"Fore-warned is fore-armed." We are yet in our martyr period; but when we get in reach of the offices the hour of our supreme peril arrives. Good men get weary of prophesying in sack-cloth; rejoice at new accessions and, like the good-hearted Jehoshaphat, "Help the ungodly and love them that hate the Lord."

"FREEMASONRY ILLUSTRATED."

We have received a letter from Rev. A. H. Springstein in which he says of the above book:

"The Ritual is the Michigan work as I took the three degrees in Croton Lodge, No. 177, in August, 1867, though in a few places I detect unimportant differences."

"So far as the Ritual is eoneerned, it is actually the deadly dose that all Masons have taken."

"I have seen a good deal of Masonry in and out of the lodge, and have read Masonic and Anti-masonie literature a good deal, but Masonry never appeared to me so like an infernal contrivance to ruin, hopelessly ruin mankind as it has since I began reading this book."

"No language can express my feelings as I refleet on the influence of Freemasonry, and what astonishes and alarms me most of all is the indifference of the masses in regard to the existence and clearly diseovered design of such an organization."

"While I was in the fraternity I was under the most galling yoke of bondage. At the time I renounced I had never read a word in opposition to the order. I was completely in the dark as to reform work, but the Spirit of God showed me that I must leave the order immediately, or be forever lost. I consented without hesitation, and was saved from it. I was tempted by the devil to modify somewhat, or to delay, but the Spirit showed me that to yield to the tempter would effeet my ruin."

"My Masonic experience is the black spot in my life."

Escaped Masons have often, in conversation, expressed the same indescribable horror on looking back over their lodge experience. The very walls of the lodge-room seemed dusky and hateful, as an abode of Satan and evil spirits; the coarse humor and balderdash seemed grim, like jokes in a dead house; and the worship horrible, like conjuring with the dead. There needs more prayer for such brethren as Mr. Springstein. They will be sifted as was Peter, and assailed by "fiery darts" from a distance by those spirits from whom they have clean escaped.

THE SECRET LABOR LODGES.

In our large cities and manufacturing centers every branch of industry is organized more or less in secret trade unions, whose ostensible object is "protection against the encroachments of unjust employers." The measures taken to secure this end are the regulation of the number of apprentices, the rate of wages, the number of working hours, and assistance in sickness or misfortune. The improvements in machinery have largely interfered with the business of these lodges of late years and has left them only the question of wages and the rendering of mutual aid as a basis of operations.

The strikes that have been set afoot to enforce the claims of the laborer for higher wages have on the whole been not only unsuccessful but have resulted in such legal restrictions that in the esteem of the trade unions the bands of labor are only made stronger. Thus the strikes among the railway men in New England some eight years ago resulted in a law in Massachusetts, compelling trainmen to go through to their destination before joining a strike. A similar law was passed in Pennsylvania after the great strikes and riots of 1877. Not only have employers thus had recourse to law, but they have also combined, and frequently destroy the effect of a strike by their ability to form other arrangements and carry on their business independent of the strikers. The laborer, therefore, who has made use of this agency to coerce his employer, after having lost weeks and perhaps months of time, and finding that his own family are the greatest sufferers, while the business of the world moves mercilessly on, becomes aware of the fact that some other means must be devised to secure the end sought. Strikes are therefore giving way to the more rational methods of arbitration.

Co-operative industries are also increasing in number, and although their success has not been so general with us as in England, there are yet some excellent illustrations of the principle both in our cities and in the mining regions of Pennsylvania where every peculiarity of difference between capital and labor has appeared, and every device either to coerce one or the other or to harmonize their disputes has been attempted. The failure of the trade unions, although backed by formidable bands of assassins like the Mollie Maguires, and at times having the courts and local governments in their control, has been beyond dispute.

A modification of the lodge machinery has therefore been attempted in the organization known as the "Knights of Labor." Mayor Powderly of Scranton, Pa., very boastfully announces in the North American Review that this society was kept a profound secret until 1882, though founded in 1869. His simplicity is amusing, for the order was known years ago. As improbable are the claims made that this secret lodge will combine all trades and trade societies, will prevent strikes by arbitration, checkmate the influence of the ever-present saloon, abrogate all inimical laws, and secure the social and intellectual development of laboring men. The objects are good but the means are as inadequate as a gaming table is to impart skill in business or a Masonic lodge to give a classic education.

This order is now moving in the coal regions of eastern Pennsylvania. A few years since they elected a full ticket in Susquehanna county; but their success nearly annihilated the order. They are now rallying in conventions and promise to soon elect their State ticket; but their meetings will always be objects of suspicion, and as they succeed unscrupulous and ambitious men will get control and their secret organization will give this class all the opportunity they could desire. Of all the failures to solve the questions of difference between capital and labor the secret lodge will at last be known as the greatest.

WASHINGTON AS A MASON.

The inquiry of Iowa brethren for a copy of General Washington's celebrated letter to Rev. G. W. Snyder of Fredericton, Maryland, (whieh may be found with much other interesting matter on the same subjeet in the pamphlet "General Washington opposed to Secret Societies," for sale at this offiee) reminds us of a little eontroversy in the Chieago Tribune lately. Robert McCurdy, a pursy and pompous Englishman who officiated a few years since as rector of an Episeopal church near this city, has been giving his choice opinion of Mr. Weed's Batavia letter to the press. It is needless to repeat the base epithets he applies to the letter and its author, of that hereafter; but concerning General Washington he made these remarks, as if defiant of all contradiction:

"Several orders were issued by General Butler during the war, restoring Masonic property, and forbidding any appropriation of Masonic buildings or property. In this he but imitated General Washington and his army-orders. When Commander-in-Chief of the army he encouraged travelling lodges, visited them and participated in their labors. Captain Hugh Maloy of Ohio, told in 1849 (then 100 years old,) of having been made a Mason in the marquee of Washington. The Junior Grand Warden of the Grand Lodge of Peru possessed a jewel worn by Washington in a lodge of the army. It originally belonged to Bystrzanowski, who came over to this country with Kosciusko and served under Washington. It was used by General Washington in Mark Lodge, returned to the brother on the disbanding of the army, and has thus been transmitted. When Washington learned that a detachment of his army, in overcoming a British force, had captured the working tools, jewels, and clothing of a military travelling lodge, he ordered restoration under a military escort, declaring that 'He waged no war against philanthropy and benevolence.' General Washington made Lafayette a Freemason in a room of the old Freeman's Tavern, on the north side of the green, in Morristown, N. J., 1777."

A few days after this inflated narrative was neatly pinctured by the following from Pittsburgh:

....I feel very little interest in the matter, and would not have noticed it had it not contained the paragraph headed "General Washington and Masonry," which contains so much that is historically false and exhibits an ignorance of American history that would disgrace a college Freshman. Most half-grown school-boys know, if this reverend Doctor of Divinity does not, that Washington and Lafayette were not in Morristown together at any time during the year 1777, and therefore Washington did not make Lafayette a Freemason in Freeman's Tavern, as alleged by the Rev. Robert McCurdy, D. D. Even if they had been in Morristown together, Washington could not have made him a Mason, for the simple reason that he never was the Master of a lodge. This fact can be shown by the very best authority. That Washington was not a frequent visitor to the lodge is also easily proved.

HISTORICUS.

THE SHINAR CONFEDERACY.

A few weeks since there appeared an article in these columns of intense interest respecting the Chaldean mysteries and their transmutation into Freemasonry through Egypt and Greece. A singular confirmation of that argument lately appeared in the India Methodist Watchman of Bombay. In an article on the Hindoo Trinity the writer says:

"We have already seen that the religion the Aryans brought from Shinar nearly 2,000 years before Christ, was a non-idolatrous deism. The found Hindustan occupied by numerous nations of demonolators. Having not a spiritual experience of divine things, their deism soon came to be represented by visible objects, i. e., idols. Mere intellectual conceptions having too little power upon the masses the pantheon began to be filled. With the inception of visible idolatry the Aryans absorbed many notions and practices which they found common among the demonolators who had preceded them, and as man must needs worship, all else soon gave way, and under the craftiness of the Brahmin, rose gradually the million godded idolatry of India. The Brahmin, as we have seen, had made the whole system so elaborate and oppressive that the millions groaned for deliverance when Buddha rose about 500 B. C."

—While lecturing in Brooklyn last month, John B. Gough was attacked by a severe sickness from which he has not yet recovered. In consequence he has postponed the fulfillment of a number of lecture engagements.

—Dea. Philo Carpenter has been afflicted with neuralgia for some time. During the past two weeks he has been confined to his bed by an attack of fever, but his friends will be glad to know that he is improving, and his physician gives encouragement that he will be able to sit up in a few days.

—Bro. T. F. Dolan, editor of the Sword at Washington city sends us this cheering word. May it be but the first of many bearing a like message:

"A young man of promise under the influence of the purifying grace of God has recently renounced his allegiance to the Masonic fraternity. 'Our labor is not in vain in the Lord' whose order is to let the light shine to the utmost."

—Among those who listened to Father Chittenden's "o'er true tale" at the late State Convention at Emporia, Kansas, was a Mr. J. S. Pointer, who had been made an "Entered Apprentice" at Wabash, Indiana, for the snug sum of $20. One degree finished his Masonic advancement. To Bro. Butler of the American Freeman he expressed his gratitude for the testimony of the evening, confirming it and declaring his freedom from lodge thralldom.

REFORM NEWS.

NOTICE.

To the Friends of Reform in Southeast Pennsylvania and Adjoining Localities.

We, the undersigned, were appointed a committee by the official meeting of King Street Church, Chambersburg, to call a general convention of the anti-secrecy reform advocates to meet in Chambersburg, Pa., Feb. 13th, at 7 P. M., and to continue through the two following days. Speakers of ability are expected to be present and to address the meeting.

S. E. Starry of Iowa has promised to be present and show the inside of the lodge. Free entertainment will be provided for those from abroad.

SOUTHEASTERN PENNSYLVANIA.

MECHANICSBURG, PA., Jan. 23, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I left Chambersburg on the 19th and came to this city of about four thousand inhabitants which is seven miles south of Harrisburg, and on the line of the Cumberland Valley R. R. I found most kind entertainment at the home of Bro. Lewis Bricken; preached in the M. E. Church on Sabbath eve, and last night lectured in the Union Church (built in 1825) to not large, but attentive audiences. Yesterday I became acquainted with Mr. John Robb, a seceded Mason of three degrees. He is a wealthy farmer living near town. He says he was drawn into the lodge through the influence of his minister, but was surprised and disgusted from the first. He stayed with them as long as his conscience would suffer him and then withdrew both from the lodge and the church, which more than any other gives it support. He had never known of the Cynosure, but was glad to subscribe for it. A few others are interested in our work, but the churches and ministry with one consent closed their doors and hearts against it.

The churches of this Cumberland Valley are an interesting study. The farming community are generally wealthy. Nowhere will you find better farm buildings or finer animals. Nowhere else are the farming people better fed or more comfortably housed, and more generally moral and religious; but they are quite unaccustomed to giving for the support of the ministry or other benevolent objects. The country churches are Dunkers, Monecse, River Brethren, United Brethren, and "The Church of God." The first three are each divided into two or more sects, and all practice feet-washing as a religious ordinance. All except the "Church of God" have rules against secret societies though they feel little interest in the reform as a general movement. The U. B. churches are becoming more and more corrupted, and their ministers with one consent rule out all lectures and lecturers, though many of the laymen are in warm sympathy with us. This change of front on the part of the U. B. ministry is doubtless due to the course of their last General Conference and the action of their bishops, and if persisted in must soon result in a moral collapse of these churches. In the towns, the Lutherans, the different branches of the Presbyterian family, and the M.E. church hold pre-eminence, though the "Church of God" have many large and fine houses of worship ministered to by Freemasons and Odd-fellows. The Presbyterian ministry are opposed to secretism but are very conservative.

The great need of these churches is first a general religious awakening, a quickening of conscience, that shall lead them to obey the truth, and next to this, the dissemination of light on this reform. Here is a most hopeful field and one that demands careful culture. I hope to be at Clifford in Northeast Pennsylvania, Feb. 1 and 2, and then go back with Bro. Starry to Chambersburg. Yours in Christ, H. H. HINMAN.

REFORM WORK IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Our friends must not suppose we are idle because we have not recently reported in the Cynosure. We are so pressed with reform work that we can hardly get time to report. The tract work is constantly pressed in many quarters. Churches are waking up to the evil of secretism. One pastor who followed a Freemason says it is a source of strength to him in his parish that he is opposed to Masonry. The Congregational church at Epsum was cheerfully opened for a lecture on Freemasonry and Odd-Fellowship. I had a large and attentive audience and almost universal sympathy was manifested. One very favorable sign of progress is the unusual call for Anti-Masonic books, A Freewill Baptist minister who had taken one degree of Masonry ordered an exposition of the seventh degree of Masonry, and subscribed for an Anti-Masonic paper. A seceding Mason said he knew all about Masonry he wished to, but bought an exposition of Odd-Fellowship. All doubt as to the correctness of the expositions appears to be leaving honest minds. There has been much awful lying as to these expositions, but all in vain. The increasing host of honest men who are leaving the lodges and confirming the expositions renders all denial of their correctness vain. Our united prayer should be that the Lord will give courage to New Hampshire seceders to speak out more openly for the truth. We purpose to press the battle to the gate.

S. C. KIMBALL.

—Simultaneously with the death of Thurlow Weed and the numerous reminiscences of him, appear his own sworn reminiscences of the events connected with the famous Anti-mason excitement and the abduction and murder of Morgan. The story he tells he had told before, so that it is not new to the public, and the present one is only a full and connected relation, sustained by what was not needed to give it credibility—Mr. Weed's oath, subscribed by him not two months before his death. The story is a horrible one.—N. Y. Independent.

WORDS OF CHEER.

The endorsement of the friends of reform is a sweet antidote for the weariness of office work, and the unanimity of their expression is an earnest of the effort they will make to second the determination to keep the Cynosure in the heavens of reform, the pole star of praying hearts. Every one will be glad to read the following note from the esteemed pastor of the Free Methodist church in this city:

Editor Cynosure, DEAR BROTHER:—Please allow me to express my thankfulness at the appearance and contents of the Cynosure. It looks nice, reads well, and is soul cheering to the lover of reform. May God bless you and all your readers, and prosper the cause for which you are laboring. I will endeavor to show my appreciation by actions, (subscribers) which speak louder than words. In the love of Christ, your brother, C. B EBEY.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

The Cynosure is happy to announce herewith a grand list of contributors and correspondents for 1883. To read their letters, study their arguments, compare their experiences, and drink with them at the fountain of truth, even Jesus Christ, will be the noble privilege of the readers of the Cynosure. The following is only a partial list. Arrangements are being made for the enlargement of the circle until it shall include every section of our country:

John G. Fee.
Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D.
Rev. P. A. Seguin, French Protestant Mission, N. Y.
Pres. S. B. Allen, Westfield College.
Pres. C. B. Kephart, Avalon College.
Rev. Warren Taylor, Presbyterian, Ohio.
Prof. L. N. Stratton, President Wheaton Theological Seminary.
Prof. W. O. Tobey, editor United Brethren in Christ.
Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., of Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary.
Rev. Wm Johnston, United Presbyterian church, Iowa.
Revs. H. H. Hinman and P. S. Feemster, N. C. A. agents in the South.
Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, editor of Our Banner.
Thos. E. Kennedy, San Jose, California.
S. M. Good, who has taken some fifty degrees in various Masonic rites.
Rev. N. A. Welton, Episcopal.

THE HOME.

DAILY STRENGTH FOR DAILY DUTIES.

Open the East Gate now,
And let the day come in,
The day with unstained brow,
Untouched by care or sin.
For her we watch and wait,
Wait with the birds and dew;
Open the Eastern Gate,
And let the daylight through.

Uplift thy daily toil
With brain all fresh and clear,
Strong hands that have no soil,
And heart untouched by fear.
Marching unto thy noon,
Marching unto thy rest—
When shadows lengthen, soon
Comes calm and peaceful rest.

Open the Western Gate,
And let the daylight go
In pomp of royal state,
In rose and amber glow;
It is so late, so late,
The birds sing sweet and low—
Open the Western Gate,
And let the daylight go.

Lay down thy daily toil,
Glad of thy labor done,
Glad of the night's assoil,
Glad of thy wages won;
With hearts that fondly wait,
With grateful hearts aglow,
Pray at the Western Gate
And let the daylight go.

Pray at the Eastern Gate
For all the day can ask;
Pray at the Western Gate,
Holding thy finished task.
It waxeth late, so late,
The night falls cold and gray;
But through Life's Western Gate
Dawns Life's Eternal Day.

THE MODEL FAMILY.

BY MRS. C. S. KENNEDY.

Since the family is ordained of God, it is the duty of all who profess faith in him to consider carefully how this greatest force in God's world should be organized and governed. Why call the family the greatest force, do not religion and national governments exert more influence than individual families? We reply: If the families of a nation are religious, the nation will be religious; if infidel, the nation will be infidel. If the families are little despotisms, the national and religious government will as surely be tinged with the same unchristian element.

We have striking illustrations of the truth of these statements in the history of the patriarchs, who were constantly waring with each other on slight pretexts. The Jewish nation was the one religious denomination of which each family was a miniature. And in our own times, could France ever have abolished the Christian Sabbath if her families had been ardent worshipers of the Son of God?

☐The family starts a wave which goes on and on, bearing healing to nations, or sweeps over them like a tidal wave of destruction. Since, then, the family is such a mighty force, let us consider how it can be used to advance the kingdom of God in this earth. Everything has an ideal, a faultless model, to which it is the object to attain as near as possible,' so there must be an ideal family, and we will try to present to you as correct a picture of the model family as our imperfect vision can discover.

First, then, this model family must be a Christian family, organized for the purpose of uniting individual efforts into one strong power against common enemies. The experiment of making a model of an unchristian household has always failed. Heathen are proud of their gods and of their religion and would consider themselves degraded by a marriage with one who did not worship with them. Why should a servant of the God of gods be less proud of his heritage than the heathen? Or try to build his house half on the rock of Christ and half on the sands of Satan, leaving his family in danger of being swept away by floods of evil?

If a family be truly Christian, this includes every element required in a model; but there are so many called Christian in which the love of Christ is seldom shown, where children are taught to hate or despise what they suppose to be Christianity, that we must bring out the lineaments of our model still plainer.

In a Christian family the father and mother are one, not simply in name, but in reality; moved with one impulse, seeking one object, upholding each other's honor and authority, loving each other as their own life, stimulating to good works, helping each other to become like their common example, Christ! And the children, brought into existence under such influences, guided by such examples, will early see that "Christ is the one altogether lovely." Their judgments considered, their rights respected, their faults kindly but firmly checked; they will respect the rights of others and become useful members of society and a "crown of glory" to their parents.

If there were more such families the "labor question" would not cause so much excitement; the church of God would not be "obliged" to have private theatricals to pay their expenses, nor constantly mourn its low spiritual condition,

Let us all work with a will till the nation is filled with model homes.

WHAT TO TEACH BOYS.

A philosopher has said that true education for boys is to "teach them what they ought to know when they become men." What is it they ought to know, then?

First—To be true—to be genuine. No education is worth anything that does not include this. A man had better not know how to read—he had better never learn a letter in the alphabet, and be true and genuine in intention and in action, rather than being learned in all sciences and languages, to be at the same time, false in heart and counterfeit in life. Above all things, teach the boys that truth is more than riches, more than culture, more than earthly power or position.

Second—To be pure in thought, language, and life—pure in mind and in body. An impure man, young or old, poisoning the society where he moves with smutty stories and impure examples, is a moral ulcer, a plague spot, a leper who ought to be treated as were the lepers of old, who were banished from society and compelled to cry "Unclean," as a warning to save others from the pestilence.

Third—To be unselfish; to care for the feeling and comforts of others; to be polite; to be generous, noble, and manly. This will include a genuine reverence for the aged and things sacred.

Fourth—To be self-reliant and self-helpful, even from early childhood; to be industrious always, and self-supporting at the earliest proper age. Teach them that all honest work is honorable, and that an idle, useless life of dependence on others is disgraceful.

When a boy has learned these four things, when he has made these ideas a part of his being, however young he may be, however poor, or however rich, he has learned some of the most important things he ought to know when he becomes a man. With these four properly mastered, it will be easy to find all the rest.—American Kindergarten Magazine.

THE GOSPEL FOR CHILDREN.

It is one great glory of Christianity that its merciful mysteries can find their way to the hearts of the little children. Its mysteries we say—for the gospel has its mysterics no less than these old systems of heathenism which fenced round their deepest truths with solemn barriers, only to be passed by the initiated. But the difference lies here—that its mysteries are taught at first to the neophytes, and that the sum of them lies in the words which we learned at our mother's knees so long ago that we have forgotten that they were ever new to us. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but should have eternal life." The little child who has learned his earliest lessons of what Father and Son, loving and giving, trust and life mean, by the sweet experiences of his own father's home and his mother's love, can grasp these blessed words. They carry the deepest mysteries which will still gleam before as unfathomed in all their profundity, unappropriated in all their blessedness, when millenniums have passed since we stood in the inner shrine of Heaven. Wonderful the word which blesses the child, which transcends the angel before the throne!—Alexander MacLaren, D. D.

EARLY INFLUENCES.

There can be no greater blessing than to be born in the light and air of a cheerful, loving home. It not only ensures a happy childhood—if there be health and a good constitution, but it always makes sure a virtuous and happy manhood, and a fresh young heart in old age. We think it every parent's duty to try to make their children's childhood full of love and of childhood's proper joyousness; and we never see children destitute of them through the poverty, faulty temper, or wrong notions of their parents, without a heartache. Not all the appliances which health can buy are necessary to the free and happy unfolding of childhood in body, mind or heart—quite otherwise, God be thanked; but children must at least have love inside the house, and fresh air and good play, and some good companionship out side—otherwise young life runs the great danger in the world of withering or growing stunted or sour and wrong, or at least prematurely old, and turned inward on itself.

MOTHERS' PRAYERS.

A lady prayed for her daughter thirty-nine years without receiving any answer. At length she came to die. Her death was the means used for her daughter's conversion. The daughter became a most eminent Christian much used in the turning of sinners to Christ.

One hundred American students who were converted met together to speak of their conversion. Ninety of them traced their blessings to their mothers' prayers.

At another meeting, in England, nearly one hundred who had been blessed of God said they had praying parents to pray for their children; the majority of the petitions began, "A mother asks prayer," etc.; only one or two, "A father asks prayer," etc.

Many a one has learned of late the blessing of having a praying mother. We trace every blessing to God's fathomless grace. Still he is pleased to use means, and he says, "For all these things I will be inquired of."

Christian mothers, pray on—God answers prayer.

HOUSE-KEEPING NOTES.

THE SMALL ARTS OF LIVING.

Hardly anything is too small to spoil the comfort of life, if it be misplaced. A speck in the eye, a kernel of wheat in the boot, a pin-point touching the skin, a band too tight, a needed strap gone—and goodbye comfort! Considering how much depends on our daily food, it is surprising how little is thought of the conditions under which it is taken in many families. Some people think a good deal more of what is on the table than what is said or done around it; and some few reverse the order—an operation that may do well for special occasions, when what is said is something extraordinary; but one that we will beg to be excused from as regular diet, even if the gods come to dine, until we are able to dispense with all that is implied in a good appetite. The cookery is too big a topic to touch in this connection; though what with cookery schools, a better knowledge among the people, and higher standards made familiar by our best hotels and dining-places, the art has greatly advanced in this city within the present generation. Good bread, appropriately broiled steak, and a roast done to a turn, no longer excite the special wonder that they once did. By and by, perhaps it will not be unusual to find a good soup, or vegetables that haven't been spoiled in cooking. But consider the meal cooked; how shall it be best enjoyed? By having it daintily and tastefully arranged and served, in the first place. We always mark the good housewife up a notch or two in our esteem if we see that, however competent help she may have, she always slips out to give the last touches to the table before the family or the guests sit down. Some do it for the guests but not for the family, but that is an error. The artistic arrangement of the table furniture; the skill that avoids crowding dishes together, or leaving space too bare; the forethought that looks out for flowers for the dining table, though the center table go bare; the quick eye which sees that everything is in its place—these supplement the fare wonderfully. Promptness in each member of the family is another essential. It demoralizes the group to have stragglers dropping in all the way through the meal, and gives a restaurant air—a suggestion of mere "feeding"—to the family meal, which it should never have.—Golden Rule.

FRESH AIR IN THE BED-ROOM.

How much air can be safely admitted into a sleeping or living room, is a common question. Rather, it should be considered, how rapidly air can be admitted without injury or risk, and at how low a temperature. We cannot have too much fresh air, so long as we are warm enough and are not exposed to draughts. What is a draught? It is a swift current of air, at a temperature lower than the body, which robs either the whole body, or an exposed part, of its heat, so rapidly as to disturb the equilibrium of our circulation and gives us cold. Young and healthy persons can habituate themselves to sleeping in even a strong draught as from an open window if they cover themselves, in cold weather, with an abundance of bedclothes. But those who have been long accustomed to being sheltered from the outer air by sleeping in warmed and nearly or quite shut up rooms, are too susceptible to cold to bear a direct draught of cold air. Persons over seventy years of age, moreover, with a lower vitality than in their youth, will not bear a low temperature, even in the air they breathe. Like hot-house plants, they may be killed by a winter night's chill, and must be protected by warmth at all times. As a rule we may say that, except for the most robust, the air which enters at night into a sleeping-chamber, should, in cold weather, be admitted gradually only by cracks or moderate openings, or should have its force broken by some interposed obstacle, as a curtain, etc., to avert its blowing immediately upon a sleeper in his bed. The ancient fashion, however, of having bed-curtains, which exclude almost all the air, has rightly become almost obsolete. No wonder that people dream horrid dreams, and wake in the morning wearied rather than refreshed. when they sleep in rooms sealed up tightly on every side: breathing over and over again their own breaths, which grew more and more poisonous with every hour of the night.—American Health Primer.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

STORIES OF MY BOYS.—III.

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

The next Sabbath as Harvey Horne took his place in the class, he awkwardly called my attention to a lady sitting near, and remarked,

"That be master's sister. The folks where I stay won't let me come to this Sunday-school any more only as she came to-day and told me to come with her."

I glanced up in the direction indicated. A pair of kind gray eyes met mine and a smile of greeting came to her lips.

Directly after the exercises for the day were over she came to my side, and cordially extending her hand introduced herself. A few words of conversation sufficed to inform me that she, like myself, was a servant of the Master, and she named a day when she would call upon me to discuss, as she said, a pet plan of her's whereby good might be accomplished.

True to her appointment she found her way into our humble sitting room and after a few remarks between us made known her errand.

Did I think the boy, Harvey Horne, would appreciate being given an education to the extent of "making anything of himself," was her introduction.

I hesitated. To tell the truth, Harvey Horne had always appeared rather dull; but many times—I could not account for the feeling—I found myself wondering what the boy would be under different circumstances—the surroundings of Christian influences and of education. So I replied slowly,

"I—think—so. At any rate I should much like to watch the working of such an experiment."

"I had not thought of that," said the lady, "In any event it would be satisfactory to me as an experiment only. I shall try it, I think."

And then she went on to say that she had taken a decided interest in the orphan boy and wished to educate him. Could we name some one who would be willing to give him parents' care and a Christian home at her expense? Could we not accommodate him at the parsonage?

The pastor was called in and after several plans were suggested, discussed and abandoned, a decision satisfactory to all parties was arrived at.

Harvey became an inmate of the parsonage. Of his life there, of his studies and of his progress in all respects, it is not my purpose now to speak; suffice it to say that in a year one could scarcely recognize the Harvey of old, and I believe firmly that at no distant day the God-given wish of his boy heart will be fulfilled.

THE POLAR BEAR.

The Polar Bear is an animal of great strength and fierceness, and he seems to grow the stronger and fiercer the further north he dwells. His rich soft fur is of a yellowish-white color. He has a long flat head, a long neck, high legs, and a powerful body. It is curious to observe how admirably his feet are adapted to the conditions under which he lives. The sole is provided with a kind of thick fleece, so that he treads the rough ice as on a carpet; while, the toes being connected by a membrane or web, the feet serve as paddles when he takes to the water, which he frequently does.

He is not often found on the land. He loves to prowl about the floating ice-field, where he feeds upon the dead bodies of whales and seals, or attacks the latter on their emergence from the water. When he catches sight of a seal basking in the sunshine on a distant piece of ice, he quietly drops into the water and swims until to leeward of his intended victim, who otherwise would scent his approach, thence, by short but frequent dives, he silently continues his approach, and so arranges his distances that after the last dive he comes up at the spot where the seal is peacefully reclining. If the poor animal attempts to escape by rolling into the water, he finds himself in the bear's terrible grasp: if, on the contrary, he lies still, his enemy makes one powerful leap, kills him on the ice, and proceeds to devour him.

The Polar Bear, unlike other species, does not hibernate, as, its food being chiefly animal, it is able to obtain a supply of it at all seasons. The male is said to leave the land in winter, and go out on the ice to the edge of the water, where it hunts the seal. The females, or such of them at least as are about to produce young, bury themselves in the snow from November to March. Preparatory to going into winter quarters, the she-bear selects a hollow place, often at the foot of a bank or underneath overhanging rocks; and there allows the drifting snow to cover her over to a considerable depth. She is at this season very fat and on this fat she subsists for nearly five months, during which she sleeps in her bed of snow. The latter gradually enlarges around the bear, owing to the melting of the snow caused by the animal's warmth. When the spring sun begins to grow warm, the she-bear awakens, and her two cubs are born. These she suckles until, thin and emaciated with long fasting, she at length breaks through her icy prison-house. The Eskimos kill great numbers of the females in their holes during the winter, being greatly helped in this by their dogs, who scent them and then begin scratching at the snow overhead. As it would be unsafe to make too large an opening, a narrow trench is dug, just wide enough to let a man see where the creature's head lies. This being ascertained, the spear of the Eskimo is thrust into a mortal part, and the prize is then dug out. At this period, the young, having never tasted blood, are quite gentle and harmless, and can be taken out alive with the hand, although already nearly as large as a shepherd's dog.

The Polar Bear is a great sailor, and takes advantage of floating masses of ice to transport himself from one island to another. In this way he occasionally gets as far south as Iceland, where parties of bears have been known to land, as the old Norsemen used to do on the English coast, and do great damage by attacking and devouring the flocks until the inhabitants rose en masse and destroyed them. A recent traveller in Iceland states that in 1859 vast masses of polar ice were swept down on that coast, and that on this pack the Icelanders received an importation of no fewer than thirteen polar bears. Weak and emaciated, however, from want of food during their long sea voyage, they were easily despatched on landing. "One of these brutes," says the traveller, "made his entrance into a peasant's hut on the north-west coast in rather an unceremonious manner. The snow being on a level with the roof, Bruin found himself there in his travels in quest of food. Attracted, I imagine, by the redolent odor from within, he commenced scratching, and eventually went headlong through, scaring the whole family. The poor beast, however, scarcely less frightened, was speedily despatched and eaten, the fate of everything the natives can lay hands on during the winter months." The Polar Bear is also a great swimmer, Captain Sabine having observed one making its way between the north and south shores of Barrow Strait, which are forty miles apart.

The strength of the Polar Bear may be inferred from his size. He generally measures six feet in length, and about three feet in height to the top of the shoulder; but individuals of nine to ten feet are met with, He is not an unsociable animal, and usually wanders about in small troops, while bears of a family always "flock together." Parents and offspring are united by bonds of the most devoted affection, and the vigilant care with which the female watches over her cubs has been remarked by every traveller.—In the Polar Regions.
